TRYING TO WIN BY FRAUD.

EIGHT THOUSAND ILLEGALLY REGISTERED IN BROOKLYN.

▲ DELIBERATE SCHEME OF GIGANTIC PROPORTIONS FOR HEAPING UP TILDEN'S MAJORITY IN KINGS COUNTY—FIREMEN ARRESTED FOR ILLEGAL REGISTRATION—CIRCULAR OF MR. JOHN J. ALLEN TO HIS ASSISTANTS REGARDING THE VERIFICATION OF THE LISTS OF VOTERS.

Up to last evening the cases of false registration reported to Mr. John J. Allen, Chief Supervisor of Elections in Brooklyn, numbered 8,000. Fresh evidences of a deep-laid and gigantic scheme to carry Kings County for Tilden by such a majority as will enable him to overcome part of the Republican majority in the State, are brought to light every day. The work—and it is a work that occupies the time of those engaged in it almost day and night—is conducted on the part of the Federal authorities under the direction of Mr. John J. Allen, and on behalf of the Republican General Committee by Mr. David Williams and his assistants. Complaints are constantly coming in, and each one has to be patiently examined before action is taken. The devices adopted by those engaged in the work of false registration are so ingenious that it requires the most minute and careful examination to detect the fraud. In some instances, however, the tricks are very clumsy and easily detected. As illustrative of the latter class of cases the following may be taken: John Smith registers from No. 73 Van Brunt street, and a little further down on the list he will be found registering from No. 37 Van Brunt street, merely reversing the number. It is quite probable that a John Smith might be found living at both places, but in almost all of the cases of this kind investigated fraud has been discovered. The name, street, and number given above are not taken from any complaint, but merely given to illustrate a class of cases that frequently occur. Some satisfactory evidence was obtained yesterday which, it is believed, will lead to the detection of the men who are organizing the fraud in this County. It must take a very large sum of money to carry out the fraudulent registration and colonization schemes. Could the men who distribute this money be captured it would go a long way toward preventing illegal voting on election day. Within the past week the United States Marshals have discovered that many of the "thirty-day men" colonized by the Democrats in the odd wards have not even obtained a technical residence. Many of them merely engage board and seek to gain a residence by eating perhaps one or two meals a week at the boarding-house. This charge has been preferred against two firemen who were arrested yesterday, and warrants have been issued for a number of others connected with the same department. The men arrested yesterday were Charles Ruddy, attached to No. 7 Engine, and James Benson attached to No. 3 Engine. Ruddy it is alleged, lives at No. 17 Furman street, but registered from No. 226 Navy street, in the Fifth District of the Eleventh Ward, and Benson, who it is alleged lives at No. 76 President street, in the Sixth Ward, registered from No. 61 DeKalb avenue, which is situated in the Third district of the Eleventh Ward. Both men were held in $1,000 bail to appear for examination on the 21 of November. The following circular was issued yesterday morning by Supervisor Allen:

OFFICE OF THE CHIEF SUPERVISOR OF ELECTIONS, MONTAGUE STREET, CORNER OF CLINTON, BROOKLYN, Oct. 24, 1876.

To the United States Supervisors of Election and Special Deputy United States Marshals in the Eastern Judicial District of the State of New-York:

In addition to the special instructions given you individually from time to time relative to your duties, you are required to carefully observe the following general instructions respecting the verification of the registry list:

First—The right to vote of every person upon the lists is to be ascertained. Those persons known to be qualified voters and properly registered having been noted, you are required to verify the names of all others by personal investigation. In so doing the law directs you to make "proper inquiry and examination at the respective places by them assigned as their residences," and you will also consult all other available sources of information.

Second—Respecting every such person, you should be able to answer the following questions:

1. Does he really reside at the place from which he is registered, or is his connection with that place of a temporary, uncertain character?

2. Has he been now long, has he resided there, and has he resided there continuously since Oct. 7?

3. Will he, on election day, be twenty-one years of age?

4. Will he, on election day, have been 10 days a citizen of the United States, one year an inhabitant of this State, four months a resident of the county, thirty days a resident of the election district where he votes?

5. If of foreign birth, is he a citizen; when and where was he naturalized; had he previously declared his intentions; how long has he been in the United States; has he resided continuously in the United States for five years when naturalized was he properly admitted to citizenship?

You will also obtain all other information which may aid in determining the qualification of each person registered.

Third—Whenever any information is obtained which indicates irregularity or fraud, or which may be of service to this office in any way, you will note the name of the person from whom you receive the same, and all the particulars communicated to you, and report the same at once to this office, in writing, giving name, street, number, evidence obtained, names of witnesses, &c.

Fourth—You must observe perfect accuracy in making your reports, as you may be called upon to make oath respecting the matters referred to.

Fifth—The law makes it obligatory upon every one to correctly answer your inquiries.

The statute is as follows:

SEC. 5,523. Every person who, during the process of any verification of any list of the persons who may have registered or voted, which is had or made under any of the provisions of the title "The Elective Franchise," refuses to answer, or refrains from answering, or, answering, knowingly, gives false information in respect to any inquiry lawfully made, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than thirty days, or by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

Sixth—The law (sec. 5,522) also makes it an offense to obstruct, hinder or interfere with you when discharging your duties, and requires every person to aid you in the performance of your duties, when such assistance is necessary.

Seventh—In making your inquiries you should bear in mind that the propriety of such inquiry, or your right to make the same, may not always be understood by the person you are questioning; you are therefore particularly instructed to perform such duty in a courteous, gentlemanly manner, and to exercise patience as well as diligence and earnestness in your work. Offensive conduct on your part will not be excused.

Eighth—If the lists are intelligently and carefully verified, fraudulent registration or voting cannot well remain undiscovered; it, therefore, unlawful voting occur in your several districts, you will be regarded as responsible therefor.

Ninth—The following provision of law is of interest:

SEC. 5,521. If any person be appointed a Supervisor of Election or a Special Deputy Marshal under the provisions of title "The Elective Franchise," and has taken the oath of office as such Supervisor of Election or such Special Deputy Marshal, and thereafter neglects or refuses, without good and lawful excuse, to perform and discharge fully the duties, obligations, and requirements of such office until the expiration of the term for which he was appointed, he shall not only be subject to removal from office, with loss of all pay or emoluments, but shall be punished by imprisonment for not less than six months nor more than one year, or by a fine of not less than $200 and not more than $500, or by both fine and imprisonment, and shall pay the costs of prosecution.

It is presumed that your willingness to aid in a work in which every good citizen is interested, and your desire that the purity of the election shall be preserved, will render an enforcement of the provisions of this section unnecessary.

Your report of fraud, irregularity, &c., must be sent to this office promptly, as soon prepared.

Officers in Long Island City will as receive further instructions relating to that locality, through my Aid in that city. Respectfully,

JOHN J. ALLEN, Chief Supervisor of Elections.

THE VOICE OF A TRUE REPUBLICAN.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I notice by the New-York papers that there are well-grounded fears of great frauds being contemplated by the sham Democracy in New-York City, both in registration and in counting. Now, then, of what possible use is it for us in the country in all our expenditure of time and effort if we are to be swindled out of our majority by fraud in the City? I am an old man and earn my little by days' work, but I cannot bear to see our country ruined by being put in the hands of those who sought to destroy it. I had a son in the Army during our four years' struggle, and I feel more deeply than I can express. Let me suggest that you recommend that a committee of energetic young men be appointed to take a copy of the registry in each district and head off every fraudulent voter. Do not fail. We must not be cheated out of the vote of our State. I send my mite to help in frustrating the wicked designs of the old fraud S. J. T.

FAIR PLAY.

SYRACUSE, Monday, Oct. 23, 1876.

NOTE—The dollar inclosed in this note awaits the order of the sender. We do not imagine that a public subscription will be required to defeat young frauds in this City.

VERIFYING THE CITY REGISTRY.

THE WORK PROGRESSING UNDER CHIEF SUPERVISOR DAVENPORT—THE DEMAND FOR NATURALIZATION PAPERS.

The registration in thirteen Assembly districts of the City was verified yesterday by Chief Supervisor Davenport and his assistants in the same manner as that adopted in regard to the other districts. Similar evidences of frauds of proportionate extent were disclosed. The ratio of removals also remains the same as before noticed. The instances in the returns yesterday differ in no respect excepting in name and location from those given in THE TIMES yesterday. The work of weeding out persons who have registered fraudulently will be continued until the day of election. The verification of the lists of those who have registered during the first two days of registration will be completed to-day, and the lists of bogus persons naturalized will be arranged for use. Then will begin the work of verifying the registration lists of to-day and to-morrow, which will be done in a similar manner. On election day the United States Deputy Marshals and Supervisors will each have printed lists for use by them in detecting instances of fraudulent voting.

In the meantime the work of naturalization grows apace. About six hundred persons were admitted to citizenship yesterday. Of these, 230 were naturalized in the Court of Common Pleas and 307 in the Superior Court. Forty applicants were turned away from the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. An odd incident which occurred recently shows the manner in which the Tammany Hall politicians are doing the work of naturalization. A gentleman was walking down Centre street a few days ago, and when within a few doors of the head-quarters of the Tammany Naturalization Committee was saluted with a slap on the shoulder from behind. Turning round he saw a dirty-looking brute in a high degree of intoxication, who wanted to know whether the gentleman desired to have his papers. The drunken ruffian, on finding out that he was not understood, explained in a hoarse coughing way that he referred to naturalization papers. He offered to procure the papers for the gentleman, though he had never seen the latter until that time. His offer was declined, and the gentleman whom he had accosted turned around and saw the man go into the rooms of the Tammany Naturalization Committee, where he took his seat at a table and was evidently at home.

THE SUSPENDED INSURANCE COMPANY.

There were no new developments yesterday regarding the suspension of the Continental Life Insurance Company, except that the numerous clerks in the establishment had begun posting the books with a view of ascertaining the amount of the liabilities and assets. In business circles generally the failure of the Continental, a company which had enjoyed such a wide reputation, was commented upon with regret, and hopes were expressed that it would resume business at an early day. Mr. John J. Anderson, the Receiver appointed by Judge Pratt, was at the office No. 26 Nassau street during the entire day, and courteously received all inquirers. The work which he has to perform in order to make a report to the court, that of ascertaining the condition of the company, is one of such magnitude that it will necessarily take much time, and it is not expected that anything definite will be known for several weeks. It is his opinion that the policy-holders will suffer little or no loss, for it is to be expected, now that the suspension of the company has been announced, that a number of lapses in policies will ensue, and that, together with the cutting down of the expenses, will make a very material difference in the assets. Mr. J. P. Rogers, the Secretary, said to a reporter of THE TIMES that he had every reason to hope the company would resume. The Continental Life Insurance Company was a creditor of the suspended Loaners' Bank to the amount of $43,000.

A CORRECTION.

A careless line in the heading of the article in yesterday's TIMES describing the difficulties of the Continental Life Insurance Company, might have induced the reader to connect it in some manner with the Continental Fire Insurance Company. The latter institution is in no trouble whatever, and on the same solid basis it has always maintained.

A WALL STREET BROKER FOUND DROWNED

A dead body, which has since been identified as that of C. C. Holmes, well known in Wall street as a coffee broker, was found yesterday morning in the East River at the foot of North Fourth street, Williamsburg. The circumstances attending his death as yet are unexplained. Mr. Holmes occupied a prominent position with L. F. Mason, coffee broker, of No. 166 Pearl street, and was actively engaged in his duties during Wednesday. He left Wall street about 2 o'clock on the afternoon of that day, stating that he was going direct to his home in Williamsburg, where he had a wife and daughter, the latter in very poor health. It was his intention to send them to Florida for the Winter, on account of the latter's illness. Those who met Mr. Holmes on Wednesday state that he was in his usual cheerful condition, and are positive that there could have been no cause for suicide. There is evidence of a severe blow on the head, and this leads to the impression that he must have been attacked by thieves on his homeward trip. An inquest will be held by Coroner Nolan of Brooklyn. The deceased was about thirty-eight years of age, and during the years 1867 to 1870, was the junior partner of the firm of Edwards and Holmes of Wall street. After the dissolution of this firm, Mr. Holms went West, and from 1871 to 1873 was actively engaged in business there, returning in December last from San Francisco, when he connected himself with L. F. Mason as above stated.

THE BROCK MURDER TRIAL.

In the Brock murder trial in Newark yesterday, the two brothers and father of Charles Oschwald, and the hired girl were put on the stand by the defense to show that Oschwald passed the night at home and was there when the murder was committed. Frederick Oschwald testified that he went to bed on the night of the 24 of August at 12 o'clock, and his brother came to bed soon afterward. They had some conversation and went to sleep. Frederick woke up in the middle of the night, and his brother was still there. He arose at 5:30 and went into the kitchen, where he sat down to breakfast. His brother came down before he went away and was there when he left to go to work. Mr. Oschwald, Sr., and Joseph Oschwald corroborated the latter part of this testimony. The hired girl testified that she saw Charles Oschwald's shoes at the foot of the stairs as she was cleaning up in the morning. The cross-examination of these witnesses was very severe, but their testimony was not shaken in the least. It conflicts point-blank with the evidence of the two most important witnesses for the defense, Fussell and the colored woman. The trial continues to excite much interest, and the court-room is crowded every day. The case will, in all probability, be given to the jury on Saturday.

SALE OF RARE AND VALUABLE PICTURES.

The sale of the paintings which were recently on exhibition at Leavitt's Art Rooms, and to the general excellence of which reference has already been made in these columns, was begun last evening at the Leavitt's Sales-rooms in Clinton place. The rooms were crowded, but the bidding was not brisk, and many of the pictures were withdrawn. These, however, will again be offered for sale to-night with the balance of the collection. Following is a correct list of the paintings sold last evening, with their value, upset prices, and prices obtained:

H. P. Koekkoek, "Landscape near Utrecht," value, $250; upset price, $100; price obtained, $150; "Landscape near Rotterdam," $250, $100, $140; "The Dancing Lesson," Paul Seignac, $300, $160, $240; "Weary of Waiting," Antonio Casanora, $400, $200, $225; "The Toilet," Bruneri, $650, $385, $415; Ladislas Bakalowicz's "Henry III. of France and Court—a Hawking Expedition," $2,500, $1,400, $1,405; Pallik Bellas' "Hungarian Shepherdess," $1,250, $650, $651; Jules Jaques Rougeron's "Reverie," $600, $430, $440; Leon Richet's "Landscape," (Haute Loire,) $300, $196, $191; Jules E. Laintin's "The Mendicant, New-York," $800, $450, $460; Ignacio De Leon y Escosura's "The Rude Parret," $2,500, $1,250, $1,251; Henri Burger's "The First Music Lesson," $350, $175, $185; J. Caroius' "Grandmamma's Birthday," $750, $450, $451; F. R. Unterberger's "The Dolomite Sexton," $450, $250. 251; Joseph Coomans' "Pompeian Lady at her Toilet," $750, $525, $526; Bakalowicz's' "L'Amazone," $200, $125, $135; Escosura's "The Bridal Presents," $3,000 $1,750, $1,756; Jean Louis E. LOCAL POLITICAL NEWS.

REPUBLICAN CONVENTIONS.

MR. HAMLIN BABCOCK NOMINATED FOR CONGRESS—MR. FREDERICK W. SEWARD FOR STATE SENATOR.

The Republican Convention of the Tenth Congressional District was held last night at No. 230 Third avenue, and, amid much enthusiasm, nominated Mr. Hamlin Babcock to represent the district in the House of Representatives. Abram S. Hewitt is John Kelly's nominee. Mr. Babcock is a well-known lawyer. He is very wealthy, and has always been a public-spirited citizen. He was born in Maine about forty-five years ago, and is understood to be a relative of Senator Hamlin. From the formation of the Republican Party Mr. Babcock has been a member of it, and has always taken part in political affairs, though never with the desire to advance his own interests. He has held but one political post. In 1859 he was elected a Councilman from the Seventh District, and in 1862 was re-elected. He discharged the duties of his office satisfactorily, and made a record that contrasted very remarkably with the records of his Democratic associates.

Frederick W. Seward was nominated for State Senator, to take the place of James W. Booth, deceased, last evening, by the Republicans of the Fifth Senatorial District, the convention being held in the Bleecker Building immediately after the adjournment of the Ninth Assembly District Convention, which nominated Mr. Corsa for the Assembly.

Mr. Seward, as is well known, is a son of the late Hon. William H. Seward. He was Assistant Secretary of State of the United States under his father, during both of Mr. Lincoln's Presidential terms, and was very severely wounded by the assassin Payne at the time the attempt was made upon the life of the Secretary in his residence on Seventeenth street, at Washington. After leaving the State Department, he returned to his home at Auburn, and engaged with Mr. Thurlow Weed in writing the recollections of his [Mr. Weed's] life, and contributed to the Galaxy and Atlantic Magazines during the years 1870, 1871, and 1872. He also accompanied his father on his trip around the world, and edited his book called Travels Around the World. After his father's death the younger Seward came to New-York and has since resided in this City. Two years ago he accepted the nomination as Assemblyman from the Seventh Assembly District, and carried the district by nearly 600 majority, at the same time that Tilden carried it for Governor over Dix by about 300 majority. Last year Mr. Seward ran against Bigelow for Secretary of State, and, although defeated, he ran ahead of the ticket 8,000. He is now about forty-two years of age. He graduated at Union College, subsequently studied law, and is now writing a series of articles for magazines. A committee of four was appointed by the convention last evening to wait upon Mr. Seward and tender him the nomination.

The Republicans of the Sixth Congressional District met in convention at No. 167 Clinton street last evening, for the purpose of nominating a candidate for Congress. No nomination was made, however, the only business transacted being the appointment of a conference committee to consult with any other organization that may wish to confer with the Republicans in the matter of a nomination, and to bring forward the name of some person best suited for such candidacy. The convention adjourned to meet again at No. 72 Norfolk street on Monday evening next at 8 o'clock.

The Eleventh Congressional Convention met at Brevoort Hall, East Fifty-fourth street, last evening, but made no nomination. On motion of Alderman Billings, a committee of one from each Assembly district represented was appointed as a Nominating Committee, to report to the convention on Monday at 9 P. M.

ASSEMBLY NOMINATIONS.

Assembly Conventions were held last night by the Republicans, but nominations were only made in the following districts:

Seventh—Dr. Isaac L. Hayes.
Ninth—William H. Corsa.
Twelfth—Herman Wolf.
Thirteenth—Robert H. Strahan.
Fifteenth—James Turner.
Seventeenth—William T. Graff.

Dr. Hayes, Mr. Strahan, and Mr. Graff are members of the present Assembly. Mr. Corsa, nominated in the Ninth District, is a young man of rare ability and unblemished character. He went into the Army at the breaking out of the rebellion as a private, and came home after the battle of Winchester, where he was severely wounded, a full Major in the One Hundred and Thirty-first New-York State Volunteers. He was a pupil at Public School No. 35, in Thirteenth street, corner Sixth avenue, and is now thirty-three years of age.

THE INDEPENDENT REPUBLICANS.

A County Convention of the Independent Republicans was held last night at Science Hall. Samuel N. Lecomte was elected Chairman, and James G. Murray Secretary. A committee of twenty-one, that is, one delegate from each Assembly District, was appointed to confer with other political organizations for the purpose of nominating candidates. Resolutions were adopted censuring Mr. Ellwood W. Thorne for publishing a card which did injustice to the aims and objects of the Association. Dr. Moorehead, of the 16th Assembly District, moved that Andrew H. Green be nominated for Mayor. The motion was referred to the Conference Committee. The Convention adjourned to meet next Thursday at 9 P. M.

THE REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION COMMITTEE.

The Committee on Nominations appointed by the Republican County Convention met last evening in the rooms of the Thirteenth District Association, on Fourth avenue, near Thirty-first street, at 9:30 o'clock, and were in session three hours without coming to any more definite conclusion.

OPPOSITION TO TAMMANY HALL.

CONFERENCE OF THE VARIOUS SUB-COMMITTEES OF THE BODIES OPPOSED TO JOHN KELLY'S TICKET—NO DEFINITE ACTION YET TAKEN.

Yesterday morning at 11 o'clock the Sub-Committees of the Anti-Tammany, Independent Citizens', and German-American Independent Organizations, met at the Astor House to take further action relative to forming a combination County ticket against Tammany Hall. Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, Justice Henry Murray, ex-Sheriff O'Brien, Col. Michael C. Murphy, and John Purcell, represented Anti-Tammany; Col. Rush C. Hawkins, Jackson S. Schultz, William H. Webb, Henry Clausen, William V. Smith, Charles H. Swan, L. M. Doscher, and John D. Crimmins, the Independent Citizens; and Oswald Ottendorfer, Justice Marcus Ottersourg, Coroner Moritz Ellinger, Prof. Theodore F. Glaubensklee, and Edward Tamsen, the German-American Independent organizations. Mr. Clausen presided. It had been supposed when the subcommittees adjourned on Wednesday afternoon to meet yesterday that the Republican County Convention would, on Wednesday evening, appoint a committee to meet the sub-committees yesterday morning, and confer with them at the Astor House, but as the Republican Committee was not so instructed the subcommittees could do nothing more yesterday morning than canvass the situation and speculate as to the probabilities of a conference yet being had with the Republicans. The representatives of the the Independent Citizen's Party, which originally placed Mr. Green as nomination for Mayor, expressed a strong inclination to go ahead and place an Anti-Tammany ticket in the field at once, without waiting any longer for the Republicans to act, but the Anti-Tammany and German-American Independent subcommittees were not prepared to act so suddenly, even if they had the power, which they said they had not, so it was resolved to adjourn until 11 o'clock this morning, the subcommittee to report in the meantime to the main committees which had appointed them. While the meeting was in session a Greenback committee, headed by W. A. A. Carsey, asked a conference, claiming that their organization had 20,000 voters in this City, and requested that, in case a combination ticket was formed, a platform should be adopted favoring the employment of the men out of work this Winter on the public works at fair wages, and that the working and business classes have the representation on this ticket to which they were entitled. Action on the communication is to be taken this morning.

At 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon the Anti-Tammany Conference Committee met at the office of George H. Purser, No. 82 Nassau street, to hear the report of its subcommittee and take action thereon. Hon. Ira Shafer presided. Mr. Hart, the Chairman of the sub-committee, reported what had taken place at the Astor House, expressed himself as doubtful about any combination being formed with the Republicans, and asked that the subcommittee be discharged, saying that he had gone as far as was consistent with his sense of what was due to Anti-Tammany in his efforts to effect a coalition that would prevent the election of John Kelly's disgraceful ticket, and he desired to be relieved from any further action or responsibility in the matter. The subcommittee was discharged, and the Chair was authorized to appoint a new subcommittee to confer, with the Republicans and ascertain definitely whether they desired to enter into an alliance on a County ticket in opposition to that of Tammany Hall. The meeting then adjourned until ten o'clock this morning. Late yesterday afternoon Mr. Shafer appointed the new committee as follows, retaining Mr. Hart, who will probably serve: Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, George H. Purser, William P. Mitchell, Peter Bowe, and John Rogge. Mr. Shafer will also act as one of the committee.

The German American Independent Main Committee met at Schmerger's Hall, No. 200 Third avenue, at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and had a long discussion as to whether, if the Republicans failed to unite with them and Anti-Tammany, they should unite with Anti-Tammany on a ticket of their own. Finally, the subcommittee was given full power to act with the Republicans and other Anti-Tammany organizations on a combined ticket, and, in the event of a failure of the Republicans to join the movement to report to the County Convention, which will meet in Beethoven Hall this evening, to take official action then as to what course they will pursue in placing a ticket immediately in the field.

The Independent Citizens' subcommittee held no session after the adjournment at the Astor House, the understanding being that they would again attend the conference at the Astor House this morning, and, in the event of no combination being formed, proceed forthwith to place a ticket in the field.

HOME POLITICAL WORK.

Ex-Gov. John A. Dix will address the Republicans of Jersey City this (Friday) evening at the Catholic Institute Building.

To-day, Friday, is the third day for registration in this City. Republicans who have not already registered should not fail to do so to-day.

The Hayes and Wheeler Club, of Fairview, N. J., met on Wednesday evening. Speeches were made by Capt. Hale, of New-York; C. I. Blauveit and C. T. Williamson, of New-Jersey.

A vote was taken a few days since on board the steam-boat C. Vibbard, on the trip from this City to Albany and confined strictly to those qualified to vote. The count resulted in 247 for Hayes and 112 for Tilden.

The Boys in Blue of the Twentieth Assembly District Republican Club, and the citizens of the district, will parade to-morrow evening, under the marshalship of Jacob Hess. The line will form at Third avenue and Sixty-second street, at 7:30 P. M.

At a meeting of the Seventh Assembly District Independent Republican Association it was resolved that a committee of two from each election district be appointed to personally attend to the registry of Republican voters to-day and to-morrow, and see that a full and fair registry is made.

The Young Men's Centennial Republican Club of the Twentieth Assembly District will hold a mass-meeting this evening at the up-town Assembly Rooms, at Fifty-fifth street and Third avenue. Among the speakers announced are Senator H. W. L. Hoyt, of Connecticut; Hons. W. A. Darling, A. J. Diusenhoeffer, George Opdyke, Jacob Hess, Salem H. Wales, and others.

Controller Green was waited on yesterday by a delegation of the Young Men's Republican Association, of the Twenty-first Assembly District, to tender him a resolution adopted at a meeting held at their head-quarters, No. 1,574 Third avenue, on Wednesday evening last, unanimously nominating him for Mayor. Peter M. Broderick is Chairman, and John Sheridan Secretary of the association.

A large meeting of the Fifth Assembly District German-American Republican Association was held last evening at No. 130 Prince street. Many new members were enrolled and a company of Boys in Blue organized, with J. H. Miller, Captain; Jacob Roth, First Lieutenant; Anthony Schneider, Second Lieutenant; E. A. Kheve, Orderly Sergeant. All the members of the latter are veterans of the Army.

An informal meeting of influential German residents of the Eighth Congressional District was held last evening at Delmonico's, Fifth avenue and Twenty-sixth street, at which Prof. Leiber presided. It was agreed upon to present to the Congressional Convention, which assembles this evening, an address setting forth the desire of the German American citizens of the district to support in the coming Congressional election Hon. Marshal O. Roberts as the candidate of all earnest and well-meaning citizens.

The Republicans of Caldwell Township, in Essex County, N. J., are thoroughly aroused to the importance of the pending election. At the last local election they carried the township and are now determined to retain it. They have organized a Glee Club in Caldwell and another at Fairfield. They have three uniformed torchlight clubs, one of which, at Verona, under Samuel Crane, as Captain, is a cavalry company, of upward of fifty members. They hold from two to three meetings every week in different parts of the township.

The Republicans of Mount Vernon, Westchester County, had a grand torchlight procession on Thursday evening last, under the auspices of the Young Men's Hayes and Wheeler Club of that place. Nearly eight hundred persons, with torches, were in line, including 100 colored men from Yonkers and New-Rochelle, all in uniform. Speeches were made by Hon. W. W. Goodrich and Hon. A. H. Farrar, and great enthusiasm prevailed. During the march of the procession fireworks were let off, and many houses were illuminated. The Republicans have made a thorough canvass of the town, and though the Democrats had a majority of over three hundred last year, the Republicans are confident of largely reducing these figures this year, if they do not succeed in carrying the town.

HON. GEORGE W. CURTIS AT YONKERS

ELOQUENT SPEECH ON THE ISSUES OF THE CAMPAIGN—TORCH-LIGHT PROCESSION OF THE BOYS IN BLUE.

Fully two thousand persons assembled in Washburn Hall, Yonkers, last evening to listen to an address on the political issues of the canvass by Hon. George William Curtis. Previous to the meeting a grand torch-light procession of the Boys in Blue of Yonkers, in which the following organizations participated, took place: Second Ward Hayes and Wheeler Club, the Central Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club, the Colored Boys in Blue, and the Nodine Hill Hayes and Wheeler Association. About seven hundred men were in line, and as the procession passed through the city the streets were lined with people, who at several points applauded loudly. The meeting, which was attended by a large number of ladies was presided, over by Prof. Henry M. Baird, who in a brief speech introduced the orator of the evening. Mr. Curtis devoted his address to an able résumé of the career of the Democratic Party while in power, and contrasted its administration with that of the Republican Party, which had corrected abuses in government and carried the country successfully through a war originated by the Democrats. In relation to the cry of the "bloody shirt" he said that he recognized the "bloody shirt" as the beautiful flag of the Union which was riddled by rebel bullets, and which was the standard of equality and justice. The real issue of the campaign, he said, was the settlement of the question whether or not the people were willing to entrust the Government to the Democratic Party, knowing its disreputable history, its spirit, and its tendencies. The speaker was several times interrupted by the enthusiastic applause of the audience, and the meeting adjourned at a late hour with hearty cheers for Hayes and Wheeler.

GREENBACK CONGRESSIONAL NOMINEES.

The greenback leaders in this City announced a few days since that they would complete their Congressional nominations this evening, but they have deferred action in some of the districts on account of being undetermined whether to make straight nominations or endorse those of the Democratic or Republican Parties. In the Fifth District Col. James E. Kerrigan has been nominated. Kerrigan is an old Democrat, and there are two other Democrats running in the same district—Nicholas Muller, Kelly's nominee, and Col. Michael C. Murphy, the Anti-Tammany candidates. In the Seventh District in which there are two Democratic nominees, Coroner Anthony Eickhoff being "Kelly's man," and William B. Maclay the Anti-Tammany candidate. Mr. Wallace F. Groom is the Greenback nominee. In the Ninth District, in which Fernando Wood is the Tamany candidate, Col. George W. da Cunhau, the Republican nominee, who is universally popular in the District is endorsed by the Greenbackers who dislike "Fernando." In the Eleventh District, Mr. Wm. S Worl is the Greenback nominee. In the Sixth, Eighth and Tenth Districts, no Greenback nominations have been made.

SOUTH ORANGE, N. J., FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

The Republicans of South Orange, N. J., held a mass-meeting on Wednesday evening. The Hayes and Wheeler Club, mounted and on foot, paraded the streets with brass bands and torches. At the outskirts of the town they were met by the Boys in Blue from Irvington, whom they escorted to the hall, followed by a crowd of citizens. The greatest enthusiasm prevailed. The leading citizens were out in full force, and many ladies were present. The meeting was addressed by Hon. B. W. Throckmorton, of Jersey City, in a speech of over one hour's duration. This gentleman was followed by Prof. John M. Langston, of Washington, D. C., who made an eloquent address on the issues of the day. South Orange has been noted as a Democratic stronghold, and it is, therefore, cheering to hear on every hand that the Republicans will next month carry the town by a handsome majority.

THE YELLOW FEVER.

SAVANNAH, Oct. 26.—The total number of interments to-day was three. One was a yellow fever case, one an infant which died elsewhere and was brought here for burial, and the other was a negro. No deaths from any cause occurred. No frost has yet appeared.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

To-day, Friday, is the third day for registration in this city. Republicans who have not already registered, should not fail to do so to-day.

The Board of Aldermen will meet this afternoon to dispose of a number of general orders which have been on the calendar for some months.

Joseph Vail, aged forty-two, of No. 357 Broome street, died suddenly last evening on the sidewalk at the corner of Canal and Hudson streets.

Controller Green signed warrants yesterday on various accounts amounting in the aggregate to $363,616 25 and transmitted the same to the Mayor for his countersignature.

Cardinal McCloskey filed a deed in the Register's Office yesterday, conveying to the Church of St. Andrew three lots at the corner of City Hall place and Duane street.

The Board of Apportionment continued their examination of the estimates for 1877 in Executive Session yesterday, and the work will probably occupy their attention for several days.

Smith Ely, Jr., the Tammany candidate for Mayor, was in the City Hall Park yesterday. The canvass, so far, does not appear to have benefited his health, which has never been very robust.

A car load of hay while on a side track at Central Morrisania, yesterday morning, took fire from sparks from a passing locomotive. The hay, valued at $75, was consumed, and the car was damaged to the extent of $50.

Tax-payers and consumers of Croton water should take notice that an additional penalty of ten per cent. will be added on all regular water rents remaining unpaid on the 1st day of November, and that by paying their water rent before that day they will avoid the penalty.

The monthly return of the New-York City Mission and Tract Society for October exhibit the following figures: 33 City missionaries; 4,238 visits; 465 meetings; 26 temperance pledges; 4,683 tracts distributed; 159 families aided, &c. Receipts for the month, $2,860 98; payments, $2,701 98; debt remaining, $12, 183 05.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher delivered his second lecture at Chickering Hall last evening, the subject being "The Hard Times." The hall was anything but crowded. The lecturer interspersed his discourse with many sarcastic and humorous hits, and literally "brought down the house" by an apt application (unacknowledged) of one of Sydney Smith's finest strokes of wit.

BROOKLYN.

There were 181 deaths in this city last week, being an increase of twenty-two over the week previous.

To-day, Friday, is the third day for registration in New-York City. Republicans who have not already registered in New-York should not fail to do so to-day.

William Kelly, aged sixteen years, and residing in Greenpoint, was held to bail yesterday in the sum of $1,000 for trial on a charge of sending an indecent postal card through the mail.

The trial of John Hurley, James Whelan, and James E. Burke, indicted for the killing of Officer Scott in July last, will be begun to-day in the Court of Sessions before Judge Moore and Associate Justices Woltert and McKibben.

The old Board of Trustees of the Fleet Street African Methodist Church, headed by Mr. Thomas H. Wilson, has begun an action against Charles Kemp and others, claiming to be the new Board of Trustees of the church, to recover damages in the sum of $500.

Mr. N. McGregor Steele, a member of "Boss" McLaughlin's Democratic General Committee of Kings County, yesterday tendered his resignation as a member of the committee to Mr. S. T. Freeman, President of that body, as he considered that he could not longer remain a member of a body which was governed in a despotic manner.

Ten members only of the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen aswered to their names, yesterday, when the board convened for the trial of William A. Fowler, on the charges preferred against him by Mayor Schroeder; whereupon, on motion of Alderman Fisher, of the Twenty-third Ward, the trial was postponed until Thursday, Nov. 9, at 2 o'clock P. M.

On the 11th inst. Mr. Patrick Stines, of Macspeth, Long Island, came to Brooklyn and called upon his brother-in-law, Dr. Gilligan, No. 134 Fourth place. In the early part of the afternoon the two men parted at the corner of Court and Amity streets, where Mr. Stines took the Crosstown car for Hunter's Point. Since that time nothing was heard of him until his dead body was found yesterday morning in the water at the foot of Forty-ninth street, South Brooklyn. There was a wound on the top of the head, which leads the Police to think there might have been foul play, hence a thorough investigation will be made.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

The laying of the corner-stone of the monument on Chatterton Hill, White Plains, commemorative of the Battle of White Plains, will take place to-morrow. An address will be delivered by Hon. Clarkson N. Potter at 2 P. M., and the corner-stone will be laid at 3 P. M. by Major Gen. James W. Husted, Grand Master of the State of New-York, with full masonic ceremonies.

LONG ISLAND.

Michael Trainer, of Locust Valley, Long Island, a brakeman on the Long Island Railroad, was struck by a bridge at St. Johnland, on the Port Jefferson branch, yesterday, and instantly killed.

NEW-JERSEY.

Officer Dickinson, colored, who was one of the Theilhorn victims, has recovered from his injuries sufficiently to do light duties.

The Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers has offered a reward of $5,000 for the detection of the parties who misplaced the switch at Erona, and thereby caused the dreadful accident which occurred there Tuesday night.

Bernard Mackin, 27 years of age, employed on a scow on the Hackensack River, fell into the river yesterday afternoon, and was drowned before he could be extricated. The scow lay at the Pennsylvania Railroad Bridge, West End, Jersey City.

Recorder Brown, of Union Hill, at the last meeting of the Common Council tendered his resignation as Chief of Police, on account of the censure he had received from the Council for neglect of duty. His resignation was not accepted, but was laid over for one week.

United States Commissioner Muirheid states, in reference to a statement published in one of the morning papers, that he has discovered no frauds in the registry in Jersey City, and anticipates none. He is making a careful revision of the registry, and will see that no names are registered fraudulently.

Leonard Baum, a well-known resident of Jersey City, died Wednesday night in the eighty-sixth year of his age. Mr. Baum was a veteran of the war of 1812, and held the rank of Major in the Army. His funeral will take place at noon on Saturday from the First Baptist Church in Grove street.

Thomas Williams and Patrick Cannon, two longshoremen, became involved in a dispute on the public dock, Jersey City, yesterday afternoon, and had a desperate fight. Cannon knocked Williams senseless to the dock and then beat him in a most brutal manner. He was arrested and committed for trial.

Nothing definite was done at the meeting of the Jersey City school teachers and the Board of Education Wednesday night. The teachers were not fully represented, but those who were present were opposed to volunteering their services. Another meeting is to be held, and unless the teachers then decide to give their services gratuitously from the 11th of November until the last of December the schools will be closed during that time.

THE CENTENNIAL LOAN EXHIBITION.

One of the most æsthetic products of the great Centennial of American Independence is the loan exhibition at the National Academy of Design, corner of Twenty-third street and Fourth avenue. So far, thousands have inspected the magnificent works which are there displayed, but for the benefit of the other thousands who have not yet visited the galleries, it is well to state that the exhibition will close on the night of Friday, Nov. 10. The collection is taken from the private galleries of prominent New-York citizens, whose wealth is the parent of culture and refinement, and who are, therefore, not apt to have indifferent works among their art treasures. Indeed these people are not of that class of art patrons whom Gilbert satirizes in his charming comedy "Pygmalion and Galatea," and the value of the collection may be understood by the fact that the insurance on the works now being exhibited at the Academy of Design amounts to over a million of dollars.

TILDEN'S INCOME FRAUD.

ACTION OF THE GOVERNMENT OFFICERS.

THE $50,000 FEE FROM A RAILROAD COMPANY, IN 1869, WHEN TILDEN PAID TAX ON $17,000 INCOME—THE REVENUE OFFICERS REFUSED ACCESS TO THE BOOKS BY A BOARD OF DIRECTORS OF WHICH HE IS A MEMBER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—The following letter, giving a detailed report of the action of United States District Attorney Bliss, in relation to the charges made against Samuel J. Tilden of failing to make a truthful and correct return of income subject to taxation under the internal revenue laws, was received at the Treasury Department yesterday:

NEW-YORK, Oct. 25, 1876.

Hon. Green B. Raum, Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

SIR: It is proper that I should report to you some recent occurrences in the course of the preparation I have been making to carry out your instructions to commence an action against Samuel J. Tilden to recover unpaid income tax. I learned, with great detail, and in a manner that satisfies me, of the substantial accuracy of the information, that on or about the year 1869, $50,000 were paid to Mr. Tilden by the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad Company, or on its behalf, and that the entry of that payment appeared upon the books of that company, and is substantiated by Mr. Tilden's voucher, which was among the papers of that company. As Mr. Tilden, for the year 1869, paid a tax upon only $17,000, I thought it at once essential and just to verify the information. I, therefore, requested a Revenue Agent to go to Pittsburg and procure access to the books and papers of the company, never for one moment doubting that the officers of a great corporation would gladly render all the assistance in their power to the Government. On arriving at Pittsburg the revenue agent learned that since the publication of the allegations as to Mr. Tilden's income tax, the books and papers of the company had been more directly transferred to the control of an officer of the company who is a strong political friend of Mr. Tilden. That gentlemen peremptorily refused to permit access to the books and papers, and referred me to the President of the company, Mr. T. H. Meyer, of this city.

I should add that before leaving Pittsburg the revenue agent obtained additional proof of the substantial accuracy of my information, with evidence that the payment was made to Mr. Tilden at a time when the subordinates of the company were suffering for the want of their just dues. Acting upon the reference to Mr. Meyer, I on Oct. 5 addressed him a letter, requesting tha the would give instructions to allow the books to be examined, and in reply he promptly informed me that he had referred the matter to the Directors, who were summoned to meet on the 12th. On the 7th Mr. Meyer wrote me to know under what authority of law I claimed the right to examine the books of the company. On the 10th I replied that, while I believed there was sufficient authority in the law to compel the production of the information desired, I had not intended to place the matter upon that footing, but only upon the footing of a request to the officers of a great corporation to aid the Government in its efforts to recover taxes of which it had been deprived, by giving it information which could not prejudice them nor indeed any one except the person, if any, who had escaped the payment of his just dues. Though the Directors' meeting was called for the 12th, I received no reply until after a renewed application on my part. Mr. Meyer, on the 23d, sent me a letter declining to give the information, and placing himself and the company upon his and their legal rights, as they claim to believe them to be. That letter is as follows:

NO. 21 NASSAU ST., NEW-YORK, Oct. 3, 1876.

George Bliss, United States District Attorney:

SIR: Your note of 21st was brought in to me by your messenger this day only. In reply to your inquiry, I beg leave to say that I am advised by counsel that the Commissioner of the Internal Revenue has no executive right to examine into the Fort Wayne books for the purpose indicated in your letter of the 5th of October. Your own subsequent letter to me of the 10th of October, in reply to mine asking for reference to an authorizing statute, confirms me in that view. Being so advised, and so understanding your letter of the 10th of October, you will understand that I cannot act on a different opinion of the law. To do so would be a bad precedent for any company. What the law requires clearly I shall certainly do; but if any uncertainty arises, I shall take advice and, of course, be governed by it. In giving this reply, I beg leave to add that no disrespect is meant to you or any of the Government officers. If you consider you have the right and mean to enforce it, I can only meet it by appeal to the courts. But, of course, what is done will be done on somebody's responsibility, and that somebody will, I think, be held to account.

Yours, very respectfully, T. H. MEYER,
President pro tem. Pittsburg, Fort Wayne, and Chicago Railroad Company.

It is, of course, clear that at the proper time the Government can and will compel the production of the information desired. The refusal is only of importance because it comes from a Board of Directors of whom Mr. Tilden is one. The mere fact of refusal seems to me to confirm the truth of the information I had received. It can hardly be believed that if the books and vouchers did not confirm the statements, there would have been any hesitation in allowing access to them.

I may further add that I find that for the same year, 1869, Mr. Tilden rendered services for which he charged and received $16,000 from the Union Pacific Railroad Company. This is in addition to $9,000 charged the same company for services in 1868, 1869, and 1870, and which were paid to and receipted for by Mr. Tilden. There is, besides, $2,500 paid on March 27, 1868, by the same company, which is receipted for "on account of professional services;" the receipt being signed, "Samuel J. Tilden, per James P. Sinnott." But I presume there is no doubt of Mr. Sinnott's authority to act for Mr. Tilden. Mr. Tilden's account to the Union Pacific Railroad Company shows that he, at the time covered by these charges, rendered considerable services to the somewhat notorious Credit Mobilier, such as advising with reference to bills in equity prepared in its behalf; drawing a contract between the Credit Mobilier and Oakes Ames and others; consulting as to the suit of McComb against the Credit Mobilier, which suit led to the disclosure of the operations of that concern—all of which services may have been covered by the charge against the Union Pacific Railroad Company, though I have information which leads me to the opinion that Mr. Tilden also received considerable sum from the Credit Mobilier.

I have gathered a good deal of information as to charges for services made by Mr. Tilden, and payments made to him for services to other corporations and persons, during the period covered by the income tax. They all go to show that he escaped taxation on every large amount of income.

I am still pursuing my examination, for though there is abundant ground for the immediate commencement of an action, it seems to me that there are reasons why delay is advisable, especially as a brief delay now will not postpone the final trial of the cause, while it gives opportunity for a more careful and accurate preparation. Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS, United States Attorney.

TILDEN'S SHARE IN THE CREDIT MOBILIER SWINDLE.

HE APPEARS AS THE CONFIDENTIAL ADVISER OF OAKES AMES, JOHN B. ALLEY, AND THE OTHER RINGLEADERS—A FEE OF $25,000 PAID HIM—AN EXACT REPRODUCTION OF MR. TILDEN'S BILL, WITH MEMORANDA SHOWING THE NATURE OF HIS "SERVICES."

The TIMES has more than once alluded to the fee of $25,000 received by Mr. Tilden from the Union Pacific Railroad for services in connection with the Credit Mobilier affair. We are now able to furnish our readers a correct transcript of Mr. Tilden's bill to the company, with accompanying memoranda concerning the nature of his services. From this, it will be seen that Mr. Tilden's part in that "crowning scandal" was by no means an unimportant one, and that with the exception, perhaps, of Oakes Ames himself, no one was deeper or more active in the councils of the Credit Mobilier conspirators than the present "Reform" candidate for the Presidency. The original receipted bill was in Mr. Tilden's own handwriting.

The Union Pacific Railroad Company.

To S. J. Tilden, Dr.

For professional services during the year 1867, as per memorandum	$5,000
Year 1868	1,500
Total	$25,000

Received payment in full as against the said company, and as against all Directors and other parties interested in or connected with the litigations up to Jan. 1, 1871.

MEMORANDUM RELATING TO MR. TILDEN'S PROFESSIONAL SERVICES TO UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD CO.

May 21.—1. The first suit was one against the Union Pacific Railroad Company by Thomas C. Durant. Mr. Tilden, after having repeatedly declined to be retained, at last on a fresh application consented to act, if Judge William F. Allen should be associated with him. An injunction which had been granted was set aside by the active agency of Judge Allen, but an order to show cause with a stay was afterward got, the hearing of which was from time to time postponed.

August.—2. There were many consultations at Mr. Tilden's office in regard to these relations of the Union Pacific and of Credit Mobilier. Two complaints against Durant and in behalf of the Credit Mobilier were prepared by Judge Allen, but negotiations were from time to time going on.

September.—3. Mr. Tilden was consulted and advised on the question of the amount which a party claiming the right to subscribe for stock should pay, and several consultations on that subject were held arising out of the attempted subscription by Thomas C. Durant, James Fisk, Jr., and others; and finally the papers in two actions were drawn up by Judge Allen, and there were frequent consultations, including one prolonged to a late hour in the night.

Oct. 1.—4. Mr. Tilden was retained in two suits commenced to restrain voting on stock without paying in the full amount subscribed for. Mr. Tilden advised and obtained an injunction in each case. Mr. Tilden was present till a late hour at a consultation at the Fifth Avenue Hotel, and advised as to the whole course of proceedings at the election about to take place.

Oct. 2.—5. Mr. Tilden was present all day at the stockholders' meeting, and advised and directed all the proceedings in conference with Judge Allen. Gen. Butler was also present, and acted as teller.

6. Two counter-suits were commenced in the interest of the Durant party, and injunctions served, which Mr. Tilden and Judge Allen went to Judge McCunn and had modified. During Mr. Tilden's temporary absence a settlement of the Durant controversy was had, and as a consequence the four suits were then dropped. The basis of this settlement was a compromise board and a contract, in the preparation of which Mr. Tilden participated, viz.:

Contract between Oakes Ames, Thomas C. Durant, John B. Alley, and others, and the Credit Mobilier of America, which is dated Oct. 15, 1867. Mr. Tilden received a retainer in the election case, but nothing else for any service during the year.

Mr. Tilden was often consulted during the year, and had frequent interviews with Mr. McMurtie, of Philadelphia, and Mr. Tracy, in respect to pending controversies, especially the suit of McComb, the answer in which he revised, and a quo warranto case in the State of Pennsylvania.

1869.

March 2.—Retained in the matter of the contracts for the construction of the road. Consultations had at Mr. Tilden's office and at Mr. Tilden's house, in respect thereto. These occupied much of the time till the 9th.

March 10.—Retained in Fisk vs. The Union Pacific Railroad Company, and others, in New-York Supreme Court.

March 10.—Annual election of Directors on the charter day. Injunction of Judge Barnard, dated be 9th, and prohibiting such election, served while the proceedings were incomplete. Mr. Tilden attending, during the day, at the company's office, and in the evening engaged with other counsel in preparing affidavits.

March 11.—Attending in court, and in reference to bail of Directors, who had been arrested, and consulting in regard to the alleged contempt.

March 12.—Engaged all day about various affairs of the company. Attending at company's office during the day, and at his house in conference with Mr. Ames, Mr. Alley, and Mr. Duff till a late hour.

March 12.—Supplemental complaint filed and an injunction against company, the Directors and other persons named, and an order to show cause on the first Monday of April why a Receiver should not be appointed of the property and assets of the Credit Mobilier, &c.

March 13.—Having returned from Pittsburg, he became actively engaged in the new litigation. He had taken the papers with him to examine, and advised that the suit could not be removed to the Federal court on the ground of the citizenship of the defendant, on which the motion pending from July, 1868, appeared to have been dealt with; that the principle of such cases was not applicable to this company, which was a corporation of the United States; but that a removal could be effectually claimed on the ground that the case arose under a law of the United States, and that such a removal would carry with it all the defendants. He further advised that the removal be made by filing the requisite papers in the Circuit Court of the United States, without waiting for the consent or order of the State court, and that thereupon all proceedings in the State court would be void.

March 10.—The contempt cases before Judge Barnard:

The People of the State of New-York ex rel. James Fisk, Jr., against Sidney Dillon and Oliver Ames.

Same against Thomas C. Durant, Cornelius S. Bushnell, John Duff, John B. Alley, John F. Tracy, Oakes Ames.

March 15.—Order appointing Referee to examine Durant, Dillon, and Ham.

March 18.—But before that time a further order was granted; on the 18th appointed Wm. M. Tweed, Jr., such Receiver, and the receivership was extended to all bonds of the United States or of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, in possession or control of the Union Pacific Railroad Company or any of its agents, or thereafter to come into such possession or control, and all proceeds of such bonds which had been disposed of.

March 18.—Same day order granted that a writ of assistance issue to put the Receiver in possession, &c.

March 23.—Second supplemental complaint filed and further injunction.

March 30.—Order continuing injunction till trial and judgment; Referee appointed; and company and Credit Mobilier restrained from parting with or interfering with, &c., any papers or money, &c.; that Receiver take possession of all such property; that all corporations and persons within this State deliver, &c.; that Receiver be authorized to receive from United States bonds so fast as they become due, authorizing and directing Receiver to force open sales of the company, &c.

THE PROCEEDINGS IN THE UNITED STATES COURTS IN THE FISK CASE.

March 25.—Act: mandamus from Judge Blatchford; papers prepared on which it was founded.

March 27.—Attended before Judge on return of order; discussion ensued; case went off on ground that the order had been that day complied with.

March 29.—Case on its merits brought up on a motion for a stay and a cross-motion; preliminary discussion. The main argument set down for 3:30 in the afternoon.

March 30.—Argument by Clarence Seward and E. W. Stoughton.

April 1.—Argument by D. D. Field.

April 1.—Argument by Mr. Tilden in full.

April 1.—Suit for trespass commenced by company against Fisk by service of summons.

April 6.—Attendance before Judge Blatchford on his rendering his decision, and afterward on the settlement of his order.

April 22.—Attendance on reargument of main question before Judges Nelson and Blatchford. Opened by Mr. Clarence Seward and by Mr. E. W. Stoughton.

April 27.—Retained in William M. Tweed, Jr., Receiver of, &c., Union Pacific Railroad Company, against John F. Tracy and Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad Company.

April 29.—Retained in Charles N. Pollard against Union Pacific Railroad Company and others.

Removal of above suit from New-York Supreme Court to Circuit Court of United States for Southern District of New-York.

May 5.—Attending and making the closing argument before Judges Nelson and Blatchford in the case of Fisk against Union Pacific Railroad Company and others.

There were various incidental services during the year in the pending suits, and in relation to others proposed to be brought.

WHAT MR. TILDEN'S PRESENT SUPPORTERS THOUGHT OF IT FOUR YEARS AGO.

The first notice of the Credit Mobilier frauds appeared in the Sun of June 12, 1871, under the caption of "The King of Frauds." On the 5th of September following, the same paper, in commenting editorially on certain matter appearing in its news columns, said:

"The revelations contained in the sworn testimony accompanying this need no explanatory introduction. It is the most damaging exhibition of official and private villainy and corruption ever laid bare to the gaze of the world."

A still more vigorous denunciation of Mr. Tilden's valued clients followed in the Sun of Oct. 9, 1871, under an equally startling heading. A few sample paragraphs are as follows:

"The success which attended the conspiracy of the Credit Mobilier Ring against the Treasury of the United States has served as a great stimulus to rascality, and is a direct encouragement to public plunderers of all descriptions. Since its consummation the efforts of speculative rings to secure the control of the representatives of the people, in both State and National Legislatures, have increased in effrontery and pertinacity with each succeeding year.

* * * * * * * *

The Credit Mobilier exposures show that corruption has extended far deeper into our political system than was generally supposed, and that the Administration Party is utterly untrustworthy.

* * * * * * * *

It remains for the people to decide by their votes whether the traffic in legislators shall be encouraged or rebuked, and whether honesty or dishonesty is to be deemed the best qualification for office."

TILDEN SPEAKS AGAIN—BY PROXY.

SOME VERY REMARKABLE ASSERTIONS FROM CHAIRMAN HEWITT—MR. TILDEN A COMPARATIVELY POOR MAN FROM 1863 TO 1872—HIS MILLIONS ALL ACQUIRED SINCE THAT PERIOD.

The following correspondence explains itself. In regard to one of Mr. Hewitt's assertions that the New-York Iron Mine "was a continuous source of expense and not of revenue" to Mr. Tilden up to 1872, and that then it only became profitable on account of "a great rise in the price of iron," THE TIMES is prepared to show that Mr. Hewitt's statements contain just as much of truth, and no more, than his celebrated announcement on the floor of Congress that Mr. Tilden contributed money to the raising and equipment of the Tammany Volunteer Regiment in the Spring of 1861. Mr. Hewitt has several times, during the present canvass, drawn upon his imagination for his facts, and his present letter is no exception to the general rule:

A REQUEST FOR INFORMATION.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I inclose a letter received a short time since from Hon. A. S. Hewitt, in response to an inquiry from me as to the truth or falsity of the charges which have been made regarding the payment of the legal and proper income tax by Gov. Tilden. Should you desire to make any use of the letter you are at liberty to do so, if you will be kind enough to suppress my name, as I should exceedingly dislike publicity. * * *

NEW-YORK, Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1876.

MR. HEWITT'S REPLY.

NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC COMMITTEE, EVERETT HOUSE, UNION SQUARE, AND NO. 39 LIBERTY ST., NEW-YORK, Oct. 9, 1876.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your letter of the 7th, I beg leave to say that I have examined the statements of income made by Gov. Tilden in 1862 and 1863, and aside from my faith in any statement he might make, verified by affidavit or not, I am fully persuaded that he returned to the Assessor the entire income for which he was legally liable in those two years.

As to the years between 1863 and 1871, I have never made any examination, and I have no other knowledge of the matter than this, that the law provided that the Assessor should arbitrarily fix the amount and exact a penalty of fifty per cent. where no return was made.

Now, in the first place, as the tax was simply a matter of statutory obligation, it is quite certain, however, that Gov. Tilden did all that the law required when he allowed the Assessor to have his own way.

Further than this, I know that he was quite ready to answer any questions which the Assessor might put, and directed his clerk to furnish whatever information he might desire, in order to arrive at the proper result.

How far the Assessor availed of this privilege I do not know, but in his explanation of his not having made a return I ought to say that between 1863 and 1870 it was exceedingly difficult for any man to determine at the end of the year whether he had made or lost money, because of the enormous fluctuations in value due to the rapid rise and fall in the price of gold.

Personally I made my returns according to the best of my judgment, but I always found before the close of the succeeding year that I had been mistaken as to estimated profits, and I am quite sure that my conscience would not have given any trouble if I had left the Assessor make his own figures, as Gov. Tilden did.

To this I can only add that Gov. Tilden himself thinks that the amount assessed by the Assessor was in reality a larger sum than, as events showed, he ought legally to have paid.

It is proper to add further, that many of the investments of Gov. Tilden were on hand prior to the imposition of the income tax, and did not become productive, or largely so, until after its abolition. For example, one of the items relied upon by THE NEW-YORK TIMES, is the New-York Iron Mines. Now, I happen to know that Mr. Tilden had the loss of that mine in 1864, and that it was a continued source of expense and not of revenue to him until 1872, when, owing to a great rise in the price of iron, it paid a very large dividend, but none of this dividend was taxable in 1871.

I also know that he has never had any dividend whatever, from its inception until the present date, from the Iron Cliffs Company, of which I, myself, am a stockholder, and, therefore, know the facts.

The truth is, the public have greatly exaggerated the amount of his fortune, and THE TIMES has perverted not merely the facts in regard to it, but the dates very often that his profits were made.

Finally, let me say that I have known Gov. Tilden for thirty years, and that I have never known a man on whose mere word I would place more implicit reliance than on his, and I am quite sure that in any case left to his honor, his instinct would lead him to decide rather against than in favor of his own interest. Truly yours,

ABRAM S. HEWITT.

TILDEN'S IRON MINE.

HIS ANNUAL RECEIPTS FROM A SINGLE SOURCE COMPARED WITH HIS ENTIRE INCOME RETURNS—A STARTLING EXHIBIT.

In 1835 Mr. Tilden, who was then extensively interested in the Chicago and Northwestern Railway, organized the New-York Iron Mining Company for the purpose of working what was known as the old Harlow mine, situated in Negaunee, Mich., a short distance from the terminus of the Peninsula Division of the Chicago and North-western Railway. The company consisted of Tilden himself, who owned three-quarters of the stock, and James P. Sunott and John Rankin, both clerks in Tilden's law office, and whose names were added to the concern for the purpose of completing the company's organization. The mine was worked under a twenty years' lease from the original owner, an early settler, and at the time when Tilden & Co. took hold of it the lease had seventeen years yet to run. A royalty of twenty-five cents per ton was paid to the owner, and the rest of the profits went into the capacious pockets of "Sammy" and his friends. Soon after the organization of the new company the mine developed unexpected resources, and by 1863 the amount of the net profit to the lessees was more than four times the amount of the royalty paid to Mr. Harlow. But the production did not stop here. By 1870 the annual product had increased to nearly a hundred thousand tons, on which Tilden's profit alone, after deducting all expenses, including royalty, could not have been less than $120,000. That the reader may fully understand what Mr. Tilden's income from this one item was during the past half dozen years, and the amount of consequent swindling that he practiced on the Government, the total production of the mine, together with his share of the profits, are given below under their appropriate heading. The figures of the annual production of the mine are taken from A. P. Swineford's "Review of the Mineral Resources of Lake Superior." Swineford, it may be remarked in passing, is the present Democratic Mayor of Marquette, Mich.

Year.	Tons of Ore Mined.	Profit per Ton.	Tilden's Share of Net Profit at 75 per Cent.	Tilden's Reported Income.
1866	33,761	2 00	50,641 50	14,000
1867	43,302	1 87	60,731 05	16,000
1868	45,665	1 75	59,935 31	14,384
1869	67,968	1 50	76,150 25	17,000

The income tax ceased in 1872, but the mine continued to pay well, its average annual product for the years 1872, 1873, 1874, and 1875 being over seventy-one thousand tons. The profit which the company made in each year from 1865 to 1872 is estimated in the above table at somewhat less than the net profit accruing to mines of the same character in the vicinity of the New-York Mine, after deducting the twenty-five cents per ton royalty paid by Tilden & Co. to the original owners.

The result leaves no escape from the conclusion that Mr. Tilden during a series of years deliberately withheld from the Government from three to six times his lawful tax in this single item of his income—leaving out of sight altogether his known receipts from other sources. That this pleasant system of swindling renders it "comparatively easy" for Mr. Tilden to pay his insignificant taxes admits of no more doubt than that two and two make four. Its effect was to add to the taxes of his more honorable fellow-citizens the precise amount out of which he cheated the Government, and at the same time to aid in the accumulation of those "bar'ls of money" which are now being used to carry the country in the interests of "Honesty and Reform."

TILDEN'S TRESSPASING HERESIES.

THE UNITED STATES NOT A NATIONAL GOVERNMENT—HOW THE SHAM REFORMER HOPES TO OBTAIN SOUTHERN SUPPORT—A SOCIAL DISCUSSION AT SARATOGA SPRINGS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, October 27.—The following correspondence between ex-Governor Underwood, of Vermont, and Hon. John M. Forbes, of this city, has been furnished for publication. Its importance will be recognized, as exposing Tilden's views about Union soldiers, during the late war, being liable to an action for trespass at common law:

BOSTON, Oct. 23, 1876.

Hon. Levi Underwood:

MY DEAR SIR: I have seen it reported in the papers from a letter or speech of yours that Gov. Tilden had insisted, in conversation with you during the rebellion, that as the war was unconstitutional every act in carrying it on was illegal; every soldier marching into or occupying the Southern States was a trespasser. May I ask you to inform me precisely what occurred between you and Mr. Tilden, and whether such opinions were really expressed by Gov. Tilden, and oblige, yours truly,

J. M. FORBES.

BURLINGTON, Oct., 25, 1876.

Hon. J. M. Forbes, Boston:

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your favor of the 23d inst. During the Summer of 1864, at Saratoga Springs, I had a social discussion with Hon. S. J. Tilden, in which he claimed that the Government of the United States was a confederacy of States and not a national government. He took the same ground as the Governors of Virginia and Kentucky did in 1861, in that the United States Government had no right to march an army across a State against its consent to prevent a State from seceding, and that such act would be illegal, and no soldier could justify such act if sued for trespass. I contended that this was a National Government and not a confederacy, and that the States as such did not form the Government of the United States, and hence there could be no secession, and the attempt was rebellion. I understood Mr. Tilden's views in this respect to be the same as those of Calhoun, A. H. Stephens, Wade Hampton, Hill, and others of the Southern Democracy; otherwise, how can he expect the solid support of the South. Mr. Tilden reproached me for my ignorance of the common law for claiming that soldiers who marched in obedience to orders were not liable in trespass for so doing. I did not say to him, as is published, "Don't talk such treason to me." I did say, "Don't talk such nonsence." Our discussion was quite protracted, and I only state the substance and drift of it. I am not aware that his views ex ressed to me are logically different from those of his Kent letter. The Democratic Party of New-York took the ground in 1871 that the United States had no constitutional power to build a gun-boat canal around Niagara Falls in the State of New-York without the consent of that State, even if it possessed the power to do it at all, which, of course, makes the United States subordinate to the State. I am truly yours,

LEVI UNDERWOOD.

INTERNATIONAL COURTESIES.

ACCREDITED MINISTERS TO THE UNITED STATES — THE REPRESENTATIVES OF PERU AND COLOMBIA PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—Col. Manuel Freyre, who has returned to this country in the character of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary of Peru, to-day presented his letter of credence to the President with the following remarks:

"SIR: I have the honor to place in the hands of your Excellency the autograph letter of the President of Peru, in which he accredits me anew with the character of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary near the Government of the United States of America. The motives were very grave and insuperable which forced him to leave vacant the legation which during seven years I had filled, but as soon as they disappeared he hastened to replace me in the position, where I might continue to cultivate the relations of friendship and good-will that so happily exists between the two countries. I, myself, in preference to any other position, accept for the second time this charge, feeling confident that the well known sentiments of your Excellency toward Peru will assure the success of my mission, and that should your Excellency deign to receive me with your accustomed benevolence I shall be able to contribute in some measure to the realization of the high purposes which my Government proposes. At the same time permit me to present to your Excellency the autograph communication of the General Don Mariano Ygnacio Prado, in which he states that, having been called to the Presidency of the Republic by the free suffrages of the citizens of Peru, he was proclaimed by the National Congress and took possession of the supreme authority on the 21 day of last August."

To which the President replied as follows:

COLONEL: I am happy again to receive you in the character in which you recently represented your Government, especially as your present mission may in a measure, at least, be due to the consciousness on the part of the President of Peru that you were entirely acceptable on the former occasion. I am sure that your course will contribute to strengthen the amicable relations which I hope may always be maintained between our two Republics. For this you may rely on my cordial co-operation.

Dr. Santiago Perez also presented his credentials to the President as Minister Resident of the United States of Colombia to this country, upon which occasion he made the following remarks: "Mr. President: The document which I place in your hands accredits me as representative of Colombia in the United States, and the cordiality which has ever been maintained between the two countries leads me to hope that in the discharge of my trust the relations between them will continue to be as good as their reciprocal interest requires that they should be. Already, on a previous occasion, I have enjoyed the hospitalities of this great republic, and the treatment which its enlightened Government extends to the representatives of other nations. It is natural, therefore, for me to expect that you will now continue to bestow upon me your confidence and good will.

To which the President replied as follows:

MR. PEREZ: I receive with pleasure the letter from the President of the United States of Colombia which accredits you to this Government as the Minister Resident of that republic. In selecting for that trust a gentleman so distinguished by honors at home, which are confessedly due to high personal character and eminent abilities, the President of Colombia has given a proof of his discernment for the interests of his own country and regard for the dignity of the United States. It is not to be doubted that your mission will contribute to strengthen those friendly relations between the two Governments, which I heartily wish may always remain unimpaired.

THE GRAIN AND COTTON TRADE.

THE ENGLISH FARMERS BUSY, AND WHEAT ADVANCED—FLOUR LOWER—THE LIVERPOOL COTTON BROKERS' CIRCULAR.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 27.—A leading grain circular issued to-day in its review of the past week says: "The weather has been dry, and farmers are busy in the fields; hence there has been a considerable decrease in the supplies of British wheat and an advance in value, in many cases of a shilling per quarter. Foreign, on the contrary, has tended rather downward, as millers, having purchased freely last week, are for the moment out of the market. Business since Tuesday has been quiet and of a retail character, but importers are indisposed to press sales, and values remain nominally unaltered. Maize has been slow, the sales rather favoring buyers. There was a limited attendance at the market to-day, and transactions in wheat were of the smallest compass, but there was no pressure to sell. A reduction of a penny per cental was conceded in a few instances. Flour was very dull and easier. Corn was in moderate demand at a decline of 3d.

The circular of the Liverpool Cotton Brokers' Association, in its review of the week ending last night, says: "Cotton has been in unusually extensive demand from the trade throughout the week, but considering the extent of business only a very slight advance was established. American has been in very large demand, and prices have advanced 1-16d. to 3d. for medium and lower grades. Sea Island has been in limited demand, but prices were firm. In futures the transactions were large, and prices are about 3d. higher.

MISSIONARY LABORERS.

FITCHBURG, Oct. 27.—The American Missionary Association closed its sessions this evening. The meetings were the most successful ever held in point of numbers and work accomplished. The present debt was reported at $100,000. Satisfactory reports were made of missionary work in various fields. The "peace policy" of President Grant toward the Indians was commended.

THE REVIVALS OF MESSRS. MOODY AND SANKEY.

CHICAGO, Oct. 27.—The first month of the Moody revival meetings closed to-night with a large congregation and full inquiry rooms. Mr. Moody expressed himself as much pleased with the progress of, and interest in the meetings. Applications for workers of revival meetings all over the Northwest are coming in more rapidly than they can be filled, and the reports from the revivalists already sent out show increasing successes. Rev. Dr. Armitage, of New-York, who was a prominent worker in the revivals there, is here for a few days. The principal railroads are changing the running time of the outgoing evening trains, to accommodate country visitors to the Tabernacle.

GOV. HAYES AT PHILADELPHIA.

HIS VISIT TO THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION—THE ENTHUSIASTIC GREETINGS TENDERED THE NEXT PRESIDENT—A MODEST GENTLEMAN'S WISHES RESPECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 27.—Gov. Hayes said he came to see the Exhibition, and his tour through the grounds and buildings to-day showed that he meant what he said, as he always does. Accompanied by a few friends he started out betimes, having carefully prepared beforehand a programme for the day written on a slip of paper convenient for reference. He immediately proceeded not to carry it out, the same as everybody else does under like circumstances. The buildings and places marked down for early visiting were seen last, the last were first. Places that were not down at all were carefully inspected, while some few on the list were not seen at all, but there were not many of these. He visited all the State buildings, dropped in at the Vermont celebration, lingered in Memorial Hall, inspected Machinery Hall, went through the Main Building, and concluded a hard day's work with a visit to the Spanish Building. At 1 o'clock he took lunch at the American Restaurant with Gen. Hawley. A little party of friends and acquaintances sat down to the table, Hon. Morton McMichael, Director General Goshorn, Mr. J. P. Veree, Gen. Merrill, and Col. Weir being of the number. Refreshment was the business of the hour, and the only thing attended to. Gov. Hayes desired to make his visit as quietly as possible, but it was not easy to escape recognition, and as every recognition was instantly followed by the gathering of an enthusiastic crowd, he was kept on the move rather lively all day. Whenever the party entered a State building, they were, as usual, requested to register. The Governor would write his name with the others and this at once led to his identification. "It's Gov. Hayes;" "There's Hayes," &c., was instantly heard around the rooms. A rush toward him, a frantic effort to shake hands on the part of the more enthusiastic, some cheering by those who were further off, was the immediate and invariable consequence. And so, too, was the precipitate flight of the Governor, who, three times flew to the refuge of the steam-cars, where he rode around the grounds till rested or was driven off by a fresh recognition. There was no doubt about the feeling of the people. It was spontaneous and hearty to a degree. There has been no visitor to the Centennial whose visit could compare in point of the enthusiasm it created with that of Gov. Hayes. Only his persistent determination to avoid it prevented his tour to-day from being turned into a sort of triumphal progress. During the evening he remained in his rooms at the hotel, receiving only a few friends and acquaintances. He leaves for the West on an early train in the morning.

BY MAIL AND TELEGRAPH.

There was quite a fall of snow in Jamestown, N. Y., last evening.

Mr. Sloan will be re-elected from the First District by an increased majority, and George M. Case and D. W. C. Peck, who have been nominated from the Second and Third Districts, are both sure of good majorities. The member of Congress from this district—comprising the Counties of Oswego and Madison—will also be Republican as heretofore, Hon. William H. Baker, the present member, having been renominated, and being so sure of election that the Democrats have not yet been able to find a man to run against him. The County Committee here, of which Mr. H. C. Howe is Chairman, have made arrangements for three or four mass meetings in this city before election day, and in the country towns they have had meetings every night for weeks past. All indications point to a full vote next Tuesday week, and this means a majority of 3,000 and upward for the Republican ticket.

STATE REPUBLICAN RALLIES.

SPEECH BY GEN. SCHURZ AT RONDOUT—AN ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING OF GERMANS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RONDOUT, Oct. 27.—Gen. Carl Schurz addressed a large meeting in this place last night with most excellent results. The meeting was exclusively for the Germans, and was managed by them. After dining with Hon. Thomas Cornell, Gen. Schurz proceeded to Washington Hall, which was packed until even standing room was exhausted, with an audience representing the best German population of the place. He was received by a special committee and introduced by Mr. Fred. Stephan, a leading German here, and the nominee for Assembly in the First District of Ulster County. The stage was crowded with prominent men of the General's nationality. Gen. Schurz spoke for nearly two hours and a half, and held his entire audience to the last moment, being greeted with enthusiastic applause at each effective passage of his speech. He presented the financial question in a very strong light, and his arguments were warmly approved. The Southern claims received his attention, and he was also very effective in convincing many of his wavering fellow countrymen who want a change of government that the only way to secure a change for the better is elect Hayes and Wheeler, and Morgan.

After the meeting, Gen. Schurz was escorted by a committee of Germans on board the steamer W. B. Crane, and taken to Tivoli to catch the midnight express for Rochester. His speech has done great good, and has no doubt produced the strongest impression of any speech made in this region. This county is a stronghold of Democracy of late years, but their majority of last year will certainly be largely reduced.

A GREAT MEETING AT ELMIRA—THE CANVASS IN CHEMUNG COUNTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ELMIRA, Oct. 27.—The largest demonstration ever seen in the county occurred to-night. A procession, composed exclusively of Republican voters of this county, paraded the streets, two thousand in number. Before the parade was concluded, Gov. Noyes commenced speaking in the wigwam, it being crowded. He dissected Tilden as a secession sympathiser and a pretended reformer. He referred to the desperate dernier resort of Tilden in writing the letter promising to veto any war claim bills that the Democratic Congress may enact, and showing his audience the impending peril that exists should the Democracy prevail. Gov. Noyes went into the record of the last Congress minutely, and demonstrated to the satisfaction of every listener that it accomplished nothing whatever in the interests of the people. He alluded to the defrauding of the revenue tax by Tilden, and asked his Democratic fellow-citizens whether there was any difference between a revenue thief and a whisky thief? He paid a great compliment to the Democratic loyal men who were in the war for the Union, and asked his hearers whether the present Democratic Party would recognize them as loyal Democrats or rebels? Gov. Noyes wpand up with a splendid peroration, and an eloquent reference to Gov. Hayes as a patriot and citizen. He fairly enthralled the large audience. The meeting on the outside was an exceedingly enthusiastic one. The Boys in Blue who could not get near the Wigwam listened to the eloquent effort of Major J. C. F. Beyland, who recalled to them the days of 1856, 1860, 1864, and 1868, when the life of the nation hung on a thread. The Major went into a searching comparison of the two parties, and wound up with a great effort in behalf of the success of Hayes and Morgan. The effect of this gathering has decided the result in this county.

HON. CARL SCHURZ AT ROCHESTER—A LARGE GERMAN MEETING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ROCHESTER, Oct. 27.—Over two thousand Germans assembled to-night to hear Carl Schurz's masterly argument, delivered in his native tongue, showing why they should vote for Hayes and Wheeler. The meeting was preceded by a large torch-light procession, pyrotechnics, and other displays. The Germans here greatly admire Mr. Schurz, and the present meeting was called without regard to party. Unusual enthusiasm was excited, and it is confidently expected that the able speech will have a great influence on our German citizens, who are very numerous. A considerable number of colored men attended in a body.

COUNTY MASS-MEETING AT LOWVILLE—SPEECH BY GEN. THEODORE B. GATES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LOWVILLE, Oct. 27.—Our county mass-meeting, held here to-day, was a triumph and a success. Nearly 2,000 persons were in the procession. Gen. Kilpatrick failed to be with us on account of illness, but Gen. Theodore B. Gates addressed the assembled thousands in a masterly effort for two hours. Buildings are illuminated, and a grand torch-light procession is now parading our streets. Our people are wide awake, and intend that Lewis County shall give a good majority on election day.

A LARGE MEETING AT BINGHAMTON—A GATHERING WHICH DEMOCRATS TRIED TO MAKE A FAILURE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BINGHAMTON, Oct. 27.—We have just closed one of the most successful meetings of the campaign, which was addressed by Hon. A. W. Tenney and Joseph J. Bartlett. There were about two thousand people in attendance. Although the Democrats had a torchlight procession parading the streets at the same time, they were unable to draw the people away from our meeting. They stood for nearly three hours and listened to the eloquence of Tenney and the arguments of Gen. Bartlett.

REPUBLICAN RALLY AT OSWEGO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OSWEGO, Oct. 27.—The Republicans of this city had a monster meeting, this evening, which was addressed by Senator Rogers, of Buffalo, and Major Z. K. Pangborn, of New-Jersey. Three thousand people were in attendance and the addresses were received with intense enthusiasm. Morris Place, Esq., presided. Previous to the opening of the meeting there was a grand torch-light procession, consisting of Boys in Blue and ward clubs. The streets were crowded with people, who came out to witness and cheer the display.

A VIGOROUS RALLY AT BATH.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BATH, Oct. 27.—Gen. Sheridan spoke here to-night to a large and enthusiastic meeting. We are wide awake and safe for a rousing Republican majority.

ENDEAVORING TO RETAIN THEIR TRADE.

CHARLESTON, Oct. 27.—Sixty Northern merchants resident and doing business, held a meeting to-night, and adopted an address to the people of the United States, declaring Gov. Chamberlain's proclamation unwarranted by the real condition of the State, and fully indorsing the recent statement issued by the clergy and bankers of Charleston.

LOCAL POLITICS.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE CONFERENCE COMMITTEES YESTERDAY—ANTI-TAMMANY BREAKS OFF NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE REPUBLICANS.

The meetings of the conference committees in furtherance of a combination against Tammany Hall were resumed yesterday. The Anti-Tammany Conference Committee met at 10 o'clock in the morning at the office of George H. Purser, No. 82 Nassau street, and continued in session until 11:30. Complaint having been made that the sub-committee appointed on Thursday did not fairly represent the Senatorial districts, and that it should be recast so as to give one representative for each Senatorial district, this was done by allowing each district to name its representative, and a new subcommittee was formed, composed of Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, George H. Purser, William P. Mitchell, John H. Ford, and James Hayes. Messrs. Ford and Hayes succeeding Peter Bowe and John Rogge, members of the subcommittee appointed on Thursday. Hon. Ira Shafer, Chairman of the Conference Committee, was added as a member of the subcommittee. This subcommittee was authorized to confer with the Committee on Nominations, appointed by the Republican County Convention.

At 11:30 o'clock the new subcommittee went to the Astor House, and conferred with the subcommittees of the Independent Citizens' and the German Independent organizations, Mr. Henry Clausen presided. While these subcommittees were in session, a request was sent in to them by the Greenback Conference Committee, asking for an answer to the application made by the Greenback Committee on Thursday for a participation in the conference, but no definite action was taken on the request. The Independent Citizens' subcommittee evinced a disposition to go ahead and make out a ticket, but the Anti-Tammany and German Independent subcommittees were disposed to hold off and await further developments in reference to a possible affiliation with the Republicans. The Anti-Tammany sub committee desired further time to consult with their Union Committee, and at 12:45 o'clock a recess was taken until 3 o'clock.

At 1 o'clock the Anti-Tamany Conference Committee reassembled in Mr. Purser's office, and had a long consultation, at the conclusion of which it was stated that informal communications had been received to the effect that the Republicans would probably soon confer with Anti-Tammany in reference to the forming of a coalition. The Conference Committee then adjourned to meet at 8 o'clock in the evening at Irving Hall.

At 3 o'clock the Sub-committees reconvened at the Astor House, and had a brief and very harmonious session, at which it was agreed to meet again at the Astor House at 11 o'clock this morning, at which time the members of the Sub-committees said they had reason to believe that a conference committee from the Republicans would be present to consult with them, but that it was their intention, if the Republicans took no action in the meantime looking to a coalition, proceed at once this morning to prepare a ticket representing the Anti-Tammany, Independent Citizens' and German Independent organizations.

The Anti-Tammany Conference Committee met at 8 o'clock last evening in Irving Hall, Mr. Shafer in the chair.

Mr. Hart, Chairman of the Sub-committee, reported that he had had a conference with Collector Arthur yesterday, and that Mr. Arthur had said that he did not believe that the Republicans would affiliate with Anti-Tammany if the latter organization insisted on the nomination of Mr. Green for Mayor and Mr. O'Brien for Sheriff, but that there might be some aspect of a combination if these nominations were not insisted upon.

Mr. Shafer expressed the opinion that the report was in reference to an entirely unofficial statement made by Mr. Arthur, who had simply given his personal views, and that such a statement was not one upon which they could act. If Mr. Arthur, on behalf of his committee, had sent a written communication embodying such a statement, it would be of an official character, and entitled to weight. But the statement of Mr. Arthur, even verbal and unofficial as it it was, was a direct insult to the Anti-Tammany Party. It assumed as a fact that the Anti-Tammany organization had already considered Messrs. Green and O'Brien as their candidates, and was a menace or threat to them in reference their choice of nominees.

Mr. George H. Purser offered the following resolution, which was adopted:

Whereas, Mr. Hart, from the Sub-committee of Anti-Tammany, having reported to this committee a conference with Mr. Arthur, Chairman of the Republican Nominating Sub-committee, to the effect that Mr. Arthur had no authority to confer with this organization,

Resolved, That the report be accepted, and no further negotiations be had with said Republican sub-committee.

Mr. O'Brien said that they would now go to work and call their County Convention, and put such a strong ticket in the field that it would be impossible to beat it.

The County Convention is to be called for next Monday evening at 8 o'clock.

The committee then adjourned to meet at noon to-day at No. 82 Nassau street. The sub-committee will, as previously determined upon, meet the Independent Citizens' and the German-American Independent Sub-committees at the Astor House at 11 o'clock this morning.

Mr. O'Brien was questioned after the adjournment of the meeting in reference to the probable results of the committee's action, but declined to say anything for the present. The German-American Independent Conference Committee met last evening in Beetnoven Hall, and gave its sub-committee full power to act with other Anti-Tammany organizations in making up a County ticket.

THE DEMOCRACY AT COOPER UNION.

SIXTH WEEKLY FAILURE TO AROUSE ENTHUSIASM FOR THE DOUBLE-HEADED TICKET—SPEECHES BY DANIEL DOUGHERTY, OF PHILADELPHIA, AND GEN. BRADLEY T. JOHNSON, OF VIRGINIA.

The sixth weekly "grand mass-meeting" at Cooper Institute, last evening, under the auspices of the Central Tilden and Hendricks Club, was not an improvement on the previous meetings of this series. John McKeon presided, and in a few preparatory remarks, introduced Hon. Daniel Dougherty, of Philadelphia, as the first speaker. Mr. Dougherty spoke over an hour, and during that time did not evolve a single new idea, but contented himself with the hackneyed glorification of Tilden, and the recital of the well-worn boasts which daily emanate from the Liberty street Bureau. "The United States marched into Louisiana," said he, "like Praetorius' troops into ancient Rome." This paved the way to an attack on President Grant, who, from a meritorious army officer, had commenced with a good administration, and had steadily degenerated into a mere figure-head Only one motive characterized the "leaders in the administration party, who controlled the South, namely, plunder." The franks committed by the Whisky Ring would have paid the whole United States debt. Gov. Hayes was next arraigned. His principal crime, according to the speaker, was that he had "only made one speech in all his Congressional career." His vote had been cast for the granting of a "very empire in the West to railway corporations." As the speaker finished, about one-half of the audience left the hall, the noise being drowned by the music of a not very harmonious band. Gen. Bradley T. Johnson, of Virginia, was the next speaker. He is a chivalric Southron, of fiery mien, and an ex-Confederate officer, who last Winter took unto himself the questionable honor of cowhiding a political opponent—a gentleman of Republican principles, who had criticized the General's career. Johnson's speech was delivered in the characteristic tone of the Southern "fire-eater." The burden of his remarks was a denial of the charge that the people of the South ever expected to present claims for damages sustained at the hands of the Union Army during the war. "When the skies fall we shall catch larks," said he, "and just about that time we shall press the Southern claims." With a burst of patriotism, he exclaimed: "Do you suppose we would stand by and see claims put forth for the loss of paltry property when we have lost fathers, sons, and brothers in the struggle?" This melodramatic effort "brought down the house," and the speaker proceeded to a definition of the law on the point of the Southern claims. The present generation of Southerners, he claimed, knew nothing of the feeling which existed in the breasts of their forefathers. What they wanted was enduring peace. They looked into the future and regarded not the past. After paying tribute to Wade Hampton, whom he said he was proud "to call friend," and whom he honored "as a specimen of a patriot and brave man such as the world never before saw," he concluded by comparing the treatment of the Bulgarians with the outrages committed by Northern carpet-baggers on peaceable South Carolina. The band played "Dixie," after which the Chairman congratulated the audience upon its privilege of having listened to two such "great men and able orators," and declared the meeting sojourned.

MR. GREEN FOR MAYOR.

A large number of the residents of the Twelfth Ward held a meeting last evening at Grubey Hall, corner of One Hundredth street and Ninth avenue, to organize a Citizens' Reform Association for the purpose of supporting Mr. Green for the Mayoralty. The chair was occupied by Mr. J. D. Tracey. Mr. Charles Dodd acted as Secretary. Speeches were made by Judge Flanders and Hon. Roswell D. Hatch in support of Mr. Green, and resolutions passed pledging him their support.

A number of delegates representing eighteen different working men's Independent Democratic clubs, assembled last night at the Sixth Ward Hotel for the purpose of supporting Andrew H. Green for the Mayoralty, and Col. Kerrigan for Congress. Mr. William Kelland occupied the chair, and Mr. Patrick Ahearn acted as Secretary. Speeches were made by Major Connolly, Sergt. O'Brien, and others in favor of Mr. Green. The delegates proceeded to ballot. Mr. Green received eleven of the eighteen votes cast. On motion of Mr. Kelland Mr. Green was unanimously indorsed for Mayor.

THE CAMPAIGN IN WILLIAMSBURG.

AN ENTHUSIASTIC RALLY IN APOLLO HALL—SPEECHES BY HON. S. B. CHITTENDEN, GEN. SICKLES, AND OTHERS.

A perfect sea of humanity overflowed the halls and vestibules of Apollo Hall, on Fifth street, Williamsburg, last evening, for the purpose of listening to a presentment of the issues of the campaign from a Republican point of view. The meeting was called to order at 8 o'clock by W. H. Leaycraft, who nominated Hon. Sigismund Kaufman for Chairman, which was unanimously confirmed. Mr. Kaufman, without preliminary remarks, forwarded the business of the meeting, and, after a song by the Glee Club, introduced Hon. J. D. Manning Hatton, of Massachusetts, as the first speaker. He predicted a majority of 60,000 for Hayes and Wheeler in the old Commonwealth, and then compared the standing of the two great parties, arguing that the Southern wing of the Democracy, which always governed the entire party, are now taking advantage of the lesson of 1852, and have again nominated a Northern man with Southern principles. Tilden's recent letter was pronounced an electioneering dodge.

Mr. Raphael C. Stearns then read the usual resolutions, which were adopted, and Hon. S. B. Chittenden was introduced as the next speaker. He opened with the charge that Samuel J. Tilden had always been a consistent and persistent secessionist, and favored the strongest principles of States rights, and his election is hoped for in the South as the only means left them to recover what they lost by secession and war. Gen. Daniel E. Sickles was next introduced amid tumultuous cheering. He compared the course of the two parties during the past fifteen years, alluding to the actions of the Republican Party through the most momentous difficulties arising from and following the war, as obtaining the admiration of the work, and entitling it to a continuance of power as the just reward of wisdom and success. The General showed that Tilden's recent letter amounted to nothing. The way to prevent the payment of the Southern claims is to issue an injunction against the payment, and make Rutherford B. Hayes the Executive to carry out that injunction. The ten Southern States are now paying no interest on their public debts, and with one exception (Texas) have already repudiated portions of their debts, and their word of State honor they would have us regard as national honor; and the election of Tilden would be the entering wedge of repudiation as regards our national finances. Samuel J. Tilden in the White House might appropriately hang out a sign, "S. J. Tilden, Claim Agent for the Solid South." Corporal James Tanner, candidate for Register of Kings County, followed, and spoke eloquently. His fine oratory excited the audience to such pitches of enthusiasm that they rose in their seats and cheered. The meeting was the most enthusiastic yet held during the campaign in Brooklyn, and will have its effect.

JERSEY CITY AWAKE.

TWO LARGELY ATTENDED MEETINGS LAST NIGHT—SPEECHES BY EX-GOV. DIX AND HON. T. N. M'CARTER.

The Republicans held two largely attended meetings in Jersey City last evening. The Catholic Institute on Third street was crammed to repletion. The stage was handsomely decorated with flags and banners and crowded with distinguished citizens. Dr. J. N. Quimby presided, and ex-Gov. Dix was the principal speaker. He reviewed the issues of the campaign, provoking repeated outbursts of laughter and applause. He dealt severely with Tilden's claims to administrative reform in New-York City, and showed how largely the reforms for which he claims credit were effected during previous administrations. "Gov. Tilden's friends," he said, "have corrected none of my statements made at the Cooper Institute a few evenings ago, and have so indorsed them. There is one statement, however, which I wish, myself, to correct. I gave him credit, which he did not deserve. I accorded him praise for the comparison of the Ring's bank accounts with the Ring books. He did not deserve it. I have since discovered that that was the work of Mr. George T. Painter, an expert." At the conclusion of Gov. Dix's speech a number of local speakers were heard with interest.

The other meeting was held in Keplar Hall under the auspices of the First District Hayes and Wheeler Club. The attendance was not so large as that at the Catholic Institute, but the capacious hall was nevertheless crowded. James B. Vredenburgh, the President of the club, presided, and Hon. Thomas N. McCarter, of Newark, one of the most eloquent and able lawyers in New-Jersey, was the principal speaker. He began by saying that for the first time within his experience the parties of the country were arrayed against each other, undivided by any question of principles. He showed by a careful reference to past Presidential campaigns that some great question of policy had divided the contending parties, as the Free-soil issue in 1856; the threatened dismemberment of the Union in 1860; the prosecution of the war, which the Democracy had declared a failure in 1864; the question of reconstruction in 1868. This year the platforms give in the adherence of each to the same set of principles, and we are to vote for or against either party according as we believe or disbelieve the sincerity of its professions. Mr. McCarter read from the St. Louis platform the clauses declaring the Democratic acceptance of the issues of the war, and declaring their settlement as the greatest achievement of the hundred years of our existence. The Democratic opposition to the abolition of slavery, to the enfranchisement of the freedmen, &c., were cited as evidence of the insincerity of their belief in the righteousness of those achievements. He also showed how the Democracy, while in power, had set all their professions of adherence to the Constitutional amendments at defiance. During the evening both meetings were visited by L. J. Stiastny, the Republican nominee for Congress in the Seventh District, and by many of the campaign clubs of the city.

THE YOUNG MEN AT WORK.

GOOD WORK ACCOMPLISHED IN THE TWENTIETH DISTRICT—ADDRESS BY HON. W. R. HOYT, OF CONNECTICUT.

The members of the Young Men's Centennial Republican Campaign Club, who have been doing good work up town, held a mass-meeting last night in the Assembly Rooms, Fifty-fifth street and Fifth avenue. This was the first public meeting of the club, which is working energetically with the other Republican organizations in the Twentieth Assembly District, and it was largely and influentially attended. Major George W. Cooney, President of the club was in the chair, and in a brief speech introduced Mr. William A. Darling, who delivered an address on the political situation. Senator W. R. Hoyt, of Connecticut, followed with an eloquent oration. "The great State of New-York," he said, was doing noble work for Hayes and Wheeler, and on the 7th of November, the little Nut-meg State of Connecticut would go for those great reformers. [Applause.] The great work of the Republican Party was not finished. The triumph of right and justice, and everything that was dear to true men and patriots was but partially accomplished. Slavery was abolished, but so long as it was impossible for a colored man to record his vote without fear of life or danger, the great work of the Republican Party was not finished. [Applause.] There should, he said, be liberty to all, without fear or intimidation. The right of exercising the first right of a citizen should be free, in accordance with the spirit of our Republican institutions, but it was absurd to say that liberty exists at present in the South. Thank God, he said, therefore, for President Grant's order—under its operation men will vote as they please, without fear of shot or intimidation. The honorable gentleman then traced the great work accomplished by the Republican Party, and in an eloquent peroration drew a picture of what this great country might have achieved had not the followers of Pierce and Buchanan not coquetted with traitors and rebels. Other speakers followed, and the meeting dispersed about 10 P. M.

HOME WORK.

"Inquirer" is entitled to vote.

"Peter" is informed that he cannot vote.

"A Republican" can vote, but to do so he must register to-day—the last day for registration in this City.

The German Republicans of the Eighth Assembly District have nominated Mr. Jacob Merser for Assembly.

E. R. Sammis is informed that he cannot vote unless he goes to the polling booth and deposits his ballot in person.

This is the last day for registration in New-York City. All Republicans who have not already registered should do so to-day, otherwise they cannot vote for Hayes and Wheeler.

An Andrew H. Green Club, largely composed of German Republicans, was formed last night at Hanover Hall, No. 122 Elcridge street. Capt. Henry Deiker was elected President. One hundred and twenty-one voters joined the club.

An immense Republican meeting was held at the Wigwam in Paterson, N. J., last evening. Over three thousand people were present, and great enthusiasm prevailed. Speeches were made by Gen. Harrison, of Indiana, and Prof. Langston.

The Seventeenth Ward Hayes and Wheeler Morgan and Rogers Campaign Club have nominated Mr. Joseph Hoffman for Assembly, and they recommend Alderman Jacob Hess for Sheriff or County Clerk, and Hon. John Cochrane for Congress.

The Republican Congressional Convention of the Eighth District met at No. 231 West Sixteenth street last night, and adjourned until 7 o'clock this evening without nominating a candidate for Congress. The nomination will probably be made to-night.

A grand Republican rally and mass-meeting under the auspices of the Middle Village, Whit Pot, and East Williamsburg Republican District Committees, will be held at Schumacher's Hall, Middle Village, Long Island, Tuesday evening next. Addresses will be delivered by Mr. John Tracy Mygatt, Gen. E. L. Townsend, and others.

The colored Republicans of Bergen County N. J., had a mass-meeting at Englewood last evening. There were over one thousand persons present, and delegates were in attendence from Hackensack and other neighboring towns. There was a grand torch-light parade through the streets. The speakers were J. F. A. Allen and William E. Brown, of Brooklyn; William C. H. Curtiss and Alexander Powell, of New-Jersey.

A large and handsome campaign banner was last evening raised by the Sixteenth Assembly District Republican Association in place of that which was destroyed by fire during a fight in the Democratic procession of Thursday evening. After the banner raising, an enthusiastic ratification meeting was held in the rooms of the association, at which Col. F. E. Howe presided. Stirring speeches were made by Mr. F. D. Lambert and others.

TILDEN REPUDIATED.

ANOTHER DEMOCRATIC BANNER REPLACED BY A REPUBLICAN STANDARD—A LARGE DEMOCRATIC CLUB PRONOUNCES IN FAVOR OF HAYES AND WHEELER.

One of the largest (heretofore) Democratic organizations in the City, the head-quarters of which are at the corner of Twenty-first street and Second avenue, met last evening and proceeded to pull down the banner in front of their club-rooms, which bore the names of Tilden and Hendricks and Robinson and Dorsheimer. In its place was hoisted a large and handsome banner, on which are inscribed the names of the Republican national and State nominees—Hayes and Wheeler and Morgan and Rogers. The following resolution was then unanimously adopted:

Be it Resolved, That we indorse the regular Republican nominations: For President, Rutherford B. Hayes; for Vice President, William A. Wheeler; for Governor, Elwin D. Morgan; for Lieutenant Governor, Sherman S. Rogers.

The meeting then adjourned to Tuesday evening next. The officers of the club are: President, William A. Wall; Vice President, Peter Bray; Secretary, D. H. Lucov.

THE REGISTRY OF VOTERS.

NEARLY ONE HUNDRED AND SIXTY THOUSAND REGISTERED SO FAR IN THIS CITY.

Yesterday was the third day of registration in this City. There were 42,973 persons registered, making a total for the three days of 159,971. The following table gives the registration by Assembly Districts and wards:

REGISTER TO-DAY.

This is the last day for registration in this City. Whoever fails to register to-day cannot vote at the coming election. Republicans who have not already registered should do so without fail to-day, so as to be able to cast their votes for the National and State tickets.

NOMINATIONS FOR ASSEMBLY.

Robert N. Jains has been nominated for Assembly by the Democrats of the Third District in Jersey City.

The convention of Anti-Tammany delegates from Yonkers, Westchester County (Twenty-third and Twenty-fourth Wards of New York City), held at Berger's Hotel, in Fordham, yesterday, unanimously nominated Ambrose H. Purdy for Assembly, from the First District of Westchester County.

AN INFERNAL MACHINE EXPLODES IN A RAILWAY CAR.

As Conductor Head's express train, which leaves Philadelphia, on the Pennsylvania Railroad, at 3:10 P. M., and arrives in Jersey City at 7 o'clock, was passing Rahway station, seven miles this side of Elizabeth, last evening, a short, sharp report resounded from the forward part of the train, and a few moments later flames were seen issuing from the baggage car, and the train came to a standstill. The passengers rushed forth pell-mell, and for a few minutes great excitement prevailed. The flames were speedily put out, and the cause of the alarm explained by Baggage-master Silpaugh. It seems, from statements made by Silpaugh and an eye-witness, that a trunk filled with inflammable materials had exploded, and its contents, which consisted of powder, hay, and straw, were scattered about the car. All immediately took fire, causing some excitement, but no damage to any one. The trunk was blown to atoms, not a piece the size of a man's hand being left. Fortunately the doors of the car were open at the time. Had they been closed the force of the concussion would undoubtedly have thrown it from the track and wrecked the whole train. After the explosion a pistol, with clock-work attached, was found in a corner of the baggage-car. The machine was so arranged that at a given hour the pistol would be exploded and the hay and straw contained in the trunk set on fire. The trunk was checked at Philadelphia for New-York, but by whom is not at the present time known, as all clews to the owner are lost through the explosion, which was undoubtedly caused by the constant jarring of the car. Conductor Heads gives it as his opinion that it was the intention of the parties concerned in the attempt to perpetrate this diabolical outrage either to wreck the train or destroy some large building by fire. William Silpaugh, the baggage-master, retains the check for the trunk, and Conductor Heads the pistol and clock-work. The train arrived at Jersey City without any further delay. Steps will be at once taken to ferret out the culprits.

PRESENTS TO THE NATIONAL MUSEUM.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 27.—The various animal, vegetable, and mineral products which have been donated by foreign Commissioners at the Centennial to the National Museum at Washington are now being numbered and catalogued, this work being in the hands of three assistants appointed by Prof. Baird, of the Smithsonian Institution. Much of the display made by Mr. Krupp, the princely steel manufacturer, of Prussia, has also been presented to the Washington Museum, and arrangements for the removal and reception of all the collections are now being made.

ANOTHER FENIAN INVASION.

BOSTON, Oct. 27.—The Herald's St. Albans special says secret preparations are being made in northern Vermont for another Fenian invasion of Canada this Fall or early in the Spring.

THE PENNSYLVANIA COAL TRADE.

The Pottsville (Penn.) Miners' Journal says: "The quantity of coal sent from the Schuylkill region for the week ending Oct. 21, was, by rail 124,756 tons, by canal, 30,143 tons; total, 155,169 tons, against, 158,454 tons for the same week last year; decrease, 3,285 tons. The quantity sent for the year was 3,459,784 tons, against 3,614,021 tons for the corresponding period of last year; decrease, 154,237 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the week was, anthracite, 593,850 tons; bituminous, 30,880 tons; total, 624,730 tons, against 592,010 tons anthracite and 59,961 tons bituminous; total, 652,871 tons for the same week last year. Increase of anthracite, 940 tons; decrease of bituminous, 9,081 tons. The quantity sent from all the regions for the year was, anthracite, 14,429,299 tons; bituminous, 2,903,086 tons; total, 17,332,385 tons, against 16,324,440 tons anthracite and 3,204,629 tons bituminous; total, 19,529,139 tons for the corresponding period of last year. Decrease of anthracite, 1,894,141 tons; decrease of bituminous, 301,613 tons: total decrease, 2,196,754 tons."

THE FIGHTING ON THE MORAVA.

A TURKISH OFFICIAL REPORT ISSUED FROM CONSTANTINOPLE—DESTITUTION AMONG THE SERVIANS—WOUNDING THEMSELVES TO SECURE DISCHARGE.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 27.—The Porte has telegraphed to its agents abroad a summary of the recent fighting and the results. The dispatch says: "The Turks stormed a fortification on a high mountain, which is considered to be the key to the Servian position at Deligrad. They carried other intrenchments of less importance, and took Coumik, near the Deligrad bridge, where were the Servian head-quarters, occupied Djinimiul, a large village beyond Coumik on the road to Krushevats, and stormed several entrenchments. The Servians fled; their losses are enormous. On the side of Mitrovitza the Servian attack in the direction of Chatal was repulsed with heavy loss."

LONDON, Oct. 28.—The Standard's Belgarde despatch says intelligent witnesses just returned from Deligrad report that the Servians are enduring fearful privations. On Sunday last 600 wounded were lying at inns and cafés, which were used as hospitals. Half of these people had wounded themselves, in order to procure their discharge.

The Vienna correspondent of the Standard telegraphs: "It is stated that the Servian Government, in consequence of the recent defeats, has again asked for the interference of the Powers in favor of peace."

THE ARMISTICE QUESTION.

THE PROPOSITION OF EACH SIDE STILL UNACCEPTED BY THE OTHER—INDICATIONS OF A MORE PACIFIC TEMPER ON THE PART OF RUSSIA.

LONDON, Oct. 27.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegraph Company from Paris says: According to private dispatches from Constantinople, dated yesterday, the Porte had not then accepted Gen. Ignatieff's proposal for a six weeks' armistice.

A dispatch from Berlin to the same journal says an apparently trustworthy announcement is made that Russia has intimated her willingness to accept the Porte's latest armistice proposals with certain modifications not calculated to imperil the desired result.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—It is reported in Berlin that Turkey is endeavoring to treat directly with Servia.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—All the special correspondents, although differing as to the details, confirm the reports of the pacific change in Russia's attitude toward Turkey. The Daily News' Vienna dispatch says the conclusion of the armistice is considered certain. It is officially denied that Servia has requested the intervention of the powers.

The Post publishes in an official form the following statement, explanatory of the latest phase of the negotiations: "We understand the tendency of the negotiations at Constantinople does not forbid expectation of a pacific solution. Gen. Ignatieff has intimated the willingness of Russia to assent to a six weeks' armistice with the successive prolongations proposed by the Porte. There only now remains the condition, for which the Porte stipulated, that all the powers should concur in recommending the armistice."

The Vienna dispatch of the Times reports that the negotiations have taken unexpectedly a favorable turn. Russia on Thursday informed the powers that she had no objection to a clause being added to the six weeks' armistice, providing that it might eventually be prolonged if required by the state of the negotiations—this clause, of course, to be only permissive and to fix no term to the prolongation; but the latest information is that Russia has all but consented to make the first prolongation one of six weeks, and obligatory. The German Government, which was first informed of Russia's concession, has already expressed its adhesion, and recommended other powers to do the same. It is thought that Russia's action will be influenced by a desire to disarm the suspicion of Europe. In Constantinople the conviction grows that Russia is not seeking a pretext for rupture, but is making a serious effort to bring about an arrangement which will allay the excitement of the Russian people, and at the same time establish Russian ascendency in Turkey on a solid and permanent footing.

POSITION OF OUTSIDE NATIONS.

MOSLEM INTOLERANCE IN MOROCCO—BRITISH TROOPS FOR THE MEDITERRANEAN—OPPOSITION TO RUSSIAN CONTROL IN TURKEY.

MADRID, Oct. 27.—The Epoca publishes advices from Morocco which say that religious agitation has been commenced there with the object of procuring help for Turkey. The Christians apprehend a Moslem outbreak. The foreign Consuls have communicated with their governments on the subject.

LONDON, Oct. 27.—The Pall Mall Gazette announces that the troop-ship Himalaya is preparing to take six companies of the Royal Engineers and two of the Transit Corps to join the British Mediterranean fleet. The order was given some days ago, when the aspect of affairs was more threatening than now.

The Times has the following special from Berlin: The Liberal newspapers here are almost unanimous in vigorous declarations against the establishment of Prussian power in the Turkish provinces. The Volks Zeitung urges the propriety of placing reform therein under English, instead of Russian, control.

The proposal to settle the terms of peace by a conference, at which the Porte shall not be represented, is opposed by England and Italy.

A dispatch from Rome says: "The Russian ironclad squadron will winter in Italian waters, in order to be ready to proceed to the East in case of need."

Reuter's telegram from Vienna reports that Prince Auersperg, President of the Austrian Council, replying in the Reichsrath to interpellations on the Eastern question, declared Austria's policy was above everything to maintain peace; consequently any aspiration toward the acquisition of foreign territory was out of the question. Count Andrassy could not suffer his policy to be influenced by the interests of different nationalities, but solely by those of the entire Empire. He would continue to resolutely strive for the maintenance of peace and the amelioration of the condition of the Christians in Turkey.

THE REAL RULER OF SERVIA.

ARROGANCE OF GEN. TCHERNAYEFF—RESIGNATION OF THE MINISTER OF WAR AS A CONSEQUENCE—A CRISIS THREATENED.

LONDON, Oct. 27.—There is a crisis in the Servian Ministry. The Minister of War, Nicolich, has resigned in consequence of Gen. Tchernayeff's arrogance. Prince Milan refuses to accept his resignation, but M. Nicolich persists and has the support of Prime Minister Ristics and his colleagues. There is no war news at Belgrade to-day.

THE NATIONAL CAMPAIGN.

THE OUTLOOK IN CONNECTICUT.

THE RESULTS OF THE CHANGE IN THE STATE CONSTITUTION—AN INTERESTING CANVASS—DEMOCRATIC MANIPULATIONS—HOW REPUBLICANS ARE PREVENTED FROM VOTING—SOME ACCOUNT OF THE CANDIDATES TO BE VOTED FOR.

From Our Special Correspondent.

HARTFORD, Tuesday, Oct. 24, 1876.

Connecticut, which has heretofore chosen a Governor and other State officers in the Spring, and at the same election members of Congress, by a change in the Constitution will hereafter hold her general elections on the same day in November as most of the other States. Her first election in accordance with the amended Constitution will be on the 7th day of November next, when Presidential Electors are to be chosen. The importance of the Fall election is therefore greatly increased to Connecticut people, though, of course, the rest of the country is most interested in the result of the vote on the Electoral ticket. The change in the time of the State election to the day of the Presidential election, according to past experience in Connecticut, is not likely to have much influence on the vote for President. It has been found impossible to get out a full vote in any State elections, and several thousand voters never go to the polls except when a President is to be chosen. The concentration of political interests in the election will certainly bring out a full vote, which is very much to the advantage of the Republicans. It is confidently expected that the aggregate vote will reach, at the lowest, 105,000. Last Spring it was below ninety-nine thousand.

A very interesting canvass is going on in the State. The organization is excellent, and the State Committee is laboring diligently with earnestness and zeal. The Chairman, Mr. H. T. Sperry, has been but a few weeks at the head of the committee, but he has in that time infused new life into the local committees, which are now working admirably, except perhaps in a few instances. A thorough canvass of the voters has been undertaken with good results, for it has revealed where and what kind of work is necessary. It is agreed on all hands that the Republicans have not been for many years so well organized for a political contest, and if there is anything to be regretted in this particular it is that the same completeness had not already been attained at the time Mr. Sperry was made Chairman, five or six weeks ago. The public canvass, by meetings and speeches, has been decidedly favorable to the Republicans. The speakers have almost all been Connecticut men. The list includes H. C. Robinson, the candidate for Governor, O. H. Platt, J. H. Barbour, Stephen W. Kellogg, Gov. Jewell, Gen. Hawley, Samuel Fessenden, Prof. Northrup, and John T. Wait, member of Congress. Some speakers from out the State have made, or will make, a few speeches. Among them are Senator Dawes, Gen. Banks, and Gen. Van Zandt, of Rhode Island. Mr. Blaine will speak at Bridgeport one afternoon. The Republican meetings are well attended and enthusiastic. The Democratic meetings have been small and uninteresting. This is a valuable, though not an unerring, indication of the drift of popular feeling and public opinion. The great interest taken in the election is shown by the desire of the people all over the State to hear speeches, and the readiness with which they turn out in all kinds of weather to attend the meetings.

The most apparent facts, those which lie upon the surface, and are easily observed, point to a Republican victory. I fear these facts are somewhat deceptive, otherwise it would not be necessary, as I think it is, to keep Connecticut in the list of doubtful States. What, then, are the facts which make the result in the State doubtful? In the first place, there is the majority of last Spring of 3,673, over all, against the Republican ticket. The plurality of Ingersoll over Robinson was 7,628. But the Temperance and Soft-money votes were over 1,900 each. If the Temperance votes were all conceded to the Republicans, and the Soft-money vote were evenly divided, there is still upward of 5,000 majority for the Republicans to overcome. The Temperance vote in November is likely to be very small; but whether the Greenback vote will be greater or smaller than last Spring is a matter of great doubt. Sam Cary, believed to be paid by Hewitt, has been in the State. This game of Hewitt is to have Cary preach the Greenback doctrine. No matter how much impression he makes, the Democrats who are inclined to follow him are easily restrained by pointing to Hendricks and the action of the Democratic House, and in Phelps' Congressional district, where Greenbackers mostly abound, particularly by the fact that he is a soft-money man. But Republicans who really get the soft-money disease are unable to find comfort or hope without going beyond the party lines. The Republicans will sustain the loss of nearly all the Greenback votes, and all the Temperance votes that may be cast.

The most discouraging feature of the situation to Republicans is the power the Democrats hold to manipulate the elections in large towns, particularly New-Haven. Probably if New-Haven alone could be held down to a strictly legal and honest vote, the doubt of Republican success would be removed. The Registry law, so called, has been so amended by the Democrats since they had the Legislature, that it is no protection to the ballot. Practically there is no registration at all, but the registers make up a list of all the names they can hear of, or that are handed to them. In New-Haven they already have on the lists several hundred boys not yet of age. There are likely to be several thousand fraudulent votes cast in the large towns, unless measures are more successful for prevention than there is room to hope for.

There is one other direct method of reducing the Republican vote which Democrats resort to, which may keep some hundreds—perhaps a thousand—of Republicans away from the polls. The Boards of Selectmen in the several towns are busily engaged in the work of "making electors." Young men just come of age, or men from other States who have gained a residence, appear before the board and produce the evidence of their qualifications, and when the evidence is satisfactory they are made "electors," and have the right to be registered and vote. The action of the board is final, and if they decide against the evidence, either in admitting or excluding from the right to vote, there is no appeal and no punishment. In country towns, where frauds by the board are easily known and much talked about, the action of the Selectmen is generally honorable and just; but in larger places there is much arbitrary action, and, when the boards are Democratic, men of doubtful rights are admitted if Democrats, while Republicans are excluded against the evidence.

There is one use which Democrats invariably make of this power which illustrates the innate hatred of that party to schools, intelligence, and education. A large number of Yale students desire to vote. They have gained a residence in the State, and have complied absolutely with the law. They have a most undoubted right to vote in Connecticut if they choose. In other States, under similar conditions, students of colleges always vote. But the Board of Selectmen in New-Haven will not make any student an elector. Not one of the students will be allowed to vote. Of course, they are excluded on the theory that being educated and thinking young men they would vote the Republican ticket. The same action is taken at Middletown, where no student of the university is permitted to vote, and a like policy is carried out in every town where there are students and where the boards are Democratic.

There is another element of danger in the canvass, Senator Barnum in Treasurer of the Democratic National Committee. He deals largely in "mules." He has not taken an unusual number into Connecticut yet, but he has a few of his own. He knows how to obtain more from certain large corporations, and Mr. Hewitt would probably authorize him to buy as many as "seven" for this canvass. There is, indeed, little doubt that Barnum, if persuaded it is necessary, will spend several thousand dollars to maintain his supremacy, and while it is not likely he can buy any Republican votes, he can prevent his followers from deserting, which is equally important to Democratic success.

It is evident that, in spite of the excellent spirit and feeling displayed by the Republicans, they have a hard contest, and if they win it will be due in the first place to the efficiency and industry of the State Committee in organizing and inspiring the working Republicans, and not in a less degree to the solid good sense of the people, their understanding of the true issues of the canvass, and determination to have right principles triumph. To sum up the situation, I should say that, with a continued apparent drift of public opinion in favor of Hayes for the next two weeks, with increased certainty of Republican success in New-York, there is more than an even chance that Connecticut will vote for Hayes and Wheeler in the next Electoral College. If the vote were to be taken this week the chances would favor the Democrats. It is worth while to remember, in this connection, that Connecticut has not often—only twice, I think—cast her vote for a Democratic President. It cannot be left out of the account, however, that the population of the State has been very much changed by the changing condition of her industries through many years, and that the changes have been somewhat in favor of the Democrats.

The State ticket of the Republican party is headed by Henry C. Robinson, of Hartford, who was the candidate last Spring, and Prof. Francis A. Walker, of New Haven, is the candidate for Secretary of State. These are both very strong nominations, and the remainder of the ticket is also excellently composed: F. J. Kingsbury, of Waterbury, for Lieutenant Governor; Jeremiah Olney, of Thompson, for Treasurer, and Eli Curtis, of Watertown, for Controller. Not the slightest charge can be brought against the characters of either of these gentlemen.

The Democratic candidate for Governor is Richard D. Hubbard, of Hartford. He is spoken of as a man of moderate political views, and popular with voters. His reputation seems to be of rather an ornamental kind; not altogether durable, it is believed, if certain railroad and insurance transactions were examined. But there seems to be a disposition in the State to let him have all the advantage of his reputation, and not bring it into question. It is admitted that he will have all the votes of his party, and will run ahead of Tilden. There are many Democrats in the State who will not vote for Tilden. Speaking with a gentleman yesterday from an interior town, he called my attention to a tall, business-like looking man of sixty. "That man," said he "has been a Democrat all his life, but he will not vote for Tilden, and is working against him. He got acquainted with Tilden in connection with some business in New-York, and says he is a humbug and a fraud." It might be, in a very close contest, that Tilden would fall behind enough to be beaten, while Hubbard would be elected. The Republicans have a strong electoral ticket, headed by President Woolsey and Gov. Jewell, and there is no doubt that every man who votes for Robinson will vote for the Republican Electors.

The contest for Congressmen deserves special notice. It has been hoped that the Republicans would gain two members. They have now one, and the Democrats three. In the last Congress the delegation was the reverse. The fact is that two of the districts are Democratic. The Republicans carried one of these three times by nominating Mr. Kellogg, of Waterbury, who accomplished the feat of going to Congress from an opposition district. Two years ago Phelps, a Democrat, carried the district. He is a worthless stick, of no use in Congress to any party or any constituency. Kellogg is nominated against him, but under the circumstances no one can feel a strong assurance of his election. If he overcomes an adverse majority of 2,000, and secures his election, it will be to the party simply a piece of good luck, and still it may be done. John T. Waite, brother of the Chief Justice, a member of the present House, has a surety of his re-election against the Democratic candidate Waiter. The Democratic candidate, Levi Warner, in Barnum's old district, is sure of election over Robert Hubbard, the Republican, who is a most excellent and popular candidate. In the First District, Gen. Hawley is running against Landers, a member of the present Congress, and has an even chance of election. His friends, indeed, are confident. Sanders is even less of a man than Phelps. Landers sat in the House near Jere Haralson the colored member from Alabama. Landers spent most of his time joking and chaffing with Haralson, and furnished amusement for about a dozen members sitting in the vicinity, who generally thought that the colored fellow-citizen and member was more than a match for the Yankee Democrat in their amusing intellectual encounters. Hawley is popular, as shown by his running 1,200 ahead of the State ticket in his district last Spring. He ought to get the election this Fall. But his duties at the Centennial prevent him from giving much attention to his canvass personally. The Hartford Times is endeavoring to excite the Germans against him by representing that he has opposed opening the Exhibition to Germans and to poor laboring people on Sunday, but has not scrupled to go there himself on Sunday and to take his friends. It heads a notice of the Exhibition, "Gen. Hawley's Sunday Show." Now the truth is that Gen. Hawley has not been into the Exhibition grounds once on Sunday, nor has he given passes to his friends. There have not been so many people as reported in the buildings on Sunday, and those that have gone in were mostly officers, who were entitled to and received at the beginning the regular Commissioners' badges, which admit at any hour night or day. All the foreign Commissioners have such passes, and the President and Cabinet have them. They could not be excluded on Sunday without taking away the badges. A few persons besides were sometimes admitted Sunday by officers having the right to issue passes. The insinuation by the Hartford Times against Gen. Hawley is as mean and cowardly as it is unfounded. The purpose of the attack must fail.

In regard to Congressmen, then, it may be said that the Republicans will retain Mr. Waite certainly; will probably elect Gen. Hawley, and possibly Mr. Kellogg. The probable gain is one, and the possible gain two. To elect the State ticket, the Hayes and Wheeler Electoral ticket, and three, or at least two, Congressmen, is a result Connecticut Republicans are aiming at, and they have a prospect of success sufficient to urge them to untiring labor.

THE PROSPECTS IN WISCONSIN.

UNUSUAL ACTIVITY OF THE REPUBLICANS AND KARNESTNESS OF THE PEOPLE—EXCELLENT NOMINATIONS — BLUNDERING AND APATHY OF THE DEMOCRATS—A REPUBLICAN MAJORITY OF 10,000 OR 15,000 WITH A GAIN OF CONGRESSMEN.

From Our Own Correspondent.

MILWAUKEE, Monday, Oct. 23, 1876.

The importance of Wisconsin's ten electoral votes is now fully appreciated, and the campaign is being prosecuted with vigor. Prior to the October elections there was but little activity on either side, and as a full vote is essential to a round Republican majority, there was a danger that the State might be made uncomfortably close through apathy. The result in Indiana has been of the highest value to the Republican Party, so far as Wisconsin is concerned. Men who were so confident of a Republican victory here as to remain inactive, have now thrown themselves into the work of organization, and it may be said that the Republicans never before presented so solid a front. The enthusiasm all over the State among Republicans is beyond anything ever witnessed. Every town has its Hayes and Wheeler Club and its tri-weekly meetings. The State Committee and the Milwaukee City Committee are appealed to from every section to supply speakers. Heretofore the trouble has been to secure audiences; now the committees, although using all local and foreign material they can get, are unable to supply the demand for speakers. Last week a score of towns in which political meetings have been unknown for years turned out immense crowds to listen to Republican addresses. In the matter of campaign clubs, in almost every city, town, and village, at almost every cross-roads and country school-house, there are nightly drills of Republican Minute Men and Hayes and Wheeler Clubs, with uniforms, torches, and bands of music. Candidly, the old stagers assert that the enthusiasm surpasses anything they ever saw.

On the other hand the Democracy is not well organized. Occasional meetings are addressed by candidates for Congress in their respective districts, but no systematic campaign has been pursued. Even in Democratic Milwaukee the party is split on local nominations, and the most bitter feeling is shown among themselves, preventing anything like effective work. And the same is true of the State at large. The Chairman of the Democratic State Committee acts on his own method, and is snubbed by the other members of the committee and by local managers. As regards a majority of the Democratic nominations, the very worst element in the party controlled them. The Republicans have not made more than two nominations for offices of consequence that are not the wisest possible.

THE CONGRESSIONAL NOMINATIONS.

In the First District the Republicans renominated Hon. Charles G. Williams, the present member. Opposed to him is H. G. Winslow, who was nominated without a hope of election. Williams' majority will not be less than usual, 3,000.

In the Second District the contest is more close. Hon. L. B. Caswell, the present member, is the Republican candidate, and opposed to him is Hon. Harlow S. Orton. Caswell's majority in this district two years ago was only 217, against Cook, a Democrat, who drew out the full party vote. The result of the present contest is doubtful, but with the probabilities in favor of Caswell. Orton has been a Circuit Judge in the district for many years, and is a somewhat erratic, but popular man. He has a tendency to greenbacks, and is especially bitter toward the recent constitutional amendments.

In the Third District the Republicans are in large majority, and G. C. Hazelton will defeat Philo A. Orton by about 4,000 majority. Mr. Hazelton is a cultivated gentleman, popular alike with both parties. Magoon, Republican, represented this district in the last House.

The Fourth District is hopelessly Democratic. It includes the Counties of Milwaukee, Ozaukee, and Washington, in which the Democratic majority has reached over eleven thousand. William Pitt Lynde is the present member and candidate for re-election. His majority against Ludington two years ago was only 2,501. Lynde was a member of Congress in 1848-9, and when he returned to Washington commenced again where he had left off. During the recent session he acquired some standing, having been a peculiarly malignant Copperhead during the war. There is no other reason than his sympathy with the South for his appointment on the Judiciary Committee. His standing with the Milwaukee Bar is not high, and his talents are not above second class. His connection with the Belknap impeachment trial gave him more mention than he otherwise would ever secure. His opponent is William E. Smith, formerly State Treasurer, a wholesale merchant of Milwaukee. He has frequently represented the local exchange in the National Board of Trade, and is universally regarded as exceptionally clear and able. Lynde's majority this year will not reach 4,000, under any circumstances. So far as Lynde has any views on the financial question, they are favorable to rag money.

Another certain Democratic district is the Fifth. Here the Democrats have retired Sam. Burchard, as predicted in a previous letter, and have nominated Gen. E. S. Bragg to succeed him. Bragg was a good soldier, but has become a sharp politician. As the district is always Democratic, a seat in Congress could fall to him only by his uniting with that party. His opponent is Col. George W. Carter, who left a leg in the South. From the present appearances, the usual Democratic majority of 6,000 will this year be reduced to 4,000.

The Sixth District is to be regarded as doubtful, with the probabilities in favor of the Republicans. A. M. Kimball was elected two years ago by a majority of 92. He has been renominated by the Republicans. The district is certain to give Hayes and Wheeler a majority of more than 1,000, and notwithstanding some local feeling, Kimball will probably be aided to a safe number of votes by this fact. The Democratic candidate is Col. Gabe Bouck, son of the late Gov. William Bouck, of New-York. Gabe is a Democratic Ben Butler in many respects. He is cross-eyed like Butler and has the same demagogue habit. He has cultivated the Grangers extensively from the beginning, and was Speaker of the Assembly when the Potter law in regard to railroads was passed. He is stumping his district thoroughly, and is exceedingly reckless in his statements regarding the two parties.

The Seventh District is safely Republican. The Republicans have retired Rusk, whose majority two years ago was 344, and nominated Judge Humphrey, of Hudson. He has been Judge on the circuit for some eight or ten years, and is a bright, attractive man, who will make a figure in the next Congress. He is a brilliant off-hand speaker, of wonderful mental resources, and will be prominent in debate. The Democratic candidate is M. R. Gage, who was put on the ticket by the committee after John Glover, the nominee of the convention, declined to run. Humphrey's majority may safely be estimated at 3,500.

Owing to the Democratic capacity for fraud, the Eighth District, although properly belonging to the Republicans by at least 1,000 majority, must be regarded as doubtful in this campaign. In 1872 the Republican majority was nearly 3,500. In 1874 Judge Cate was given a certificate on a majority of two votes. As a matter of fact, Dr. McDill (Rep.) had a majority of 400, but the Democratic canvassers in Wood County threw out the returns from the town of Lincoln and one ward of Grand Rapids. Their action was set aside by the Supreme Court and the canvassers punished by fine; but Dr. McDill having died, Cate took advantage of the fraud and served his term in the recent House, where he was conspicuous for his blunders. It was Cate who engineered the Mary Merritt attack on Col. Bristow, and met with failure. Cate has been renominated by the Democrats. His opponent is Hon. Thaddeus C. Pound. The leading interest in this district is lumbering, and Mr. Pound is at the head of one of the largest of the lumbering establishments. He was at one time Lieutenant Governor of the State, and has served a number of terms in the State Legislature. Cate has been on the Bench for twenty years, and is regarded by those who know him well as essentially a narrow man. Pound, on the other hand, is a clear-headed business man, familiar with legislation and with the wants of his section. The Republican majority on the national ticket, and probably for Pound, will not be less than 1,000.

THE GENERAL OUTLOOK.

One noticeable feature of election statistics in Wisconsin is the lessening of Republican majorities only with the falling off of the whole vote in the various Congressional districts. In the First District in 1872 the entire vote was more than 25,000, and the Republican majority was over 6,000; in 1875 the total vote was only 21,000 and the Republican majority but 3,000. In the Third District, in 1873, the total vote was 16,000 and the Democratic majority was 363; in 1875 the whole vote was 21,000, and the Republicans secured a majority of 1,319. And so it is in most of the districts. A light vote has come to be regarded as favorable to the Democracy and a full vote as favorable to the Republicans. This year the State will poll the largest vote since its organization, not alone because of the growth in population, but because of the unusual activity of the Republicans.

Carl Schurz delivered three speeches in the State, in German—one in Milwaukee, one in Manitowoc, and one in Fond du Lac. Gen. Schurz was formerly a resident of the State, and has a large number of friends here; consequently his reception was a grand one. Congressman Frye, of Maine, is speaking every night, and reports greater enthusiasm than he ever witnessed in New England. His meetings have been immense in every locality. Friday evening next Mr. Blaine will speak in this city. He is booked for three speeches in the State. Col. Ingersoll is promised for three speeches—at Madison, Oshkosh and Eau Claire. Fred. Hecker will make a number of speeches in German. Ex-Senator Carpenter has made three speeches, and will speak every night during next week. In addition, at least a dozen local speakers have announcements for every night between now and election. Still, the people do not seem to be in any danger of being talked to death, as they are calling for more orators.

The Democrats have no appointments made for speakers. The Congressional candidates drop down on a community in a casual way, and a meeting is held, but there is no organization. The only speaker from abroad that has been announced is George W. Julian, of Indiana, who, however, failed to keep his appointment. As a matter of fact, there is not much Democratic campaign material that can be used with success in this State. It will be remembered that in 1873 the Democrats went into the campaign on the one issue of reform. William R. Taylor was nominated and elected on the very cry now used by Gov. Tilden—reform. His Administration proved the most corrupt since the time of Barstow (Democrat.) A Committee of Investigation, appointed by the Legislature, found that not only had he distributed the contingent fund for personal and electioneering purposes, but that he had actually stolen every portable article from the executive office. The facts shown in the report of the committee are humiliating and disgraceful. As a consequence of this, a Democratic speaker who should mention reform in connection with his party, would, in this State, be laughed down even by Democrats. Recently Democratic orators have been used to stir the Granger up to fever-heat on the subject of railway sharks. This little bit of comfort is denied them, as many of the Democratic papers of the State in ante-convention days gave Mr. Tilden's record as a railroad wrecker as a reason why he should not be nominated. Of course, in common with the Cincinnati Enquirer and other anti-Tilden Democratic papers, they have "eaten crow;" but all the same, their earlier attacks on Tilden had effect on the Grangers. The most effective work the Democratic orators and journals are doing is in representing Gov. Tilden as a greenback man. The greenback element is an unknown quantity in Wisconsin politics. The Democrats assume that it is large, and are engaged in exhibiting to the public evidences that Tilden has bowed to the superior arguments of Hendricks on the question of currency. It will be seen that this is campaigning under difficulties, and may be a chief reason why orators from the East are not invited to stump the State for Tilden. Further, the blunder of Tilden's Literary Bureau in sending to the Waukesha Democrat a letter intended for some Southern paper, and in which Mr. Tilden is shown to have been an ardent sympathizer with the South in the war, has discouraged the party in this section.

Looking the whole field over, taking into consideration all the elements that would be likely to support Tilden, the impression with cool-headed Republicans is that a majority of from 10,000 to 15,000 will be given to Hayes and Wheeler, and that the Republicans will certainly elect four, probably five, and possibly six members of Congress.

THE STRUGGLE IN ILLINOIS.

TWELVE OF THE CONGRESSMEN PROMISED FOR THE REPUBLICANS—UNFORTUNATE DISSENSIONS IN THE NINTH AND FOURTH DISTRICTS—THE STATE SURE FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1876.

During the past four months the canvass in Illinois has been secondary to the canvass in Ohio and Indiana, the ablest speakers in both parties having been sent to those States. In the meantime the candidates for State and local offices kept things moving. The hardest work on the Republican side has been done by Mr. Shelby M. Cullom, candidate for Governor, who addressed large meetings in nearly every county in the State. Mr. Cullom is a popular speaker. His opponent, Mr. "Lew" Steward, has not shown himself to the people. He is only eloquent when profane or vulgar, and the Democratic managers, remembering the doings of the bull in the china shop, have wisely kept him chained. He has offended the Independent leaders, and many Democrats, disgusted with his personal record, and recognizing his utter unfitness for the office to which he aspires, will vote for his opponent, who is a gentleman.

The First Congressional District is almost certain to elect the Republican candidate, Mr. Aldrich, a merchant of high standing in Chicago, a prompt, energetic, active man, and an earnest advocate of civil service reform. Mr. Hoxie, his opponent, is a millionaire, and trusts to his money to elect him as it nominated him. Mr. Bowen, a business man of excellent character, is the Independent candidate. He won't get many votes. He left the Republican Party on the greenback issue. In the Second District the Republicans nominated Col. Davis, a young man who is best known as Colonel of the First Regiment of Illinois State Guard. A stronger nomination could have been made, but Col. Davis stands a fair chance of winning. His opponent, Mr. Carter H. Harrison, was renominated by the Democrats. The contest in the district will be close. Mr. Lorenz Brentano, ex-Consul to Dantzig, is almost certain to be elected over Mr. Le Moyne in the Third District. He is a cultivated German, and will be voted for by his countrymen, who are very numerous in the north division of Chicago. Nothing can be said against the personal character of Mr. Le Moyne, who contested the last election with Hon. C. B. Farwell, and got the seat by a party vote, but he is not a strong candidate, especially against a man like Mr. Brentano.

The Republicans in the Fourth District are divided between Mr. Lathrop, of Rookford, and Gen. Hurlburt, of Boone County. Hurlburt claimed that Lathrop secured the nomination by fraud, so his friends got another convention together, and he is "running for revenge." Efforts have been made to close the breach, but they have been futile, and the result will be that Gen. Farnsworth, the Democratic candidate, will be elected, unless the Republicans let Mr. Hurlburt severely alone, as they seem inclined to do, and unite upon Mr. Lathrop. The latter is a lawyer of high standing at the Winnebago County Bar. Mr. Burchard will be re-elected by a large majority in the Fifth District, although he is a resumptionist. His opponent, Mr. Patterson, of Freeport, a Democratic warhorse, is sacrificing himself for the sake of the party. In the Sixth District Mr. Henderson, the present member, is certain of election over Mr. Dunham, a young man of strong parts, who was a leader among the Democrats in the Legislature of 1872-3.

The contest in the Seventh District is between Mr. Hayes, of Grundy County, and "Alec" Campbell, better known as "Old Greenbacks," of La Salle. The latter, who is running on the Democratic and Independent tickets, carried the district two years ago by a good majority. He is a financial lunatic. He will carry La Salle County in November, but Mr. Hayes should carry every other county in the district, and be elected by a handsome majority. Mr. Hayes is a young man of energy and talent. There is no doubt about the re-election of Mr. Ford, in the Eighth District. His Democratic opponent, Mr. Parker, is a weak candidate. In the Ninth District the Republican Party is torn asunder by a foolish and bitter strife between Col. Boyd, the candidate, and Mr. Whiting, the present member, who is mad because Col. Boyd beat him in the convention. Whiting has taken the stump against Boyd, and will succeed in defeating him, thereby giving a Republican District a Democratic Representative in the person of Dr. Wilson, of Peoria. Such Republicanism is unworthy of the name.

B. F. Marsh, the Republican candidate in the Tenth District, will be elected and the district redeemed from Democratic misrepresentation. The Eleventh or Quincy District is overwhelmingly Democratic, and will elect Mr. Knapp as successor of Mr. Wike, who was beaten in the convention on account of the stand he took against the repeal of the Resumption act. Mr. D. L. Phillips, of the Springfield Journal, is running against Hon. W. M. Springer, the present Democratic representative of the Twelfth District. Prof. Turner, of Jacksonville, who ran as an Independent the last time and elected Springer, is supporting the Republican ticket. The district is doubtful. Judge Tipton, of Bloomington, will retake the Thirteenth District from the Democrats. Mr. Stevenson, the present incumbent, is on the Democratic and Independent tickets. The chances are entirely in favor of the Republican candidate. Mr. Cannon is a candidate for re-election in the Fourteenth District. His opponent is Gen. Black, an eloquent and persuasive speaker, whom Mr. Cannon will beat.

There are three candidates in the Fifteenth District. Mr. Eden, the present member, will probably be elected over Chaffee, Republican, and Hunter, Independent. The district is in Egypt, and naturally Democratic. In the Sixteenth District, Mr. Ashcroft, Republican, will defeat Mr. Sparks, the Democratic member. Hon. W. R. Morrison, Chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, will be sent back by the Seventeenth District. His Republican opponent is Judge Baker, of Alton, a strong man every way, but the district is hopeless for Republicans. Hartsell, Democrat, will be re-elected in the Eighteenth District. In the Nineteenth District, the present member, Gen. Anderson, is again running as an Independent. Mr. Townsend, of Shawneetown, a protégé of ex-Congressman Sam Marshall, is the Democratic champion, and Mr. Bonham the Republican. Esther Anderson or Townsend will be elected, probably Anderson.

In 1874 the Democrats elected their candidates in the First, Second, Third, Seventh, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Districts, or thirteen of the nineteen Congressmen sent from the State. Of the foregoing they will probably lose the First, Second, Third, Seventh, Tenth, Thirteenth, and Sixteenth Districts. The Republicans in 1874 elected members in six districts, the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, Eighth, Ninth, and Fourteenth. They will lose the Ninth District. Balancing the account, the Republicans will recapture seven districts and lose one, making a net Republican gain of six, the totals being twelve Republicans to seven Democrats, instead of thirteen Democrats to six Republicans. Were it not for the Republican dissensions in the Ninth District the figures would be exactly reversed. The only question in Illinois is the amount of the Republican majority. In 1868 Gen. Grant got 51,000 majority; in 1872, 57,000. In 1874 the Democrats and Independents combined carried the State by 30,000. But while in 1872 there were 434,858 votes cast, there were only 364,474 cast in 1874, a difference of over 70,000. Of these "stay-at-homes," 50,000 it is estimated were Republicans who will vote this year. It is impossible to predict what the majority will be for Hayes and Wheeler and the State ticket. It may be anywhere between thirty and fifty thousand. The independents will vote for Cooper and Cary. How many votes they can poll remains to be seen. I imagine not one half they did two years ago. The State ticket is safe, but the Legislature is in danger. The Democrats and Independents are trying to sell out all other candidates to secure the Legislature and elect a successor to Senator Logan. Under our minority system of representation they may succeed, and it would not be surprising if there should be three parties in the Legislature, any two of which could elect a Senator.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE TWENTY-SECOND JOINT RULE—LETTER FROM SENATOR SHERMAN.

To the Editor of the Cincinnati Commercial:

In compliance with your request for the history of the manner in which the Twenty-second Joint Rule of the two Houses of Congress regulating the mode of counting the electoral vote for President was abrogated, I have looked through the proceedings of Congress at the last session, and find the following stages of the action on this question:

On the 15th of December, 1873, Mr. Edmunds, of Vermont, offered a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the joint rules of the Senate and House of Representatives, in force at the close of the last session of Congress, be and the same are hereby adopted as the joint rules of the two Houses at the present session.—Congressional Record, p. 220.

After a statement by Mr. Edmunds that his object was to obtain a report of the Committee on Rules as to whether the joint rules of the last session were in force without any vote at the present session, the resolution was referred to that committee.

Jan. 10, 1876. the Committee on Rules, by Mr. Hamlin, reported back the resolution with an amendment, making it a concurrent resolution of the two houses instead of a mere resolution of the Senate. He also stated his view of the joint rules, that they were only operative upon the two houses by acquiescence, as each house was by the Constitution empowered to make its own rules.

Mr. Morton then moved to except the Twenty-second Joint Rule, leaving the rest in force. Thereupon the resolution and amendment went over. Congressional Record, page 309.

On the 28th of January, 1876, the resolution was again taken up, and the amendment of Mr. Morton excepting the Twenty-second Joint Rule was adopted. Mr. Bayard then offered a substitute, which was rejected, and the resolution in the form of a concurrent resolution was adopted by the Senate. Congressional Record, page 520.

The action of the Senate on this resolution could only be understood by a reference to the debate on a bill introduced by Mr. Morton at the beginning of the session to provide for and regulate the counting of votes for President and Vice President. This bill was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It was reported back amended, and after much debate passed the Senate on the 24th of March, 1876, by a vote of 32 yeas to 25 nays. (See Cong. Record, pp. 1662, 1674, 1900, 1910, 1936, 1945.)

On the day of its passage Mr. Thurman, who had voted for it, moved a reconsideration. This was debated at different times, but no final action was had on the bill, and it is now pending in the Senate.

On the 14th of August, 1876, a message was announced to the Senate that the House had passed a resolution suspending the sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules for the remainder of the session. The action of the House was based upon the assumption that these rules, together with the other joint rules of previous sessions, were still in force. When this announcement was made, Mr. Hamlin said that "we have no sixteenth and seventeenth joint rules to suspend." Subsequently, on the same day, Mr. Edmunds, in response to the resolution of the House, offered the following:

Resolved, That the resolution of the House of Representatives, presented this day in the following words, to wit: 'Resolved, by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That the Sixteenth and Seventeenth Joint Rules be suspended for the remainder of the session,' be respectfully returned to the House of Representatives, with the statement that, as the House of Representatives has not notified the Senate of the adoption of joint rules for this present session, as proposed by the resolution of the Senate of the 20th day of January last, and transmitted to the House of Representatives on the 22d day of the same month, there are no joint rules in force.

And this resolution was unanimously adopted.

It seems that the House took no action upon the resolution of the Senate renewing the joint rules, except the Twenty-second Joint Rule, which regulates the manner of counting the electoral vote; nor did the House take action on the resolution just quoted, but assumed that the joint rules were in force; while the Senate early held that the joint rules continued only during the concurrence of the two Houses, and that no joint rules were in force.

Upon the main question, whether either House can recede from a joint rule adopted by a previous Congress, I have not the time to examine. Each House has the constitutional power to adopt its own rules of procedure. No authority can limit this power, except by a change of the Constitution. The rules of the House do not bind its successor, unless acquiesced in or adopted by it. An act of Congress approved by the President can not bind a subsequent House as to its rules and order of business. Joint rules are but mutual concurring opinions or rules of two independent bodies, and can not bind their successors or prevent either House from receding from them. They are matters of mutual amity and convenience, to continue which both parties agree to them, and to be revoked at the pleasure of either. Any other principle would destroy the independence of the respective houses. While, therefore, I am clear that the Senate had the power, and did recede from the Twenty-second Joint Rule, yet it is a matter of grave regret and solicitude that some mode of settling a disputed vote in the Electoral College has not been provided for, for it is easy to conceive a contingency when such a dispute would involve us in civil war. We can only hope that the good fortune that has attended us thus far will continue; that the very gravity of the danger will compel all parties fairly and honestly to submit to the will of the majority expressed in constitutional forms, and that the counting of the vote by the Vice President in the presence of both houses will be so impartially done as to command respect and acquiescence. It is a danger that should be guarded against by a Constitutional amendment. Though I voted for the bill pending in the Senate, I had and have doubts whether it was a sufficient security. Perhaps for the approaching count the two houses can agree upon a joint rule, free from the conceded defects and dangers of the former Twenty-second Joint Rule, though I hope that the popular choice will be so strong in favor of Gov. Hayes that there will be no manner of doubt as to the result. Very truly yours,

JOHN SHERMAN.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 26.—The following business was transacted:

No. 70.—County of Callaway, Mo., vs. Foster.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Western District of Missouri. The question in this case is whether certain bonds issued by the county in aid of the Louisiana and Missouri River Railroad Company are valid. The validity of the bonds was sustained below, and it is here maintained that the act under which the subscription was made is invalid because repugnant to the Constitution of the State; and that as municipal corporations have no inherent power to issue bonds, they must be governed by express law in such matters, and that all must take notice of this fact, and there can be no innocent holders without notice of bonds issued without such express authority. Hence there can be no claim on the part of the holders of bonds in this case that they are without notice of the want of authority to issue them. And it is said that any subsequent act of ratification on the part of the county, such as paying interest, &c., cannot help the claim of the holder; for if there was no power to issue, it is clear there was no power to ratify. William M. Evarts for plaintiff in error; D. M. Rose for defendant.

A STAGE FALLS OVER A PRECIPICE.

A telegram from Henry's Station, N. C., to the Raleigh News, dated 25th inst., says: "Last evening, just after dark, the lead horses of the stage from Asheville became unmanageable on the mountain two miles from here, and jumped headlong down a precipice of fifty feet, dragging the other horses and the stage with them. Mr. Nutt and wife, Mrs. W. Parsley and daughters, Mrs. W. P. Taylor and children, and Major Englehard, all of Wilmington, and Mrs. Brosher of Tennessee, passengers, were in the stage; Mr. Nutt, Major Englehard and Misses Parsley on top. Major Englehard got the young ladies off, jumping off with one, and assisted those inside to alight just as the stage fell over the precipice; one horse holding the stage up a moment, after the other three were dangling in the air, gave the necessary time to save the lives of all."

AFFAIRS IN FRANCE.

GOSSIP FROM THE FRENCH CAPITAL.

AN ALARMING INCREASE OF CRIME—IGNORANCE AND INSTRUCTION—CURIOUS CONCLUSIONS—EX-PRESIDENT THIERS' RECEPTION AT MARSEILLES—A FRENCHMAN'S OPINION OF AMERICAN CITIES—THE ORLEANS PRINCES.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Friday, Oct. 13, 1876.

The official report of the criminal procedure in France during the year 1874 has just appeared, and we learn from it that crime has increased in an alarming ratio. This is always the case when life is difficult and the charges upon citizens greater than they can bear. Crime diminished year after year from 1865 to 1869, as the prosperity of the country increased under the Empire, but since 1871 the number of criminals has been gradually increasing. Periods of national prosperity show comparatively few criminal condemnations. During the year 1874 the Assizes Courts pronounced 5,228 condemnations. Of these 1,939 were of men belonging to the agricultural class; 1,565 to the industrial, 712 to the commercial, 316 to what are called the liberal professions, 358 were servants, and 338 persons of no trade or profession, generally classed as vagabonds. The report makes one mistake in not distinguishing between ignorance and instruction. The peasants of France, the agricultural class, are notoriously ignorant, and this class furnishes the largest number for the Court d'Assizes. The Police Correctionelle had 168,835 affairs. In the ordinary tribunals we find 186,448 accused persons condemned: 72,832 to pay fines of various sorts; 105,552 to imprisonment from one month to one year; 8,064 to imprisonment for longer periods. In sum, 500,552 persons were condemned in the different courts during the year 1874, a large increase upon the preceding years, and a very large increase upon the last years of the Empire. Specialists are able to draw many curious conclusions from the figures here given. For example, we find that Judges pronounced condemnations nearly always, while juries acquitted thirty-e

Mr. Halstead replies in another column to the flippant comments of the World upon his Cooper Union speech in regard to the Southern claims. The World scarcely deserves the consideration which the editor of the Cincinnati Commercial accords to it. His letter will be very useful, however, if it direct attention to the exhaustive statement of Mr. Halstead upon a subject whose importance has been underrated, and whose direct bearing upon the canvass Mr. Tilden has admitted.

It is pretty generally known that the Democratic candidate for Governor is a Trustee of the Mutual Life Insurance Company. It has been pretty extensively rumored that the company had, at the solicitation of Mr. Smith M. Weed, agreed to contribute $25,000 to the Democratic campaign fund. On behalf of the President of that company, we are requested to say that no such intention was ever entertained, and that neither directly nor indirectly will any of the funds of the company be expended for any political purpose whatever.

To the Nation and other "independent" journals of the same purblind order, who wax enthusiastic over Mr. Tilden's canal "reform," we commend a perusal of our correspondent's letter from Oswego. Instead of "haling Canal 'bosses' off to prison," Mr. Tilden has been holding conferences with them with reference to his Presidential prospects. The "Canal Ring" have been offered full reinstatement in the party, with all the spoils and patronage thereto appertaining, provided they bring forth fruits meet for repentance in the shape of votes for Tilden. As all the other Rings in the State, from Brooklyn to Elmira, are supporting the sham "Reformer," the adhesion of the Canal Ring is only needed to make the combination perfectly symmetrical.

The editor of the World had better stick to his cooking utensils and his Debrett. If he must amuse himself by writing and publishing letters to himself, let him confine them to a judicious treatment of the pains and pleasures of "high life below stairs." The Times is quite able to deal with Mr. Julian Hawthorne without any suggestions from the sympathetic souls of the World office, and we imagine that the daily revolution of the Sun will not be seriously affected by the carping of the editor who writes under the signature of "F." what he has not courage enough to print even in the kitchen column. We beg that the editor of the World will not worry himself over the cry of "stop thief." No personal reference is intended. The pursuit is after the bigger rascals at present. The pickers up of unconsidered trifles can pursue their trade in peace.

The British expedition to the North Pole, commanded by Capt. Nares, has returned without bringing any reports of notable achievements. The Winter quarters of the leading vessel of the little fleet were at 82° 27′ north latitude, and a sledge-party reached 83° 20′. Capt. Hall, on his last voyage, reached 82° 16′ by sledges. The route followed by Capt. Nares was that which has been made so familiar by Kane, Hayes, Hall, and the numerous voyagers who have have searched for the remains of Franklin's expedition. This latest exploration ended in a field of compact ice which bounds the continent to the northward, so far as observations can determine. Capt. Nares must have been within a few hundred miles of the North Pole, but his painful experience does not encourage further ventures in that direction. This expedition sailed from England in the Spring of 1875, and has been absent but one Winter. The sledge equipments, from which much was expected, were constructed under the superintendence of Sir Leopold McClintock, and the vessels were fitted with every appliance which science and experience have found desirable.

NEW LIGHT ON MR. TILDEN'S CASE.

We publish to-day three documents which have a direct bearing on Mr. Tilden's fitness to be President of the United States, and which have a special reference to the charges of perjury and tax-grabbing which have been preferred against him. The first is a letter from Mr. Abram S. Hewitt in reply to a request for information "as to the truth or falsity of the charges which have been made regarding the payment of the legal and proper income tax by Gov. Tilden." Mr. Hewitt's answer is briefly that he believes Mr. Tilden's sworn returns for 1862 and 1863 to be correct, because Mr. Tilden said so; that in failing to make returns for subsequent years, Mr. Tilden did all that the law required of him; that Mr. Tilden was ready to supply the Assessor with all the information necessary to enable him to reach the proper result; and that in Mr. Tilden's own opinion he was assessed for a larger amount in the years when he made no returns than he ought legally to have paid.

The first statement is, of course, worthless. It is the veracity of Mr. Tilden which is the subject of controversy, and when proofs to the contrary are forthcoming, it is no answer to say that they are valueless because Mr. Tilden could not tell a lie. He has made one sworn affidavit which is totally inconsistent with another, and even Mr. Hewitt ought to see that the sophistical refinements of Mr. Sinnott have not shown how both can be true. The statement that Mr. Tilden did all that the law required of him in failing to make returns of his income is not true. The law affixed a penalty for the neglect of the plain duty of making a detailed statement of income, and the payment of the fine is the proof that he broke the law, not that he obeyed it. It is equally absurd to talk of Mr. Tilden supplying the Assessor with all the information required for arriving at a correct estimate of his income. The charge is that he purposely misled the Assessors by understatements of his income in 1862 and 1863, and that he concealed from the Government during the following years all evidence of the enormous gains on which he ought to have paid income tax. As we shall show, he is pursuing the same policy of suppression, and giving the same proofs of conscious guilt, now that the Government is attempting to get at that information which Mr. Hewitt says he was so ready to furnish. The statement that Mr. Tilden paid tax on a larger net income than he earned between 1863 and 1872 is grossly and palpably false.

This is a matter about which we need not bandy epithets with Mr. Hewitt. It is a simple issue of fact, which we challenge him to take up, promising that if we cannot convict Mr. Tilden of perjury and fraud, we shall make any amends to him which Mr. Hewitt may prescribe. Take his income for the year 1863 as a test of the credibility of Mr. Tilden's sworn affidavit, and his income for the year 1869 as a test of the accuracy of his statement that he paid more than his legal quota of tax during the years in which he made no returns. The Times has already published in detail the income-tax schedule filled out by Mr. Tilden in 1863. It shows a gross professional income of $8,350, and a gross income, from interest on investments, &c., of $11,795, on the larger portion of which three per cent. tax was paid by the corporations from which the dividends, &c., were received. There can be here no possible dispute touching the enormous interval that might exist between gross and net, i. e., taxable, income. Against the gross amount of Mr. Tilden's income, as stated by himself, we place the following items, whose accuracy we offer to prove to Mr. Hewitt's entire satisfaction, and which form but a small portion of Mr. Tilden's actual income for that year:

I.—PROFESSIONAL INCOME.
Fees from Chicago and North-western Railroad	$10,000
Fees paid on Feb. 4, 1864, but "earned" in 1863, from Peninsula Railroad Company	5,000
Fees for services in connection with consolidation of Rookford and Kenosha Railroad with Chicago and North-western	5,000
Part of professional income for 1863	$20,000
II.—INCOME FROM SPECULATION.
Profit on sale of Dayton and Union bonds	$30,000
Profit on Rookford and Kenosha bonds	3,000
Approximate total of gross earnings	$53,000
Sworn statement of gross earnings	$8,350

We are perfectly content to rest our case on these few items of Mr. Tilden's income for 1863. His income from interest, dividends, &c., is supplementary to these, as also the earnings from a large proportion of his legal and speculative business of which we have taken no account. Every dollar of the amount we have stated was "earned" in 1863, and at least all the income from speculation was received in cash for bonds which came into Mr. Tilden's possession in that year and were sold before its close. We have heard enough about the value of Mr. Tilden's "sacred honor;" let us have a distinct issue made on a year about whose "gross" and "net" income there is no chance to quibble. We have simply to add in regard to the year 1869, when Mr. Tilden paid tax on a net income of $17,000, that an inspection of the books of the undermentioned companies will show the receipts of the following amounts, which were duly earned in that year:

PROFESSIONAL INCOME.
Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railroad	$50,000
Union Pacific Railroad	16,000
Cleveland and Pittsburg Railroad	10,000
Part of income for 1869	$76,000

To which ought to be added Mr. Tilden's profits on speculation in Pittsburg and Fort Wayne stock, bought at 105 to 110 and sold at 160, the lowest estimate of which is $500,000. It will be observed that we publish to-day a copy of Mr. Tilden's account with the Union Pacific Railroad, and we offer to turn to the account and page of the books of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Company, on which the above payment appears, should the books be opened for that purpose.

That they will not be opened unless at the mandate of the courts is abundantly clear from the letter of District Attorney Bliss to Commissioner Raum, which will be found on our first page. We shall not attempt to summarize the points of that very terse and vigorous production. It states a portion of the case against Mr. Tilden with admirable clearness and precision, and its statements afford an excellent commentary on the honesty of the motives and the methods of the man whose friends are so much shocked to have accused of perjury and fraud. The detailed memorandum of Mr. Tilden's services to the Union Pacific Railroad will serve to illustrate the strictures of Mr. Bliss' letter, besides showing the kind of company kept by the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, when assenting to cover up the frauds of the Credit Mobilier of America. The memorandum is Mr. Tilden's own, and shows the somewhat irregular fashion in which Mr. Sinnott and he were accustomed to prepare the items of a bill for legal services. If, as we maintain, the entire exhibit of facts and documents which is made in our columns to-day admits of no reply, there can be but one opinion about the entire truthfulness of the worst of our charges against Mr. Tilden. The reply must be forthcoming as promptly as the letter about rebel claims, if it is to modify the verdict which will be passed by all unprejudiced persons upon the man who added the crime of false swearing to his swindling of the Government in the hour of its greatest need.

THE PRISON AMENDMENT.

One important matter will come before the people at the election on the 7th of November, which has thus far received but little attention from the public. It is the amendment to the State Constitution designed to reform the management of prisons. The prisons of this State, as is well known, have never been creditable in their management to the intelligence of the people. They fell too easily into the hands of petty politicians, and became prizes for the office-hunters in each political party. Of all places in the world, the prison is one where party management and partisan principles should not penetrate. It is, under the best of circumstances, a very delicate and difficult office to take charge of the criminals of a community. The duty is in part of a medical and curative character; it is ministering to minds diseased. The criminals of so large a State as New-York are a great multitude, and among them are many with both brains and moral organization in a disordered and unhealthy condition, whom a proper care would cure and restore sound to society. Many are young and heedless, or have yielded to quick temptations of anger or passion. All demand strict punishment, but a penalty softened by wise humanity and careful principles of reform. It is very much for the interests of society that such convicts should not leave their prisons worse than they entered.

This office demands a very high administrative ability. A large body of men and women are to be supported by the State, and necessarily at a very considerable expense. They can be made to pay the largest share of the cost of their maintenance, and thus relieve our burdened tax-payers, while improving themselves, or they can draw from the hard-pressed property-holders of the State the means of their support, and pass their time, partly in idleness, or in useless labor. Now, to manage a prison remuneratively, requires as much ability as to "run" a factory profitably. The Superintendent must buy his material in the cheapest manner, and at the best time; he must manufacture what is in demand, and with such labor as he has can prepare; he must be able to keep his men up to constant and willing work, for labor which is entirely involuntary is not of much value; he must cut down every expense, and be able to organize a great number of new and awkward hands. At the same time he is bound to have a broad view of his duties, and not introduce branches of manufacture which will compete too closely with hard-pressed industries outside.

Our readers know only too well how such a difficult and responsible place as this has been filled in past times. The posts of prison-keepers in this State, and the other places connected with them, have been the petty or profitable prizes for pot-house politicians to distribute among needy followers. Liquor-sellers, needy partisans, men without respectability or character, have been put in these delicate positions. A man was thought worthy to manage five hundred desperate or difficult prisoners, who could not take care of his own family or conduct any business of his own. The prison officials of the State, with a few exceptions, were notoriously incompetent men, and often of bad character. The result was that the prisons of New-York became a crying disgrace to the State. Reformers protested against them; the press was crowded with horrible incidents in their management; foreign visitors could not speak of them with any patience. As compared with our schools and churches, the prisons seemed to belong to another stage of civilization. They cost also immensely, and last year they drew from the pockets of our needy tax-payers nearly half a million of dollars over their earnings. Only one has ever been self-supporting, and that has been "kept out of politics," and has been left to the remarkable executive management of one man—we mean the Albany County Penitentiary, under Mr. Pillsbury.

An amendment has passed two consecutive sessions of the Legislature, has been approved by the conventions of both political parties and their leaders, designed in part to remedy this great evil in New-York. It is intended to remove the management of prisons from party politics, and to place them all under one non-political Superintendent, to be appointed by the Governor and Senate. To our mind this does not meet the full difficulties of the case. Such an official will still control all the subordinate positions; he will make all the appointments in the prisons. If he is appointed by a Governor and Senate who are of one political party, there will unquestionably be an understanding with him as to his patronage. The old evils may come back, of party appointments to the State prisons. On the other hand, it may reasonably be urged that the "one-man" responsibility is likely to produce a higher class of officials, that the appointments of the Senate and Governor have generally been the best in the State administration, and that this was all that could be got through. The true form of the amendment, we believe, should have been the creation of a small board, say of three members, appointed by the highest State courts, and thus entirely independent of parties. Still, this amendment is much better than none, and will be the beginning of great reforms. We earnestly invite all interested in the public welfare to vote for this amendment on the day of election.

A REFORMED SLANDERER.

We are confident that all good men will rejoice to learn that the Tribune has forsworn slander and resolved to live virtuously. It was high time. We do not now recall more flagrant instances of the violation of the amenities of private life than those which this same sanctimonious sheet has committed. It has seemed to fancy that the shortest way to annihilate a man was to attack his private character or that of his family. Even the children were not spared. The number of personal and social grudges which "the young editor" has gratified in the columns of the Tribune is as extensive as his animosities, which is saying a great deal. But now, at the eleventh hour, when peculiar circumstances make iniquity in certain directions especially uncomfortable, the Tribune draws a long face and protests with a great deal of pretty language against personalities in politics. It is horrified that a candidate's "private character and personal integrity" should be assailed with what it calls "the most unscrupulous energy and malicious vindictiveness of purpose." It sweetly says that it had hoped that the opponents of Gov. Tilden would have refrained from saying anything unpleasant about him. It was really too bad to call things by their right names. People do not stop, says the Tribune, to inquire into the details of the private life of a candidate. Then, why has this suddenly-reformed rake been the loudest and shrillest of all journalistic scandal-mongers?

It would be tedious to quote the flagrant examples of personal abuse which this lately-virtuous newspaper has given its readers. The personal and private character of the President of the United States, whether he was or was not a candidate, has always been a fair mark for the billingsgate of the Tribune. Even his thoughtless children have been pursued and made the object of the mud-throwing which this pink of perfection now protests against with such charming candor. The decent readers of that newspaper have not forgotten the scavenger-like industry with which it followed a United States Senator, and printed the disgusting details of a private social scandal which it professed to have unearthed somewhere. And now, rolling up the whites of his eyes, the reformed slanderer simpers that he "had hoped" that there would be no more "petty meannesses, scurrility and blackguardism, gross personalities, coarseness, malignity, and brutality" between the wind and his nobility. What a pity it is that these superfine sentiments had not been kept in view while the Tribune was abusing every candidate to which it was opposed, and conducting a private and exclusive investigation into the personal character of every object of its petty spite.

Perhaps this virtue may be carried to an excess. People whose closet has a private skeleton are apt to be over-forward in prescribing a policy of silence. Nevertheless, we do say that it is going just a little too far to speak, as the Tribune did, of D. C. Calvin's award in the Starin case as "an unfortunate decision." And Mr. Calvin himself, considering the unpleasant treatment which he has received from his own party, must have been surprised when the Tribune referred to him as one who is "the object of malicious attack from spiteful little people whose private schemes he has not furthered." But we respectfully submit that this is due to the zeal of a late convert. In its new-born respect for the private character of candidates, this unsavory nominee of John Kelly is given a clean bill of health, with the remark that those who say aught against him are "spiteful little people." This is a dreadful thing to say, because it comes so near being what our sweet-tempered contemporary calls "the rapid exchange of sour epithets."

It is a brand new doctrine, however, that the personal life and character of a candidate are nothing whatever to the voting public. Of course, it proves nothing to say that the Democrats have overhauled Gov. Hayes stable, kitchen-garden, and butter-tubs. But it does matter something to the average voter whether a candidate is an honest man or not. The motive of inquiry in such case, however, is a very different one from that which has usually prompted the abuse of this new apostle of high morals in politics. To send detectives on the track of a political opponent, and to degrade a newspaper by printing unwholesome details of private life, is all right, it appears, if the journalistic Miss Nancy has a private grudge to feed. But to inquire whether a candidate for office is what he professes to be is very naughty indeed. The reformed scold lets fly a ball of mud at somebody, and while he is picking it out of his ear, cries, "Be good, my little dears! Look at me, and see how virtuous and how happy I am!" There may be a horrible suspicion that the hands concealed under this spotless sheet are soiled with the filth of many missiles. Merchants, politicians, office-holders, and public men innumerable, have been the objects, before now, of this mud-throwing. They will be glad to learn that the dirtiest mud-thrower of all has resolved to live cleanly.

A MODEL CITY.

Dr. Richardson is an English Scientific Person who has invented a new style of scientific city, which is shortly to be built upon land already secured for the purpose. All that remains to be done is for Dr. Richardson to discover the money wherewith to build his city, and to invent a population willing to live in it. It is to be hoped that he will succeed in both these endeavors, for the plan of his new city, as set forth by him in an elaborate pamphlet, is extremely ingenious and attractive.

Hygeia, as the model city will be called, is to be built on the slope of a hill, so as to afford ample facilities for draining, and for sliding in icy weather. It is to be laid out in rectangular form, and the streets are to be paved with wood set in asphalt. There will be no street railways, but underneath each of the principal avenues will be underground railroads. The houses, of which there are to be exactly twenty thousand, will be built of brick, and placed on vaulted foundations, without cellars. Each house is to be nicely surrounded with trees, and in addition to hot and cold water and gas, will be supplied with ozone from a central ozone manufactory. The sewage is to be used for farming purposes, and the corpses of dead inhabitants will be buried in wicker baskets, wherever they will do the most good, instead of being wasted in cemeteries. None of the residents will be allowed to drink wine or use tobacco, and even the chimneys will be forbidden to smoke. It is Dr. Richardson's opinion that with the aid of an able municipal medical staff, the death-rate in Hygeia will be reduced to 8 in every 1,000. As the death-rate in New-York is 28 per 1,000, there is no doubt that the Hygeians will be, in comparison, an exceptionally healthy people. But how the Doctor's municipal medical men are to amuse themselves in such an exasperatingly healthy city he might find some difficulty in explaining.

In spite of the manifest advantages which the new city will possess, it is possible that Dr. Richardson will be disappointed in the actual working of certain details of his plan. For example, he has decided that the population will be "100,000, living in 20,000 houses, built on 4,000 acres of land," and he dwells with much emphasis on the fact that the health of his city will depend to a great extent upon this "equal distribution of the inhabitants." Now, at first he may find no difficulty in obtaining his 100,000 inhabitants and in distributing them in families of five each. The trouble is, that after he has thus nicely sorted and arranged his citizens, they will immediately proceed to uproot his "equal distribution." What will the Doctor do when a scientific family of five persons is suddenly increased by the addition of a scientific baby? Then will there be six persons in that disordered household, and the "equal distribution" of the inhabitants of his city will be compromised. He cannot build a new house to meet the contingency, for he has strictly limited the city to 20,000 houses—and even if a new house could be built and inhabited exclusively by the intruding infant, his scheme of equal distribution would be spoiled. Unless every inhabitant of the new city is compelled to sign a lease containing a covenant against the introduction of infants, there will be no such thing as the permanent equal distribution of 100,000 people in 20,000 houses. Doubtless Dr. Richardson has entirely overlooked this weak spot in his calculations, but he will have it fixed upon his attention to a maddening extent before the end of the first year of his city's existence.

Again, the plan of building houses without cellars, and placing the kitchen on the upper floor of each house, is at first glance unobjectionable, but a little scrutiny will show that it has its faults. Where will Dr. Richardson's people keep their old bottles, and where will the family cat be placed at night? Natural philosophy teaches that the smell of heated dinners ascend. How then can the careful housewife, living in a city where all the kitchens are on the top floors, ascertain what the neighbors intend to have for dinner? Very probably Dr. Richardson imagines that in a purely scientific city there will be no crime or disorder, and no use for policemen. He must admit, however, that it is possible for scientific citizens to quarrel, and even to steal fossils, and valuable bugs. In such an event, the Police, instead of darting out of the area gate and capturing the offender, would have to descend from lofty kitchens, where their soup would grow cold before they could carry their prisoners to the station-house and return to the cook's fireside. It must also be remarked that in this ingenious city there is not the slightest provision for a single clothes-line. It may be that the inventor looks upon clothes as unscientic and objectionable, for he remarks that "from the sleeping apartments old clothes, &c., are to be rigorously excluded." If a man cannot have his clothes in his bedroom, on going to bed, what is he to do with them? Is there to be a vast undressing room in the centre of the city where every one is to deposit his clothes at night, or is the population to dispense with clothing altogether? This is a question which Dr. Richardson cannot ignore, and which must be answered before he can induce respectable people to live in his city.

However satisfactory the plea of a Hygeian house may be to the enthusiastic sanitarian, it cannot be denied that it will seem dreary and ugly to most other people. Neither carpets, paint, plaster, nor wall paper will be used in any of Dr. Richardson's buildings. The floors will be of wood and the walls will be of glazed brick. A wall into which a picture-nail cannot be driven, or the pin of an impaled butterfly be thrust, or upon which a match cannot be scratched will be a cold and glittering mockery. Let Dr. Richardson try to live in one of his model rooms himself and find how he likes to get up in the middle of a Winter's night to turn on the ozone, or to write a note informing the people next door that if the baby which he has reason to believe they have surreptitiously introduced, is not equally distributed all over the city with the aid of nitro-glycerine, their lease will be instantly canceled. After he has pierced his bare feet with a few splinters from the floor and exhausted his whole stock of matches by vainly scratching them upon the glazed surface of the wall, perhaps he will find that carpets have their uses, and that glazed walls do not alone constitute a paradise. Indeed, he would do well to try the experiment of distributing himself equally in every one of his houses before he urges other people to live in them. It is quite possible that he may find room to alter his plans, at least so far as to provide the city with a good comfortable lunatic asylum, containing a separate room for the inventor and builder of Hygeia.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The Democratic party presents as its candidate for the office of President of the nation a man who has been unable to answer the charge that he committed perjury and fraud to evade the payment of taxes.

The present Democratic candidate for the Presidency refused to take part in the great Union meeting in 1861, because he could not see which side was coming out the victor. So he refused, ten years later, to attend the great reform meeting at Cooper Institute, because Tweed was still all-powerful. Now, when the Union is secured, and Tweed has worn a felon's garb, Mr. Tilden declares he was always loyal, and trades on his public service in giving the Tammany chief an additional kick toward the Penitentiary.

Mr. Belmont says the country will be a gainer by "the great financial wisdom of Mr. Tilden." Mr. Tilden applied this mental quality, some years ago, to the affairs of the Chicago and Galena Railroad, and the result was a "consolidation" of that well-managed and dividend-paying road with another and hopelessly bankrupt concern. Mr. Tilden and his friends filled their pockets by this operation, and hundreds of farmers who lived along the line of the Galena road and had invested their earnings in it, were utterly ruined.

There were Democrats of prominence in Ohio in the beginning of the canvass who openly charged that Tilden had secured the support of the Southern delegates to the St. Louis Convention by the corrupt use of money. It would be truly a symmetrical state of affairs if the candidate who holds himself up as the champion reformer of America should have bought the nomination for the Presidency and paid for the votes of the solid South with money dishonestly withheld from the Collector of income taxes.

Every Democrat who opposes my claims, cries the great reformer, is a canal robber or the associate of thieving contractors. Every Republican who opposes me is a corruptionist and a plunderer of the National Treasury. Mr. Tilden was a member of the Legislature when the "thieving contractors'" bills were passed, and the official record shows no neither spoke nor voted against one of them. When the National Government was in most urgent need of every dollar which could be raised, Mr. Tilden was cheating it by swearing to false income tax returns.

Ex-Canal Reform Commissioner Magone, who is known throughout the interior of the State as "Dan" Magone, is an excellent example of Gov. Tilden's administrative reform, this gentleman having divided his time equally between investigating the canal management and the running of the District Conventions. There is scarcely a single district in the State in which Dan was not around drumming up Tilden delegates, "dictating nominations and governing the caucuses," when he was supposed to be serving on the "non-partisan commission."

The prospect of President Tilden applying his "great financial wisdom" to the Southern war claims is rather alarming in these hard times. Judged by the methods in which he exercised his wisdom on railroads, he would secure the "consolidation" of the claims with the national debt, issue the additional bonds made necessary by this to his friends and followers, "appropriate" a large portion of these himself, make out false statements of the transaction and take oath that they were true; and finally, be out of the country when called upon to explain.

The President of the United States is bound by his solemn oath of office to faithfully observe the laws and cause them to be obeyed. Mr. Tilden, who aspires to this high office, is the man to whom the nation is principally indebted for the disgrace of the Credit Mobilier scandals. He it was who drew up the scheme which made them possible. Read the evidence given before the Investigating Committee, showing how the clique of speculators who wished to defraud the Government, sought assistance of the present Democratic candidate for the Presidency; how he showed them the way to do it; and the fees he received for his services.

The Democracy are playing the same game in the Presidential contest this year they have been playing for thirty years. The game is to secure the vote of the Southern States as a unit, and then add enough Northern States to turn the scale. In 1844 Polk declared for the annexation of Texas to secure a solid South; in 1852 Pierce was nominated in the interests of slavery, and secured a solid South, and in 1856 Buchanan was elected and Fremont defeated by a solid South. In 1860, because the solid South was outwitted at a popular election it made a solid onslaught on the Union, to retain by force possession of the Government which it could not retain by law. This old sectional game is being played again, but will not win, unless New-York falls in her duty in the hour of supreme peril to the nation.

Correspondents speak of the extremely favorable impression that the beautiful wife of Gov. Hayes is making at the receptions in Philadelphia. Since we have learned from sad and satisfactory experience the importance of having a true lady in the Nation's Executive Mansion, perhaps a word about Mrs. Gov. Hayes may be pardoned at this time. This accomplished woman, like her husband, is of patriotic revolutionary stock. She was liberally educated in one of the best collegiate institutions in Ohio, having completed the regular college course of study. During the war, her ceaseless devotion to the interests and wants of the Union Soldiers and their families made her name loved and revered by them. When her husband was dangerously wounded she sought him literally on the field of battle, and, while nursing and dressing herself his wounds, lived in camp on the hard fare of the common soldier. In the work of enlarging the public charities of the State, and in all benevolent and humane undertakings, the Governor of Ohio found the power that prevailed in his own household. This best type of womanhood unites the highest of the home virtues with all the accomplishments that society asks or can ever find in those favored few who fill the proudest positions of influence and power in the land.

It is most fortunate that the relative experience in the public service of the rival candidates for the Presidency should come up at this time for general discussion. The simple statistical fact is that Gov. Hayes has had more than four times—almost five times—the experience in public office that Tilden has had. Here are the specifications: Hayes served three years as City Solicitor of Cincinnati. This experience made him familiar with the subject of taxation, municipal law, the best methods of meeting assaults on the public purse, and with the municipal affairs generally of a great city. He had five years' experience as an officer in the Army. This made him every way stronger, more robust and manly, developed executive faculties, made purer his patriotism and nobler his character, made him acquainted with the military art and military affairs, and made him also a judge of men. Hayes had three years' experience in Congress, having resigned when made a candidate for Governor one year before the expiration of his second Congressional term. This made him familiar with the forms, rules, and methods of doing the business of the law-making branch of the Government. Being Chairman of a committee, he understands the controlling power of committee-work in legislation, and being overwhelmed with soldiers' petitions before the departments, he was made familiar with the modes of transacting the business of the executive branch. And lastly, his five years of executive experience as the Governor of a State growing into greatness under his wise rule, has peculiarly fitted him for the discharge of those higher executive duties which are similar in kind. To offset these sixteen years of public service, Mr. Tilden can only offer one year and three-quarters of executive experience, about a year in a State Legislature, and a few months in a constitutional convention—in all, say, three years of civil service. With these facts of record before him, will not the common-sense voter pronounce Tilden's talk about Mr. Hayes lacking "experience" the solid brass of presumption and cheek?

POLITICAL NOTES.

Mr. Brooks Adams, of Massachusetts, who, being suddenly taken ill, was unable to fill his appointments to speak for Tilden in this State, addressed a Democratic meeting in Exeter, N. H., last Monday night.

Congressman Ben Hill, of Georgia, is said to have written to a friend in Washington that he will be unmuzzled when Congress again convenes. That will be "after the election," and he will not be able to hurt Tilden.

The Republicans of Utica propose to hold a mass meeting on Thursday, Nov. 2, day and evening. It is intended to make it a great demonstration, and the Republican clubs of all the central counties are invited to participate.

The Hempstead (Long Island) Inquirer says that the nomination of Mr. George Bulmer for Assembly by the Democrats in that (the Second Queens) district meets with the unanimous disapproval of the Democratic and Independent press of the district.

The Republican State Committee of Maryland has decided that Mr. W. Elwell Goldsborough is the regular candidate for Congress in the Third District of that State. This rules out Mr. Alexander H. Hobbs. Mr. Goldsborough was first nominated by the Reformers.

Congressman William Mutchler, although claiming to be regularly nominated for re-election by the Democrats of the Tenth District of Pennsylvania, and to be the choice of two-thirds of the party, has withdrawn, in compliance with the mandate of Mr. Hewitt, leaving the field to the rival Democratic candidate, Samuel A. Bridges.

A local report of a Democratic meeting in Delaware County contains this statement: "At the conclusion, W. M. Murray, Esq., announced that on Wednesday evening the Democracy would be addressed by Col. Fellows, a real, live rebel Colonel. At this the audience rose to their feet, waved their hats, cheered, &c., and it was several minutes before quiet could be restored. This is the feeling of the Democracy here."

The Columbus (Ga.) Enquirer thus expresses itself in behalf of the Southern Tildenites: "We have never received a benefit from the Republicans; all their acts have been those of oppression. We have done all that our honor would allow us to do to gain their favor, but only to find that we were to be the victims of their hatred. The Democratic Party has stood by us. All the rights and privileges we have they gained for us."

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

THE UNITED STATES TREASURY—CHIEF OF THE SECRET SERVICE—APPOINTMENTS BY THE PRESIDENT—THE ALABAMA CLAIMS.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—Mr. E. L. Stanton, son of the late Secretary Stanton, and who has occupied the position of Attorney for the District of Columbia since the formation of the present District Government, has tendered his resignation to take effect on the 31st inst., and it has been accepted by the District Commissioners.

The Controller of the Treasury has this day declared a dividend of sixty per cent. in favor of the creditors of the Watkins (N. Y.) National Bank.

The Treasury to-day received $813,117 in national bank notes for redemption. The total disbursements of silver thus far made by the Treasury amount to $21,000,000. One hundred thousand dollars in five and six per cent. bonds, held by the Treasury to secure national bank circulation, were withdrawn to-day, and four and a half per cents substituted. The receipts from Internal Revenue to-day were $405,395 09, and from Customs $613,012 35.

The Secretary of War has directed that the officers in charge of the section of the War Department display at the International Exhibition shall make out and forward to Major Lyford, the representative of the War Department, by Nov. 6, lists of the property in their possession purchased from Exhibition appropriations that it may desirable to retain by their several bureaus at the close of the Exhibition.

James J. Brooks, of Philadelphia, for a long time employed in the Government secret service, has been appointed to succeed Elmer Washburne as chief of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury, and to-day entered upon his new official duties.

Postmaster General Tyner returned to the city to-day, and resumed his duties at the Department, after attending the Cabinet meeting.

The following balances were in the United States Treasury to-day at the closing hour: Currency, $12,624,707; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $40,105,000; coin—including $33,772,700 in coin certificates—$74,741,271; out-standing legal tenders, $346,494,760.

The following appointments of Internal Revenue Gangers have been made: Frank H. Rice, First District of Wisconsin; Michael Mallon, Twenty First District of New-York; John Howard, W. L. Foulk, D. Wilson, and H. C. McArthur, Fourth District of Missouri; S. S. Waterman, Isaac W. McCaskey, Samuel M. Dickson, Charles H. Lathrop, and Charles H. Noyes, First District of Illinois. The following Storekeepers have been appointed: Charles F. Dodge, E. S. Hulburd and Parsons Cook, First District of Illinois; Henry Koehler, First District of Wisconsin. A. D. Holden was appointed Inspector of Tobacco for the Sixth District of Kentucky.

In the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims to-day the following judgments were announced for the loss of personal effects and wages by the destruction of various vessels: No. 1,567, Huribia Pina, Administrator, New-Bedford, Mass., $365; No. 1,568, Jose D. Andra, New-Bedford, Mass., $412; No. 1596, Thomas Collins, $450; No. 1,599, Manual De F. Estais, Boston, Mass., $270; No. 1,604, Peter Antoine, Boston, Mass., $220; No. 1,603, Francisco L. De Fraga, Boston, Mass., dismissed; No. 1,611, William A. Frader, Yolo County, Cal., $613 34; No. 1,653, Gustav White, New-York City, $450; No. 1,666, Patrick J. Byrns, Chicago, Ill., $750; No. 1,667, James Mackey, New-York City, $600; No. 1,668, Joseph Tratton, Administrator, Machiasport, Me., $700; No. 1,672, Peter Leary, New-York City, dismissed; No. 1,576, Jose F. Pereira, New-Bedford, Mass., for loss of wages, $190; No. 1,687, Catharine Yoekel, New-Orleans, for loss of merchandise by the destruction of the Electric Spark by the Florida, on July 10, 1864

THE SOUTHERN WAR CLAIMS

MR. HALSTEAD'S REPLY TO "THE WORLD."

THE ONLY POINT IN TILDEN'S LETTER WHICH REQUIRES ANALYSIS REVIEWED—THE SUPREME COURT AND THE CLAIMS—THE DEMOCRATIC WAY TO MAKE TIMES GOOD AND MONEY PLENTY.

To the Editor of the World:

In the leading article of this morning's issue of your journal, I am called upon as an "expert" in Southern claims, and asked what I have to say in reply to your remarks on my Cooper Union address. I venture to assume that you want to hear from me, and avail myself with much pleasure of the opportunity that your call affords, to notice certain lines of commentary upon that address, that have a tendency to misdirect the attention of the public. The feeling that I experience of obligation to you for this call, is akin to the sense of grateful appreciation that I enjoyed of the timeliness of Gov. Tilden's letter, in which, on the morning of my deliverance on Southern claims, he kindly testified that the subject to which I was about addressing myself was the business and burning question of the day.

I do not claim to be an "expert" in Southern claims, but my attention has been for some time directed to them; and I have been deeply impressed by their magnitude and by the threatening force that is behind them, while I have been surprised by the lack of general understanding of the extent and imminence of the danger, that appears in the levity or indifference with which the matter has until now been treated in this part of the country. Gov. Tilden is not a man who lacks capacity in affairs, and his letter of the 24th shows that while his courage may be shaken he has not lost the clearness of his faculty of apprehension or the cunning of his right hand. In the contingency of Democratic success, if there is anything in the performance of the promises that letter contains, that proves his announcement of the "futility" of the "self-imposed restraints" of candidates to have been an error in his case—it there happens to be any thing within his capacity that hinders the solid South in its movement to "get even" in money with the North for the war—I promise to take the sincerest satisfaction in recognizing it, and to give him all the help I can command; for I am sure in that case he will stand in great need of friends not of his party.

There are half a dozen lines only in Gov. Tilden's letter that seem to require analysis. The quotations from the Constitution and his Message are irrelevant, but he says:

"No claim for any loss or damage incurred by disloyal persons arising from the late war, whether covered by the fourteenth amendment or not, will be recognized or paid. The cotton tax will not be refunded. I shall deem it my duty to veto every bill providing for the assumption or payment of any such debts, losses, damages, claims, or for the refunding of any such tax."

Gov. Tilden has neglected to notice that the advocacy of the war claims in the South is based upon the theory that "we are all loyal now;" and he has only to accept this favorite Southern doctrine of the day, and the declaration by Mr. Cabell, of Virginia, in his report from the Committee on War Claims that the loyalty that results from official pardon is retroactive, to justify himself in not vetoing any of the acts of legislation that he specifies.

I quoted in the Cooper Union address the report on the 30th of June, 1876, from the House Committee on War Claims that accompanied the bill for the relief of Pickrell and Brooks. Mr. Cabell said in it that when a claimant had a special pardon, and was within the provisions of the several proclamations and general pardon of amnesties, the proof of such pardon was "equivalent to affirmative proof under the statute of captured and abandoned property, that the party never gave aid and comfort to the rebellion." Therefore any claim preferred by a pardoned rebel would be a loyalist's claim under the law, and Gov. Tilden's promise to veto the claims of disloyal peraons would not have effect in their cases; and there are very few rebels now of any other sort.

Mr. Cabell also stated that the United States Government stood for "property taken" in the position of trustee for the owners. The World quotes a decision by Chief Justice Waite, and contends that he holds precisely the doctrine announced by Mr. Cabell. If this were so, it would justly increase the public disquietude about Southern claims, for it would appear that the highest judicial tribunal in the country had opened wide the gate for the Confederate advance upon the Treasury; and this would be quick and thorough corroboration of my guarded expression of a fear that the Supreme Court was not to be relied upon as an invulnerable barrier. I thought the process of reorganization would be required, before the court could reach the point that, according to the World, it has already passed.

With respectful deference, however, to the legal talent of the World, I submit that Waite's decision, that the Government stands in the position of trustee for persons who under a special act of Congress were entitled to the proceeds of captured and abandoned property, "and for those whom it [the Government] should thereafter recognize as entitled" —words the World is at pains to print in italics—is far from being as comprehensive as Mr. Cabell's report that the Government was the trustee for the owners of all "property taken" for the use of the Army, and that a rebel with Andrew Johnson's pardon was in possession of "affirmative proof" that he "never gave aid and comfort to the rebellion." I do not care to waste a word in discussing with anybody the political character of the Supreme Court. I am only concerned to show the people that if they place the Democratic Party in power there are no sufficient restraints to prevent the "solid South" from making a raid on the Treasury of the United States; and I thank the World for the assistance it has unwittingly given in making conspicuous this important fact, and throwing under a strong light Mr. Cabell's very significant report.

Reference is made to the "contrivances of Congress" in 1863 touching "Captured and Abandoned Property," but I am not in the least degree anxious to show that when the Republicans were in power in Congress they made a perfect record. I am aware of the misconduct of Republicans in and out of Congress, and have spent a good deal of time and labor in attempting to persuade them of the errors of their ways. The "contrivances" that are of interest at this time are those of the Confederates to obtain out of the people at large compensation for their private losses during the war.

In 1872 (April 13) Mr. Ritchie, of Maryland, denounced the act of July 4, 1864, that restricted payments for "property taken" to loyal claimants, because there were strict requirements that proof should be had not only of actual taking, but of loyalty, and because provision was not made to pay for property damaged and destroyed. Mr. Willshire, of Arkansas, in House resolution (last session) No. 553, desires to "facilitate the adjustment and settlement" of claims, and proposes the abolishment of the Claims Commission, and that the juries of the vicinage shall be called to levy damages. Mr. Riddle, of Tennessee, has introduced a bill directing "compensation for the use and occupation" of property "to ALL citizens," and to facilitate getting at the public money one witness is declared enough to "effectually establish the fact" of the appropriation of property. These are among the contrivances to turn over the property of the people of the United States to Southern rebels as "indemnity" for the "aggressive war" made upon them by the Nation.

Mr. Riddle, of the Fourth Tennessee District, the author of the bill to expedite the payment of the claims of Confederates, has been made so popular by his urgency in their behalf that his competitor has withdrawn from the canvass, and the legislation that Mr. Riddle proposes is regarded as the way to "make times good and money plenty." Now, Mr. Riddle and Gov. Tilden would not be troubled to reach an understanding and co-operate in the interests of "reform and economy." Mr. Riddle would not pay the claims of disloyalists. He, too, would veto such things. He stands upon a broad principle. He discounts Mr. Cabell's report that a pardoned rebel has affirmative proof that he was always loyal. He says "all Southern people are loyal now," and always were so in the eye of the law. Can a decision by Chief Justice Waite be found covering this ground also? Accept it, and Tilden's promises pass away, and the Solid South comes to the front for its indemnity.

You tell us, "The great majority of the South does not seek any payment of Southern claims." You are mistaken. There are tens of thousands of war claims carefully prepared in the South, awaiting, with the Willshire resolution and the Riddle bill, to accept, according to Mr. Cabell, from their "Trustee" pecuniary redress for all grievances. Douglas Jerrold said of the soil of Australia, that if you tickled it with a hoe it would laugh with a harvest. It is the peculiarity of the Southern soil that wherever it was tickled by a United States bayonet there is an eruption of Confederate claims; and the solid South, if the Democratic Party obtains possession of the Government, will speedily disentangle the "futile" technicalities of Gov. Tilden's letter, interposed in the newspapers between them and the Treasury when the South was utterly committed to him, and the Presidential election was plainly to be decided by New-York

You speak of the already heavy taxation of the South, and that the people of that section would not tax themselves to pay their own claims. The plea of the South is poverty. But the plan is to establish equality in money matters with the North. Three-fourths of the revenue out of which the claims would be paid must come from the citizens that adhered to the Union in the war.

And do you forget that a vast majority of the Western Democrats are fully persuaded that the way to make the people happy and wealthy, to make "times good and money plenty," is to print "more greenbacks?" They desire to "make the amount of currency equal to the wants of trade." They would have war times in Wall street in time of peace. Gov. Tilden yielded the point that the date fixed for resumption should be repealed; and some knowledge of Western Democrats leads me to believe that if he keeps their favor, he has but taken the first step in a long walk of concessions on the currency question, in which he will have to unlearn the teachings of his forty years of public discussion of that range of subjects.

In the event of a Democratic Administration the Solid South and the Solid Mississippi Valley would be united on the basis of "more greenbacks" to pay Southern claims and carry out the rebel and inflation programme; and the fact that the inevitable end must be general repudiation would not deter but rather inspire them; for in the abyss of bankruptcy there would be the Equalization of the finances of the Southern Confederacy with the United States. I doubt whether Gov. Tilden's bosom would fortify the country like a wall of adamant against the allied powers of the solid South as a claimant and the Rag Baby as the Master of the mysteries of "wise finance."

COMPANY ORDERS No. 6.—1. This company will assemble in citizens' dress at the Armory, on Sunday, Oct. 29, at 11:45 A. M., to pay the last tribute of respect to our late commandant, Capt. GEORGE WILLIAM SMITH.

2. At a meeting of the company held this evening, the following resolutions were unanimously adopted

Whereas, It has pleased Almighty God in his Divine Wisdom to remove from our midst our late and beloved commandant, George William Smith, who but recently severed his connection with this company after a period of service in this regiment extending over forty years; therefore be it

Resolved, That it is with feelings of the most profound sorrow that we learn of the death of one who had endeared himself to us, not only by long association, but by his sterling qualities as a soldier, unselfishly devoted to the interests of his command, and as a warm and true-hearted friend.

Resolved, That we tender to his bereaved family our heartfelt sympathy, coupled with the assurance that we feel with them that his presence will be sadly missed in civil as well as military life.

Resolved, That these resolutions be entered upon the minutes of this company, and a copy of the same be engrossed and transmitted to the family.

That we attend the funeral in a body, and that the usual badge of mourning be worn, and the company room draped for the usual period.

COLERIDGE'S ANCIENT MARINER, ILLUSTRATED BY DORE.

THE RIME OF THE ANCIENT MARINER. By SAMUEL TAYLOR COLERIDGE. Illustrated by GUSTAVE DORE. A magnificently illustrated and sumptuous volume. Folio, cloth, $10.

The imagination of Gustave Doré finds a congenial atmosphere in Coleridge's wild and fantastic poem. Unhampered by the necessity of adherence to probabilities, he allows his genius full play, and, with a daring freedom equal to the poet's, depicts the magnificent visions inspired by the woodrous story. Coleridge himself could not have desired an artistic interpreter in more thorough sympathy with his own spirit; and it is not an extravagant prediction that henceforth the artist's name will be as intimately associated as that of the poet with the "Ancient Mariner."

The right subject was chosen for M. Doré when they chose for him the "Ancient Mariner." The "Ancient Mariner," like the "Wandering Jew," gave him room for his best.—The Academy, London.

A LONG TIME AGO.

A Novel.
BY META ORRED.
8vo., Paper. 50 cents.

"A Long Time Ago" is a sweet, pathetic story of domestic life in which love, sorrow, tragedy, and happiness blend as they do in the world of realities. There are qualities in the story and in the characters which awaken the reader's sympathies and hold his attention from the first to the last page, although the plot is entirely free from sensationalism and extravagance, and the style studiously simple.

Certainly a meritorious production, and reflects much credit upon its writer.—Athenæum, London.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Mr. Walter Thornbury has rewritten and greatly enlarged his Life and Correspondence of J. M. W. Turner.

—"The Vivisection Act" is the Right Hon. Robert Lowe's contribution to the October Contemporary Review.

—Rev. Stopford A. Brooke's Theology of the English Poets, republished by D. Appleton & Co., has reached a third edition in England.

—The new illustrated edition of Bryant's Poems, which D. Appleton & Co. have just brought out, is every way worthy of the poems and the publishers.

—The Cornell Review, a monthly magazine conducted by the students of Cornell University, contains an excellent article on Walter Savage Landor, by Mr. Spencer H. Coon.

—My Godmother, and Tales about Many Lands, by Mrs. T. K. Hervey, author of Rock Light, Children of the Pear-tree, &c., will be published by R. Washburne, London, in November.

—The American Catalogue of Books in print up to July, 1876, is in a forward state of publication. The editors are now revising copy, preparatory to alphabetizing and arranging for the printer, and the work will be issued in a few months.

—Mr. Prentice Mulford, whose brilliant sketches of life in California were so characteristic a feature of the Overland Monthly, now the Centennial correspondent of the San Francisco Bulletin, intends to make this city his future home, when the Exposition is over.

—Harper & Brothers announce A Visit to China, in some respects the complement of Mr. Eugene Schuyler's Turkistan, by Fred. Barnaby. It is a record of travels and adventures in Central Asia, and contains numerous maps, and a series of March Routes compiled from a Russian work.

—The Longmans have published in book form the happy sketches of "German Home Life," which have appeared in Fraser's Magazine. The chapters are packed with useful information, evidently the fruit of careful observation, and are written by a lady who has made Germany almost her second home.

—Hurd & Houghton will issue in December an Index of the first thirty-eight volumes of the Atlantic Monthly, from its beginning in 1857 to the close of the current volume. It has been prepared by that most illustrious littérateur, Mr. Horace E. Scudder, and will contain a list of all the contributions, with the names of contributors annexed.

—Mr. Edward A. Freeman is the author of the article in the British Quarterly on "The Turks in Europe," and also of the paper upon "The Eastern Question" in the October Fortnightly. Mr. Horace White, of Chicago, has an essay in the latter journal on "The American Centenary," and Sir D. Wedderburn follows with a contribution on "Mormonism from a Mormon Point of View."

—The Metric Bulletin, an official journal of the American Metric Bureau, which has reached its second number, is published at No. 13 Tremont street, Boston, and is intended to advocate the early use of the metric system for weights and measures. It is an effort on the part of teachers and others to spread their information, which may hasten the introduction of this new order, and is a handsomely-published pamphlet.

—G. W. Carleton & Co. publish at once Watchman, What of the Night? a new volume by Dr. John Cumming, which has awakened much interest in the religious circles of London, and shows the prophetic Doctor still wedded to his great idea; also Home Harmonies, a new volume of tender and touching Saturday night reflections, by Mark M. ("Brick") Pomeroy. Their latest new novel is Kate Danton, by May Agnes Fleming.

—The second volume of the Life of the Prince Consort has just been issued in England and will probably be republished by D. Appleton & Co., at an early day. It is illustrated with a portrait of the Queen, with the Princess Helena, after Thornburn, and a portrait of Leopold I., the late King of the Belgians, after Winterhalter. The author, Mr. Theodore Martin, states in his preface that he hopes to complete the work in another volume.

—William F. Gill & Co. have Impressions and Reminiscences of George Sand—a slight attempt at the story of her inner life—almost ready for publication. While it fails to tell all one would like to know about this gifted writer, its revelations of the clear depths of her more thoughtful experiences are very delightful and instructive reading. These occur amid much abstract speculation and many mental vagaries, but they are choice bits which are well worth tasting.

—The Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, London, has just published Volume I. of a Commentary on the Old Testament, in crown 8vo, intended as a companion to the Commentary on the New Testament, which was published three years ago, and has already run through many editions. The prefaces and notes are furnished by some of the best English Biblical scholars, and the work is intended to meet the wants of plain people who desire to know the results and not the processes of the best criticism.

—It is welcome news that the literary remains of Elizabeth Barrett Browning, in prose and verse, are soon to be published. With all her tumultuous energy and capricious spirit, she touched nothing, upon which she did not leave the mark of genius and her earlier poems (1826-1833) not included in the collected editions, and her numerous letters partly published in the Contemporary Review and now edited by Richard Hengist Horne, the author of "Orion," are soon to be published by James Miller.

—Mr. T. Whittaker has nearly ready The King's Terry-boat and other Addresses, by John N. Norton, D. D.; Asleep—Words of Comfort for the Bereaved, by Mr. F. Burge Smith, and Scripture's Proverbs Annotated and Applied, by Francis Jacox. He is also the publisher of three pamphlets of religious satire—The Peace Parliament, or the Reconstructed Creed of Christendom; Who Believes in Foreign Missions, and How About the Mystery. The author signs himself "Quilibet;" and is said to be a prominent clergyman. They are brightly and cleverly written, and are admirable take-offs of religious pretensions.

—Rev. Dr. Asa Bullard's Fifty Years with the Sabbath-Schools, full of interesting information concerning their early beginning in this country, will be published by Lookwood, Brooks & Co., Nov. 1. Their Sermons on the International Lessons for 1877, contributed by the Monday Club, makes a volume of 450 pages, and will appear at the same time. The previous volume of this series had the praise of the whole evangelical press of the country. Another book, which appears at the same time, is Student Life at Harvard. It is a novel by a recent graduate, 500 pages long, in which student life is the leading feature, and is said to be a work of unusual interest.

—English musical science has met with a great loss in the recent death of Dr. Rimbault. He was formally the organist of the church where Rev. F. D. Maurice was the incumbent, and had the reputation of being more thoroughly acquainted with the history and antiquarian lore of music than any other man of his time. As a composer he did but little except hymn tunes and chants, but was very successful in the arrangements of the works of the best writers for the piano-forte, organ and harmonium. In the history of English music and musicians there were few points on which he could not throw light.

—Sermons on Subjects of the Day is the title which Bentley & Sons give to a two-volume edition of the unpublished discourses of Walter Farquhar Hook, late Dean of Chichester. Dr. Hook is chiefly known in literature by his Lives of the Archbishops of Canterbury, the twelfth volume of which is just announced by the same publishers. He was a leading High Churchman in his day, and his sermons were often controversial. The present publication deals largely with the questions between the English and Roman Catholic Churches, and leads off with a sermon on "The Peculiar Character of the Church of England Independently of its Connection with the State."

—E. P. Dutton & Co. will issue early next month Dr. Farrar's Marlborough Sermons. The sale of Dr. Mosley's University Sermons, of which this firm are the American publishers, has been unexpectedly large. So notable a divine as E. H. Chapin, D. D., pronounces it one of the most remarkable volumes of sermons which has been published during the century. The same house, in conjunction with John Murray in London, will soon publish the Bramston Lectures for 1876, by Dr. Alexander, Bishop of Derry, and one of the best preachers and strongest writers in the English Church. The subject is The Witness of the Psalms to Christ and Christianity. The lectures excited unusual attention during their delivery last Winter at Oxford, and will probably rank as one of the most valuable theological books of the day.

—Dr. George B. Loring's Farmyard Club of Jotham will be profusely illustrated by Champney, Lathrop, Barry, Rose Hawthorne, Lathrop, Edwin Forbes, and others, and will make an octavo book of 600 pages. This house has just issued two books by Rev. M. J. Savage, who won some reputation from his book, Christianity the Science of Manhood, and is now the Pastor of the Church of the Unity in Boston. One is The Religion of Evolution, containing a series of lectures in which he seeks, himself an evolutionist, to show the plausibility of the new doctrine. It cannot be said that he has added anything to the proof of the theory of evolution, though the book is a fair exposition of the doctrine. The other volume is Light on the Cloud. It contains hints of comfort for hours of sorrow, and shows Mr. Savage more at home; there is much tender and sympathetic writing in it, and some good original poetry; but it has the singular characteristic of attempting to comfort those who sorrow by teachings which would have sounded well from the pen of Plato, Socrates, or Seneca, but which ignore the central truths of Christianity and do not seem quite enough for a Christian minister to say.

—Roberts Brothers have made a brilliant success with Mercy Philbrick's Choice. It is severely criticised in the November Literary World, and also by Dr. Littledale in the Academy, and yet is allowed by both critics to have remarkable merit. Three editions have already been sold. The next volume of the "No Name Series" will be an epic poem by an Irish gentleman of Boston and a graduate of Dublin University, Dr. Joyce, (for some unwitting friend has let out the secret—not the publishers,) with the title Deirdrè. It is founded on an old Irish story of the heroic and romantic age of Ireland, 2,000 years ago. The author has obeyed the precept of Horace in keeping his manuscript in his desk for some years, and polishing it to a close approach to perfection, and critics who have read the advance sheets are enthusiastic in its praise. Some go so far as to pronounce it equal to Tennyson's "Idyls," and it is truth to say that it is a poem whose exquisite finish as a work of art is only surpassed by its absorbing interest as a story. Mrs. Jackson's ("H. H.") Bits of Talk for Young Folks is just ready, and shows that H. H. is as charming a writer for children as for grown people. The book is to be illustrated with four or five plates, and will be a square 32mo. of nearly two hundred and fifty pages. Mr. P. G. Hamerton's Wenderholme is an unconventional story of Lancashire and Yorkshire, as he explains in a pleasant preface for the American edition, and also a truthful transcript of life in that section of England. The second volume of Landor's Imaginary Conversations contains his dialogues of sovereigns and statesmen. Both these books will be out early next month.

THE THIRTY-FIRST DISTRICT.

The unfortunate division among the Republicans of the Thirty-first Congressional District of this State, growing out of the rival claims of counties for the candidate, threatened disaster for awhile, but late reports are of an encouraging character. They are well set forth by the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser, which says: "Private advices from the best sources of information in Niagara County lead us to the conclusion that Mr. Hoskins will be re-elected to Congress in the Thirty-first District, by a satisfactory majority, notwithstanding the bolting movement in behalf of Mr. Flagler, of Lockport, as a third or 'people's candidate.' Outside of that county the bolt has had no practical importance from the start, and now the stench (if somewhat disappointed) Republicans of Niagara are coming to their senses, and preparing to give a cordial and vigorous support to the regular candidate, as we have never doubted they would. The only sort of encouragement the bolt has had from the Republican press of the district was found in the consent of the Lockport Journal to put up Mr. Flagler's name, headed 'people's candidate.' No other paper of the district, in or out of Niagara County, has done even that much, or refused to put up the name of Mr. Hoskins. But now we find that name in its proper place along with the rest of the Republican ticket at the head of the Journal's columns. This has been done, no doubt, because the Lockport Journal has at length discovered, as it says, that 'there is apparent on the increasing desire on the part of Republican electors to defeat the Democratic candidate and to elect a Republican if possible'; and because, as another influential Republican paper in Niagara County—the Niagara Falls Gazette—pointedly observes, 'every Republican vote given to Flagler aids and comforts the Democratic candidate, for every one knows that the contest is between Mr. Hoskins, the regular Republican candidate, and Benedict, Democratic.' This is true, and it puts the only effect of this bolting business in a nut-shell. There is, in truth, for the disaffected Republicans in the Thirty-first District but one straight and safe way out of this difficulty, and that is to vote the regular ticket, and thus assure Mr. Hoskins the handsome majority to which he is entitled. In this imminent crisis all personal revenges, no less than all personal ambitions, should be subordinated to the patriotic object of protecting the Union against the deadly peril which confronts it, in the possibility of ex-rebel legislation and administration for the Federal Government. But if local considerations, such as rotation and geographical divisions, must be taken into account in the Thirty-first District, then we should like to know what credit or advantage the Republicans of Niagara County can win, by so voting as to secure the election of a Wyoming County Democrat instead of a Wyoming County Republican, especially when the former is a man utterly unused to public life, and the latter is already one of the most experienced and influential Representatives in Congress?"

PRESIDENT GRANT TO VOTE IN GALENA.

The Washington Chronicle says: "At the last Presidential election Gen. Grant was practically disfranchised. He could not consistently vote for his opponent, and etiquette demanded that he should not cast a ballot for his own re election. This year things are changed. A candidate has been nominated by the Republican Party for whom he feels inclined to do a citizen's duty, and accordingly he will leave this city some time next week for Galena, Ill., where he will deposit a vote for the electors of Hayes and Wheeler."

THE HURRICANE IN SANTA CROIX.

Following is an extract from a letter, dated Sept. 20, from a resident of the Danish West India Island of Santa Croix, to a gentleman in Baltimore:

"Long before this reaches you you will have heard of the hurricane of the 12th and 13th inst. May I never again have a similar experience of Almighty power. Who can describe a hurricane? My pen is inadequate to it. You know the exposed situation of our house, and for six hours we remained in Mrs. ——'s room, listening to the tremendous howling of the wind, the roar of the sea, the pelting of the torrents of rain, the crash of falling limbs of trees, the uprooting of trees, the tearing off of galvanized iron from the roofs of adjacent buildings, the ruin of beams and fences, thunder, lightning, and two distinct shocks of earthquake, through all which we were most providentially preserved. Eighty houses are prostrated in our little town. Who will, who can rebuild shelters for the poor in this impoverished colony? The fort and other public buildings are materially injured, and many of the planters have suffered severely. Sugar works are destroyed, negro villages prostrated or unroofed, dwelling-houses injured, cattle killed, &c. I have heard of only five lives being lost, but of several narrow escapes from painful death."

THE ROSS CASE.

HEARING OF SUPPOSED IMPLICATED PARTIES IN PHILADELPHIA—SOME INTERESTING LETTERS.

Samuel A. Benners, who was arrested in Harrisburg for alleged implication in the Ross abduction case, was arraigned before Magistrate Collins, in Philadelphia, on Thursday, as were also James Pickett and Sarah Brown, alias "Dutch Sal." Mr. C. K. Ross first testified to the abduction of his son Charley on July 1, 1874, and detailed features of the search for him. Walter Ross stated that himself and brother were stolen by two men on the date named. He afterward went to New-York and saw the dead bodies of the same men whose wagon they had been taken away in. They were Mosher and Douglass, who had been shot at Bay Ridge.

Lieut. Givin, of the First Police District, swore that on Sept. 2 a colored man named Nelson Parker had given information of a band of thieves who were operating in Pennsylvania and New Jersey, and who had formerly been associated with Mosher and Douglass. One of these men was said to be Benners, alias Babb, alias Shaw, alias Draper, under which name Parker had known him. Mrs. Brown was said to keep a house in State street, Harrisburg, where Pickett and Benners sometimes stopped, and which was known as a thieves' resort. On Sept. 29 Lieut Givin, one of his officers, and Parker proceeded to Harrisburg, surrounded the house and captured Benners, Pickett, and the woman, the former being charged with a felony committed in Camden. The three prisoners were then brought to Philadelphia.

Parker, the principal witness, was then sworn. He stated he had known Benners under the names of George Yonslin, Shaw, Babb, and De Hart; Pickett he knew as "Doc" Bell, who was a peddler of patent medicines, together with one Randolph and a George Wright; Benners forged two notes while in Harrisburg, which witness indorsed and got the money upon; witness was afterward arrested for the forgery and sentenced to three years in the Eastern Penitentiary, which time he served out; while in jail several letters were received addressed to him under the alias of Williams, all written by Benners.

These letters were read in evidence, and shown to Parker to identify Benner's handwriting. In one of these letters he promised to get Parker released, having, as he said, got a jewel worth $5,000, and the owner would have to come up to recover it. Further letters followed, saying that Mosher and Douglass were running a powder-wagon; that Parker's house had been sold, but another would be procured for him.

Other letters referred to "Sal's" arrest and the movements of parties known to Parker and the writer, giving an account of their whereabouts and how they were doing; also stating that he had made several "taps," (robberies,) and had netted considerable cash. He also promised to take good care of Parker, (or Williams, as he was then known,) and had sent him boxes containing different articles. Similar attention had been shown witness by Benners' friends while Benners was out of town. Other letters received from time to time kept Parker posted as to Benners' movements in the jail, and where he intended to go. The "jewel" is frequently alluded to in the epistles, and witness had no doubt that the word thus used meant Charley Ross.

In other letters which Parker received the death of Mosher is alluded to, and to his telling all he could. The "Jewel, C. R.," was said to be safe, but Parker was not to write until Benners could be again heard from. He did not want the reward; he could do better by waiting. If he should be killed or captured Parker could make $50,000 easily, as he stood next to Benners. The letter was signed "Yonslin," but the name used most by the writer was "Babb."

Another letter, dated Oct. 18, 1876, to Parker, said that his life was in danger, and he had better sweat he had made a mistake relative to "George." If the latter went up, Parker would suffer. This letter was signed "Kand," for Randolph.

Parker further testified that Yonslin told him in a letter that Sarah and her folks had clothing of the "B." This was dated Reading, May 10, 1874, and received by Parker while in prison. It also relates to the arrest of one of the "band."

The following letter was directed to Sarah Brown, under cover of an envelope to her daughter, on Lombard street, above Seventh:

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 26, 1876.

SADIE: Go home and burn and destroy every one of those clothes. Randolph is caught and may squeal on all. Get his hair from under the hearth floor. Go home at once. Good God, I am nervous, and no wonder.

In the letter was the picture of a colored man, and on the back were the names of Parker, Yonslin, Mosher, and Douglass.

A fragment of a letter picked up in the same house tells how Westervelt got ten years, but that he would die before he would squeal, and that the "bird" was well and was a nice jewel. The remainder of

LAW REPORTS.

SERIOUS CHARGE OF CONSPIRACY.

THE MANAGEMENT OF THE UNINED STATES LIFE ENSURANCE COMPANY ATTACKED —A TEMPORARY INJUNCTION TO RESTRAIN THE DIRECTORS FROM ILLEGALLY DISPOSING OF THE RESERVE FUND.

On Friday, Oct. 13, a suit was begun in the Supreme Court, Kings County, before Judge Gilbert, by Francis B. O'Connor, an insurance agent, residing at No. 255 Clinton street, Brooklyn, against the United States Life Insurance Company, of New-York, James Buell, and John E. De Witt. The plaintiff is a stockholder in the company, and the suit is brought to test the legality of certain acts of the defendants. The complaint sets forth that the United States Life Insurance Company was incorporated April 10, 1849, with a capital stock of $250,000, of which the plaintiff holds nine shares of $50 each. The affairs of the company are managed by a board of thirty Directors, of which the defendants, Buell and DeWitt, are members, Buell being also President of the company. The complaint further says that since the organization of the Company it has done a large and profitable business in this and most of the other States of the Union, and has established a reputation for solvency, solidity, and good management. Within a short time, however, rumor has been busy with the company, and the facts to be set forth have transpired. On Jan. 1, 1876, the company had 10,692 outstanding policy-holders, insured for $22,848,081. Its income during 1875 from premiums on its running policies alone amounted to $939,304 02, and its income from its investments was $275,883 04, making a total income for 1875 of $1,205,187 06. In the same year it paid in dividends to its policy-holders $102,532 40. In compliance with the law, and in accordance with the rule of insurance, an insurance company must keep invested what is known as the reserve, and this is a trust fund held by the company in trust for the policyholders and each of them. The reserve fund is not a distinct fund of a particular amount for each policy-holder, but each policy-holder has an interest in the whole. On Jan. 1, 1876, the reserve fund of the United States Life Insurance Company held and required to be held by it in trust against the claims of its policy holders when they shall mature, amounted, according to the American Experience Table of Mortality, with 4½ ₱ cent. interest, to $3,714,463, which the company held invested under the laws of this State. At the same time, in addition to this reserve fund, the company held undivided profits amounting to $545,039, eighty ₱ cent. of which is divisable among the stockholders, and the total assets of the company were on Jan. 1, 1876, $4,617,982 97. Plaintiff is informed and believes that all these sums have increasid since the date named, and that the total assets now are over five million dollars.

The complaint alleges that John E. DeWitt and James Buell, with other persons unknown to the plaintiff, have entered into an illegal and corrupt combination and conspiracy to divest, take away, and transfer to some other company the reserve fund held by the United States Life Insurance Company, for their own profit, benefit, and advantage. To carry out this scheme, it is alleged, Buell and De Witt have purchased, or caused to be purchased, a majority of the capital stock in the company, and the Directors having objected to the transfer of the reserve fund and the business to any other corporation, Buell and De Witt have, by means of the ownership of the stock, caused during the present year the resignation or withdrawal of divers Directors, and have secured the election in their places of other persons who, from complicity or ignorance, are willing to do the bidding of Buell and DeWitt, so that they now possess complete control over a majority of the Board of Directors, and can command from them such votes, action, and resolutions as they may see fit. The complaint further alleges that during the present year DeWitt has resigned his Presidency of the United States Life Insurance Company, and that Buell has been chosen President in his stead. Buell, it is alleged, is wholly and totally unfit for the position, knows nothing of the business of life insurance, and is now the President of the Importers' and Traders' Bank of the City of New-York, which requires of him the most attention. His election to the Presidency of the United States Life Insurance Company, it is alleged, was brought about, not in good faith and for the purpose of continuing the business of the corporation, but in bad faith, and in pursuance of the conspiracy and scheme to destroy the business of the company. After DeWitt's resignation, a resolution of the Board of Directors, or of some committee, as the plaintiff is informed and believes, was passed, continuing his salary at the rate of $15,000 a year, which has been paid in pursuance of the conspiracy to DeWitt ever since he left the position of President, and while he has been acting as President of another institution. Previous to his resignation, DeWitt caused himself to be elected President of the Union Life Insurance Company of Maine, the business of which is managed by one of whose head office is in Boston, where DeWitt has been for several months past, only coming to New-York occasionally. In furtherance of the conspiracy and scheme, plaintiff is informed and believes an arrangement has been made by DeWitt and Buell with the Union Life Insurance Company or some other corporation, for the transfer to it of the business, assets, and property of the United States Life Insurance Company, contrary to the laws of the State and to the rights of ten thousand policy holders, and of all the stockholders other than those engaged in the conspiracy.

In pursuance of this conspiracy, the plaintiff is informed and believes, within a short time past, the conspirators have obtained the resignation of three more of the Directors, with the view to obtain complete and entire control of the corporation, which control they now have, so that no vote, resolution, or contract can be passed, except with the consent of Buell and DeWitt; this control being acquired solely for the purpose of the conspiracy referred to. In consequence of the secrecy with which the conspiracy has been conducted, plaintiff does not wish to set forth more minutely the manner in which the transfer of the assets, property, and business of the United States Life Insurance Company is to be effected, until it has an opportunity by discovery to set forth the facts on an amended complaint, which discovery forms a part of the relief prayed for. The plaintiff alleges that if the schemes of Buell and DeWitt are carried into effect by the court the result will be disastrous to all interested in the company, except the conspirators. It is part of the plan for transferring the business and assets of the United States Life Insurance Company to some other corporation, to cause distrust of the solvency and solidity of the company to be disseminated, so that the policy-holders might be induced to surrender their policies for an insignificant part of their value or to transfer their policies to some other corporation. If the business be so transferred, the stock of the defendant corporation will become worthless, to the great damage of all interested therein, except the conspirators. The plaintiff is advised by his counsel, K. Sewell, Esq., that the transfer is ultra vires, and that the directors have no power whatever to destroy the value of the stock or diminish the company's resources by the transfer of its business. Such action will be taken by the directors solely for their own personal profit and to obtain enormously enhanced prices for their stock from such corporation as may agree to take the transfer.

The plaintiff asks for judgment that the defendants, their agents, &c., be restrained; that Buell and DeWitt, and such other defendants as may be made parties to the suit, may be removed from their offices as Directors of the United States Life Insurance Company, and that a new election be ordered to fill their places; that a Receiver may be appointed; that the United States Life Insurance Company be forever restrained from paying to John E. DeWitt the sum of $15,000 a year, or any other sum, for any so-called services, or pretended services, as a Consulting Director, or otherwise; that a temporary injunction be granted; that the plaintiff may have discovery of all the facts connected with the conspiracy, so as to enable him to serve an amended complaint; and that he may have such other relief as shall seem meet.

The complaint is signed by J. Douglas Brown, plaintiff's attorney, and is duly sworn to. It is supplemented by an affidavit of the plaintiff, in which, after setting forth the substance of the complaint, he states that the amalgamation of the United States Life Insurance Company with some other company has been publicly spoken of, and that within the past year the following directors of the Company have resigned: Washington R. Vermilye, William M. Halstead, Frederick Sheldon, Apollos R. Wetmore, William W. Phelps, William B. Ogden, J. Hurson Rhodes, and others whose names are not known. The persons chosen to fill the vacancies are friends of Buell, among them E. R. Perkins, Jr., cashier of the Importers' and Traders' Bank, of which Buell is President. Within a short time, deponent is informed and believes Wilson G. Hunt, Daniel H. Arnold, and James M. Morrison, Directors in the company, have sold their stock to Buell and withdrawn, as they did not wish to be parties to the transfer of the business.

Justice Gilbert has granted a temporary injunction, and also an order for the examination of Buell and DeWitt before trial by a Referee.

The counsel for the company says that the plaintiff is a discharged employe of the company, who has been suing them for his services for years. There is no intention, counsel says, of transferring the assets and business of the company to any other corporation.

A SUIT FOR BROKERAGE.

Shipman & Mersereau, brokers, effected the sale of a mortgage for $20,000 on the Excelsior Iron Works for William Hastings, on an agreement that they should have all beyond $16,200 that they could get, as their brokerage. The mortgage was sold for $17,500 but the sale fell through, owing to facts which left Shipman & Mersereau a claim for their brokerage against Hastings. They brought suit to recover it, and the case was yesterday brought to trial before Judge Joseph F. Daly in the Court of Common Pleas, when it appeared that before making the agreement with Hastings, Shipman & Mersereau had already secured the sale of the mortgage keeping him in ignorance of the fact. The court held that they were not acting honestly as brokers, but for their own interest, and that a broker must act solely for the interest of his employer. A verdict was therefore directed for the defendant.

MR. EDWARD MATTHEW.' ESTATE.

THE GREAT REAL ESTATE OWNER IN DIFFICULTIES—HIS CREDITORS SEEK TO THROW HIM INTO BANKRUPTCY—HE IS CHARGED WITH FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCE OF PROPERTY.

The case of Barber H. Jones and others, creditors of Mr. Edward Matthews, will be called in the United States District Court to-day before Judge Blatchford, the proceeding being an attempt to throw Mr. Matthews into bankruptcy. Messrs. Kneeland and Carter are the attorneys for the creditors, and Mr. Carter gives the story of the case substantially as follows: Mr. Matthews is one of the largest owners of real estate in this City. His income from real estate alone, in ten years, beginning with 1863, amounted to over $8,000,000. He owned buildings in the heart of the business portion of the City, renting hundreds of offices and stores in Broadway, Broad street, Wall street, and Exchange place, all of which commanded high rentals, because of the desirability of their location. Among his property were the stores destroyed in the great Broadway fire of last Winter, numbering from 444 to 452 Broadway and from 10 to 13 Crosby street. During the period from 1863 to 1873 the aggregate of incumbrances upon his property amounted to only $750,000. The returns from his real estate were more than enough to pay his living expenses. He lived without embarrassment until he took to railroad speculation, which has ruined him. To get possession of a Southern road 180 miles long he bought the bonds at a low price, and having secured the ownership of the road, he put the bonds upon the market with the expectation of realizing a handsome profit. He was caught in the panic of 1873 with these bonds in his possession, and found them absolutely unsaleable. He was obliged to take the proceeds of his real estate to support his railroad, and this tax, coupled with the heavy decline in the value of real estate and in real estate rentals, was the cause of his failure. He was obliged to raise money on notes of his brother Nathan Matthews, of Boston, indorsed by himself, amounting to $1,300,000. These notes have been under protest for over six months. Mr. Matthews claims that the holders of the notes have no legal claim on him, for the reason that he has received no valid consideration for them. After the Broadway fire of last Winter Mr. Matthews contracted with Jones & Co. to rebuild his stores, the agreement between him and the contractors being that the work should be paid for in notes signed by Mr. Matthews. The notes were accepted and paid out by the contractors to meet their obligations. These notes have been under protest for about sixty days. This is the ground on which the proceedings in bankruptcy have been commenced. Another cause might also be assigned, [namely, a mortgage made to one Watson Matthews, Trustee, for Mrs. Edward Matthews, of $360,000. It covers almost the entire real estate owned by Mr. Matthews. It was given in April, 1876, in consideration of money borrowed from Mrs. Matthews in September, 1875. After making this mortgage Mr. Matthews refused to pay the rent on leasehold property covered by the mortgage, the fee of which is held by Lorillard Spencer and Catharine Spencer. The property is located at Nos. 446 and 450 Broadway. A suit was entered in behalf of the Spencers by Messrs. Mann & Parsons, and judgment was ordered. The execution against the property was returned unsatisfied. An order was obtained early in October for the examination of Mr. Matthews under supplementary proceedings. During the examination, lasting from Oct. 1 to 20, Mr. Matthews was enjoined from selling any of his property. Upon the 18th of October he swore that he was still owner of all his real estate. Upon the 19th of October Mr. Matthews was released from injunction upon condition that he should deed to a Receiver, to be appointed by Judge Barrett, all his right, title, and interest in his real estate. Mr. Mann, one of the plaintiff's attorneys, was the next day appointed Receiver. Prior to this release an injunction was served upon Mr. Matthews from the United States District Court in Bankruptcy, forbidding him to dispose of any of his property. Upon the 20th of October a deed was recorded by Mr. Matthews conveying, from himself and wife, to his son, J. Brandee Matthews, all of his real estate, worth, at present prices, $3,000,000, for the sum of $50,000. This deed was made while the injunction obtained by the Spencers was pending. The property described in this deed embraces: Nos. 64 and 66 Broadway and 19 New street, known as the Globe building; Nos. 17, 19, and 21 Broad street and 55 and 57 Exchange place; Nos. 78 and 80 Broadway and 5 and 7 New street; Nos. 69, 71, and 73 Broadway and 85 and 87 New Church street, known as the Empire building; No. 377 Broadway, as the National building; Nos. 38, 40, and 42 Broadway and 49 and 53 New street; Nos. 38 Broad and 34 and 36 New streets; Nos. 39 Broadway and 116 New Church street, No. 34 Howard street and No. 29 Howard st.

As the case stands now, Mr. Mann, the Receiver appointed on application of the Spencers, is said to have received nothing in satisfaction of the claim presented by his firm, and in reply to Messrs. Kneeland and Carter, who are acting for Mr. Barber N. Jones and others, Mr. Matthews alleges that he owns no property at all, having conveyed it out of his hands by the deed mentioned by Mr. Carter. Messrs. Kneeland and Carter say that they will show that the deed of Mr. Matthews to his son was not a bona fide transfer of property. They claim that Mr. Matthews has plenty of property to satisfy the claims of his creditors, and that his conveyances have all been made to defraud his creditors out of their just claims. The question to be considered in court today is whether or not the petitioners represented by Messrs. Kneeland and Carter comprise the requisite number of creditors representing the required amount of claims. The petitioners claim that they can satisfy the court on this point. They have already claims amounting to $200,000, and are constantly receiving additional claims.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—On motion of R. T. Merrick, Isaac Lawson, of Albany, N. Y., was admitted to practice as an attorney and counselor of this court.

No. 9.—Original ex parte Robert L. Cutting, Jr., et al., petitioners.—On motion of H. Crawford, alternative writ of mandamus on the Judges of the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Missouri was granted, returnable on the 20th day of November next.

No. 70.—The County of Callaway, Mo., plaintiff in error, vs. Thomas J. Foster.—The argument of this cause was continued by Mr. J. D. Stevenson, of counsel for the defendant in error, and concluded by William M. Evarts, for plaintiff in error.

No. 37.—Assigned—The Home Insurance Company of New-York, plaintiff in error, vs. The City Council of Augusta, Ga.—This cause was argued by Mr. Salem Dutcher and Mr. William M. Evarts, of counsel for plaintiff in error, and by Mr. William Brown for the defendant in error.

No. 63.—Assigned—John S. Shaw, Appellant, vs. The United States.—The argument of this cause was commenced by Mr. Joseph Casey, of counsel for the appellants. The court then adjourned until Monday.

ALLEGED BREACH OF CONTRACT.

In the General Term of the Supreme Court, before Judges Davis, Brady, and Daniels, yesterday, an appeal was argued in an action arising from the emigration of the Russian Menonites to this country. The Burlington and Missouri Railroad Company in Nebraska entered into a contract with Michael L. Hiller, guaranteeing him a certain rate of commissions on all sales of lands belonging to the company made through his influence to Menonite emigrants. After the lapse of little more than a year the company declared the contract broken, and refused to pay the commissions and expenses incurred by Hiller, and for this breach of the contract Hiller brought an action and laid his damages at $114,000. A Director of the defendant was served with process in this State, whereupon a motion was made on behalf of the company, it being a foreign corporation, to set aside the service of the summons as contrary to law. The motion was granted by Judge Donohue on the ground that the defendant was a foreign corporation, having no property within the State, and that the cause of action did not arise therein. An appeal was taken by the plaintiff from such order, which was argued at length yesterday, Mr. Joseph H. Choate appearing for the defendant, and Mr. Clarence Lexow for the plaintiff. The court took the papers and reserved decision.

THE PARK BANK DEFALCATION.

Suit has been commenced in the Supreme Court by the National Park Bank against H. B. Lord and L. S. Lenheim, the bondsmen of Thomas Ellis, the defaulting teller of the above-named bank. The bond of the defendant is for $10,000, and the complaint which has been filed in the action charges that on Sept. 25 and 26 Ellis stole from the plaintiff, while acting in the capacity of note-teller, two sums of $5,000 each. It is further alleged that on Oct. 21 he stole $69,500. The President of the bank stated yesterday that there was absolutely nothing new in regard to the defalcation, but expressed his determination of vigorously pursuing the thief.

THE VAN AKEN DIVORCE SUITS.

Argument was heard yesterday before the General Term of the Supreme Court in the suit for divorce brought by Catharine A. Van Aken against William P. Van Aken. The parties were married at Kingston, N. Y., on Oct. 11, 1850, and lived at that place until about three years ago. Twelve years ago the plaintiff in this action owned property in Kingston valued at about $1,500, on which she made a mortgage for $1,000 in order to procure sufficient money that her husband might go into the business of bridge-building, which he did soon after. In this business he was very successful, and became as is asserted by his wife, worth about $250,000. In 1873, they removed to New-Jersey, and subsequently the wife returned to this city, and now claims that he drove her away, and brings suit against him for divorce, alleging that he refuses to support her, and is living in open adultery with Minerva Phillips, sometimes called La Vella. On the other hand, the husband brought suit in the courts of New-Jersey for divorce, alleging as a cause of action, desertion on the part of his wife. Both suits are pending, and in the former Judge Lawrence gave Mrs. Van Aken $12 50 a week allmony and $350 counsel fee. From this the husband appeals, claiming that as he resides in New-Jersey she cannot bring an action against him in any other State. He asserts that she left him, and is receiving the rents of the property in Kingston, which is valued at about $20,000, while the property owned by him in New-Jersey is unproductive. The Court reserved decision.

THE BECKWITH FORGERY CASE.

CLOSE OF THE PROSECUTION—TESTIMONY REGARDING THE PRISONER'S GOOD CHARACTER.

The trial of Charles R. Beckwith, confidential clerk and cashier of Benjamin T. Babbitt, the wealthy soap manufacturer, was continued before Judge Sutherland yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Beckwith is charged with embezzling sums aggregating $225,000 in all, but the specific offense for which he has been put on trial is for forging a receipt of John H. Poole & Co. for $608 05—the amount of a bill for tallow purporting to have been supplied to Mr. Babbitt. The prosecution is conducted by Assistant District Attorney Bell, with whom is associated A. Oakey Hall, representing Mr. Babbit, and the prisoner is defended by ex-Judge Fullerton and Frank J. Dupignac. Augustus B. Ely, receiving clerk, and Henry Herman, foreman, in Mr. Babbitt's establishment, were examined by Mr. Bell, and proved that no tallow had been received from Poole & Co. on Aug. 4, the day on which Beckwith pretended to have paid out $608 05, and that the bill filed was an old one of 1870, which had been altered to suit the dates and prices of 1871. This closed the case for the prosecution. Judge Fullerton, in opening for the defense, said he would show that from his earliest youth up to the date of his arrest Beckwith had borne a spotless character, and his business capacity was such that immediately on entering Mr. Babbitt's service he was placed in the position of confidential clerk, Cashier, and General Superintendent of the vast business. His duties were so onerous that his health broke down, and he was compelled to leave Mr. Babbitt's services. He received the highest recommendations from Mr. Babbitt on leaving, and was not discharged, as had been asserted. The defense would show that, owing to the heavy duties imposed upon him, it was physically impossible that he could attend to all its duties, and if frauds had been committed they must have been perpetrated by some other person. Judge Fullerton then called Smith H. Thompson, an insurance agent, of Utica, N. Y., from whose employment Beckwith graduated to that of the Manhattan Fire Insurance Company, and thence to that of Benjamin T. Babbitt. Mr. Thompson gave Beckwith an excellent character. Andrew H. Smith, President of the Manhattan Fire Insurance Company, also gave Beckwith a very high character, and said that he had been employed by the company for years, and could enter their employment again. He had never heard that Beckwith had been discharged by Babbitt. Elbridge G. Nye, of the Queen Insurance Company, also testified to Beckwith's good character.

COURT NOTES.

The case of Henry P. Antes, charged with embezzling $266 while employed as clerk in the Erie Railroad Freight Depot, was continued before Judge Gildersleeve yesterday, in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions.

In the County Clerk's Office yesterday, the following-named persons made assignments for the benefit of their creditors: Bergheim J. Bernhart to Reiss M. Oberteufer; Joseph W. Collins & Edwin A. Oliver to Samuel Sterling, and Salomon Wry to Simon Feldman.

In the suit of Martha Bumstead, Assignee and widow of D. Bumstead, of Jersey City, against William H. Hoadley, in which the plaintiff sought the recovery of $21,000 damages, as heretofore published in THE TIMES, the jury yesterday rendered a verdict for $6,863 25.

Frederick Henkel, of No. 190 Chatham square, who on the 16th inst. stole a watch and a quantity of clothing from John Mans, of No. 105 East Fiftieth street, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Sutherland sentenced Henkel to two years in the State Prison.

In the suit of Adolph Rolla against Henry Goldfinger, the facts of which were printed in THE TIMES of yesterday, the jury rendered a verdict in favor of the defendant, who sought his release from further imprisonment in Ludlow Street Jail. The plaintiff claimed that Goldfinger had embezzled $1,200 from him.

The jury in the case of Joseph and Jacob Steuber, against Rubsam & Harmon, which has been on trial for several days before Judge Sanford, holding Part I. of the Superior Court, in which the plaintiff sued for the recovery of $1,750 due on a contract for the manufacture of a certain class of lager beer, a verdict was yesterday rendered for the plaintiff for $1,975.

In the Supreme Court, General Term, yesterday, before Judges Davis, Brady, and Daniels, a motion was made to disbar George P. Webster, an attorney, who, together with his partner, Otis T. Hall, since deceased, is accused of having, while the charge of professional duties, during the year 1875, endeavored to ruin the Saturday Review, a newspaper published in this City. The court reserved decision.

THE WASTE OF CROTON WATER.

The Grand Jury of the Court of General Sessions came into court yesterday and presented the following to Judge Sutherland, who thereupon discharged that body, there being no further business before them:

The attention of the Grand Inquest in and for the City and County of New-York having been called to the matter of the low head of water in the Croton Reservoir, and having considered the testimony taken by it, submit the following:

Whereas, In consequence of the low head of water in the several reservoirs of the Croton aqueduct, the continuance of the present drought, and the great length of time that must elapse before the reservoirs can be filled, even under a prevalence of continued rain, it is

Resolved, That we urge upon the authorities to whom the distribution of the water is confided that they use energetic and summary measures to restrict the waste and use, even to the watering of the streets and its obnoxious flow in basins; also, that we call upon our fellow-citizens of all classes, in their own defense, to arrest all unnecessary use of water, for in the event of a fire occurring in a combustible quarter their interests, in common with all, would be jeopardized.

CHARLES H. HAMMEL, Foreman.

THE GARBAGE WAR.

In Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, Judge Barrett heard a motion on behalf of the defendants in the suit of The Mayor, &c., of this City, against Winchester Britton, Cornelius Ferguson, the Shore Inspector, and other, which action was brought to restrain the District Attorney of Kings County from prosecuting, and the Shore Inspector and others from interferring with the garbage boats of the Bureau of Street Cleaning of the Police Department of this City. The motion was for an order changing the place of trial from this to Kings County. Mr. Brittou claiming that under the code an action brought against an officer for any act of his committed within it should be tried in the County of which he is an official. This was opposed by Mr. C. F. McLean, Counsel of the Police Board, on the ground that the acts charged against the defendants were committed not in Kings County but on the high seas, and he also claimed that an impartial trial of the case could not be had in Kings County because of the prejudice there existing against the New-York officials. Decision was reserved.

ALLEGED BURGLARS ON TRIAL.

William Smith, residing at No. 555 West Forty-eighth street, was yesterday arraigned in the Fifty-seventh street Police Court, charged with breaking into the premises of William F. May, No. 323 West Forty-eight street, on the night of Oct. 11, and stealing therefrom $150 worth of neckwear. Edward McNabe, of No. 349 West Fifty-second street, and Frederick Kesser, of No. 636 West Forty-sixth street, were also arrested as accomplices in the burglary. The evidence was so conclusive as to the guilt of Smith, that Justice Wandell held him in $2,000 bail to answer at the General Sessions. Kesser was discharged, as the evidence was not sufficient to hold him. McNabe was remanded for further examination.

ALLEGED CONSPIRACY TO DEFRAUD.

James McKernan, Robert L. Daly, and John C. Robbins, three ferry-masters, employed at the Jersey City ferry, were arrested on requisitions in Jersey City on Thursday evening, by Detectives Walling and Mulvey, of the Central Office, for conspiracy to defraud the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The accused were brought to this City yesterday, and arraigned in the Court of General Sessions, where Judge Sutherland fixed bail in each case at $2,000. Edward T. McLaughlin, of No. 8 Desbrosses street, became bondsman for each of the prisoners, and they were thereupon discharged.

BOOTH AND MORTON.

RESPONSES TO A SERENADE IN SAN FRANCISCO.

Senator Newton Booth was given a brilliant reception by the people of San Francisco on the evening of Thursday, Oct. 19. In acknowledgement he said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I have addressed large meetings in various places, but it was never my fortune before to endeavor to speak to seven stories of people. [Laughter and applause.] If my voice were as strong as my spirit, I would make you all hear and feel as I feel; but while the spirit is willing, the flesh is very weak. I am not vain enough to appropriate this as a personal compliment. Standing in the presence of this concourse, I am not filled with pride, but awed into a sense of my own personal insignificance. I feel your ten thousand hearts beating against mine and I rely upon your for strength. [Applause.] In no place would an assemblage like this represent such varied interests, and reach out so far into other lands. You are all Americans by birth or adoption—Californians from choice—freemen by the grace of the ever-living God. [Loud applause.] But through the heart of each of you some chord goes out to your old birth-place—to the dear hearthstones—and the hand that could touch these chords might feel a responsive thrill from every land where the light of civilization shines. In San Francisco the pulse of life keeps time with the great heart of humanity. [Applause.] Standing in this presence, I am here to say that in taking my place in the ranks of the Republican Party, I sacrifice no principle that a freeman ought to hold dear! [Applause.] To the great cardinal principle of my life, that no individual is so high as to be above the law, and none is so poor as to be beneath it, I pledge a new fealty, a fealty to which I am ready to consecrate the best purpose of my life. [Cheers.] To every attempt on the part of a corporate power, or of individual greed, to make a municipal, State, or national government its vassal, I stand unalterably opposed. [Loud applause.] And I regard all that as the legitimate outcome of the great fundamental doctrine of equal rights to which the Republican Party owes its moral force and has in the great tide of human affairs. We stand, my fellow-citizens, upon the eve of a political conflict as important as any that a free people were ever called upon to decide. If the Democratic Party shall succeed to power in this canvass, it will be placing the destiny of this Republic in the hands of a political organization that for years sought to destroy it. [Applause.] Why, what do you see in a solid South, made solid as it was in 1861, by social ostracism, by intimidation, by personal violence; led now as it was led then, by the Hotspur, South Carolina. What support has that party in the North? It has the support of every man who gave aid and comfort to the rebellion. [Applause.] It has the support of every man in the North who allied himself with a traitorous organization. Has the time come when we can afford to surrender the fruits of that blood-bought victory? [Cries of "No! no!] Why, my friends, we have lived through a grand era—as heroic an age as ever the sun shone on. What grand opportunities have public men had? What grand opportunities have political organizations had; and how grandly, how supremely grand, has the Republican organization arisen to the height of every opportunity! What has it done? It has suppressed our rebellion, which would have destroyed any other nation that ever existed on the earth. It has improved the divine opportunity to emancipate four millions of slaves. [Loud applause and cheers.] For the first time in history it has launched upon the great tide of destiny the first free Republic, where every man has a right to the equal of every other man, and in whose free air no slave lives. [Loud applause.] It has opened a new chapter in the book of destiny! The world is brighter; the path before us is starlit, because the Republican Party has had charge of this country in the most perilous times that any country ever passed through. [Applause.] It has made danger its great opportunity. It has snatched victory from the very jaws of defeat and stamped an indissoluble Union with the seal of universal freedom. What part has the Democracy in this great triumphal march? What great principle has it avowed? What step in human progress has it not steadily opposed? Has it not been ever with its face to the darkness, and not to the light, cherishing evil because it was evil? What part has it had, I say, in this great triumphal march of humanity? It has had the part of a captive who walks by the triumphal chariot. Ah! my friends, we say freely, that it may ride in this chariot, sharing in the glories of the triumph of right; but is it not a little too soon to give it the seat of the driver, and the reins of the empire? [Applause and cries of "Yes!" "No!"] My friends, let me say that when I don't have to speak at so great a disadvantage, I shall be most happy to speak to you. I need not tell you how grateful I am for all your kindness to me, beggar that I am; aye, even poor in thanks. Remember what your liberties have cost! Remember what hecatombs of lives have been offered up to make this the grand, free Republic of all history. [Loud applause.] Consecrate yourselves, heart and soul, to the work of keeping that record bright and pure, and let the new century upon which the nation enters make all the past dim in comparison with its sunlight glories. [Loud cheers.]

After Senator Booth retired from the platform the court rang with continued calls for Senator Morton. At last the Senator and war Governor of Indiana made his appearance. Cheers and applause greeted the introduction. He said:

FELLOW-CITIZENS: I thank you most sincerely for the compliment of this call. I have not appeared for the purpose of attempting to make a speech. I have listened with great pleasure to the remarks of your distinguished Senator, and will only supplement what he has said to-night by a single observation. The great question before the American people to be determined in the approaching election is this: What shall be the policy of this nation for the next four years—and perhaps for many years to come? And into whose hands shall the destiny of the country be committed? [A voice—"Hayes and Wheeler."] Shall it be committed into the hands of those men who have struggled for it, and many of whom have fought for it? Or shall it pass into the hands of a party the majority of which but a few years ago were in arms fighting for its destruction? [Voices, "No, no!"] That is the great question to be determined, and I hope that California will make the proper response—that the vote of this great and growing State will be given in favor of the Union, in favor of the Constitution, in favor of the establishment of universal equal suffrage and political rights. As I said before, I had intended to make a speech. I thank you again for the compliment of this call, and will conclude by hoping that California will give a large majority for Hayes and Wheeler in the approaching election. [Loud applause and cheers.]

THE OUTLOOK IN INDIANA.

The Indianapolis Journal of Thursday says: "It is far from our purpose to generate in the minds of Republicans any false hopes relative to the result of the November election in this State, but we can assure them that the skies are brightening every day. We are in receipt of advices from different parts of the State of the most cheering character. The steady tide of popular sentiment which was setting so strongly in favor of the Republican Party before the election was but temporarily arrested by that event, and is still rolling forward. We say to our Republican friends throughout the State that the elements are favorable for a triumphant reversal of the October verdict in November. Everything depends on getting out a full Republican vote. That done, we may confidently look for sufficient increase from other quarters to carry the State for Hayes and Wheeler."

A QUEER SUIT.

The Syracuse Standard says: "At the time of the sham battle in Rome Capt. Paul Birchmeyer, of this city, bestrode a venerable plug belonging to one Israel White, of Taberg. A few days ago the Rome veterans were notified that Mr. White's pegasus was as deaf as an adder, all in consequence, it was claimed, of the artillery discharges. The amount of damages has been fixed at the singularly modest sum of $100, for which White proposes to sue. Capt. Paul thought at the time he rode the horse that it was unaccountably stupid, but finally attributed it to its having been brought up in a country somewhat barren of schoolhouses."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

VARIOUS TOPICS DISCUSSED.

THE CANVASS IN NEW-YORK.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Will you kiodly allow an old reader to make through your columns a few suggestions pertinent to the present canvass, and particularly as regards the canvass in this State? I have been surprised, in the course of conversation with friends who have had a Tildenite leaning, to see how easily I have been able, after the failure of all other arguments, to induce them to support Hayes and Wheeler by showing to them that there can be no permanent revival of business until all business transactions can be transacted on a gold basis.

The great Democratic tidal wave of 1874 was mainly the result of the hard times, for which the Republican Party are in nowise responsible, and the insidious plea of Mr. Tilden and his supporters for a change of Administration, and promising a revival of business as the result of a change, had the effect of inducing many honest, but unthinking Republicans, as well as Democrats, to support the Democratic ticket. This erroneous desire for a change is the only hold Mr. Tilden has for the support of a very large number of voters in New-York and its adjoining States, who in all other respects are in accord with the Republican Party and its principles. It is the principle of self-interest which controls their political action. Fortunately it can be clearly proved that even upon this ground of business interest it is far preferable to support the Republican Party, which has ever been the champion of honest money. It is very easy to show Mr. Tilden's weak position financially, as evinced by his late pitiful surrender to Mr. Hendricks and the inflation element of his party; and also, the dishonesty of the party itself as shown by their cowardly repealing the date clause of the Resumption act, thus practically annulling the good effect of the entire act. Can any thinking man doubt the mischevious results to all business interest that will follow the elevation to power of a party holding such views? Every business man, every mechanic, and every working man that votes for Tilden simply votes for a continuance, and probable aggregate of four years more of the present hard times.

The time has now come for active personal effort as well as active stumping. While our valuable corps of speakers should take great care to rightly inform the people on this great and, I think, now leading question, so as to make new converts or to reclaiming backsliders is concerned, let every Republican second the good work by using all his persuasion and argument to influence his doubtful or Democratic friends to support the party of honest money. Let us imitate the example of Gov. Hayes, who fought his great fight and won his great victory last Fall in Ohio on the leading question of honest money.

Particular attention should also be taken to keep before the people the fact that in every Presidential election the State has always gone largely Republican except in 1868, when by the grossest frauds, which can never again be repeated, the electoral vote was given to Mr. Seymour. Mr. Tilden has instructed his friends to assert that he will carry New-York State by 75,000 majority—why not as well say 750,000. This, with the generally settled conviction that the vote of New-York will determine the result, will have the effect, if not counteracted, to bring over to him the many doubtful voters who are always ready to go over to the winning side. Let it be plainly told that the Republicans of New-York cheerfully accept their State as the decisive battle ground, feeling fully confident that on the 7th of November we shall come up such a decisive majority as will send Mr. Tilden to join the company of McClellan, Seymour, and other illustrious Democrats who have already "gone before."

CITIZEN.

NEW YORK, Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1876.

THE TENNESSEE DEMOCRACY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

You have frequently referred to the spirit manifested in the Democratic Party in regard to public obligations. That spirit is perhaps nowhere so strongly manifested as in this State. The Democratic Party in Tennessee have had absolute control of the State Government in all its departments for the past seven years. The State debt is about twenty-three million dollars; the taxable property of the State is about three hundred million dollars, and this upon a valuation of one-half, according to the last report of the Controller. There are also other sources of revenue, such as the poll-tax, the privilege tax, &c. The State tax in Tennessee is forty cents on the hundred dollars. To-day the bonds of the State are selling at between forty and fifty cents, the interest is unpaid, and, worse than all this, there is a strong feeling of repudiation spreading through the State. One action of the Democratic Party—viz., that represented by the regular nominee for Governor—in their State Convention, last Summer, passed some high-sounding resolutions about sustaining the State credit, and denouncing repudiation, but positively refused to recommend an increase of taxation, if necessary, to pay the interest on the bonds. This is virtual repudiation, and repudiation in its meanest form,

LETTER-CARRIERS AS AIDS IN VERIFYING THE LISTS OF VOTERS—REVERIFICATION OF THE REGISTRY IN SOME OF THE DISTRICTS—THE WORK OF NATURALIZATION—A CASE OF ALLEGED FRAUD BEFORE COMMISSIONER DAVENPORT.

The Post Office Department in this City promises to be an efficient factor in the work of detecting and preventing ballot-box frauds. The discovery that the mails would be of use in bringing to light instances of false registration was made in a rather singular manner. The Superintendents of the various Post Office stations through the City have noticed since Tuesday that a large number of postal cards have been accumulating in their offices. These cards contained printed invitations to political meetings, and were addressed to different persons throughout the City whose names and addresses were obtained from the registration lists. This, which was evidently intended as a shrewd method of advertising among the only class desirable to be reached, happened to be serviceable in another direction. As soon as large numbers of the postal cards began to be returned to the stations it became evident that the men addressed did not reside at the places from which they appeared to have registered. The returning of the postal cards by the letter-carriers then began to be of use in aiding the work of verifying the registry. The whereabouts of persons can be very often better reached by the letter-carriers than by United States Deputy Marshals, since the latter, by stating their authority are apt to put designing persons on their guard, which the former are not so likely to do. Of course, the method does not furnish an infallible means of detecting all cases of fraudulent registration, since there are instances, in tenement and lodging houses, where those designing to perpetrate a fraud have arranged matters with the landlords so that the latter are willing to and do state in response to inquiries that the persons in question reside in the houses to which the postal cards have been sent. In spite of this, it has proved and will continue to be a valuable aid. Several hundred of the postal cards have been returned, as those to whom they were addressed had either never resided at the places indicated or had moved thence months previously. The Superintendent of Station B brought about seventy-five of such cards to the main Post Office on Thursday, and Mr. Taylor, the General Superintendent, gave orders to the different Station Superintendents not to retain the cards at their respective stations, but to send them down immediately to the main office. Many hundred of such returned cards, it is expected, will be sent in this morning. A few specimen cases are given of persons to whom the cards already sent in were sent. The first is Martin Latty, of No. 154 Monroe street, first floor. The place mentioned is a stable, in which no person resides or sleeps. James Short, No. 158½ Monroe street, first floor, was also addressed. This place is also used as a stable. The same is true of No. 158 Monroe street, first floor, where a man named David Manning was supposed to reside. Daniel Mangam had a card addressed to him at No. 94 Montgomery street. It appears that a person of that name formerly resided at No. 94 Montgomery street, but moved away about two months ago. Bernard Borzone was addressed as at No. 170 Elm street. Inquiry showed that he had moved first to No. 91 Henry street and afterward to some other location unknown. Isaac Green, of No. 78 Essex street, was pathetically invited to raise his voice in favor of reform. The only obstacle to his doing so was discovered by the letter-carrier, who found out that Green did not reside at the place, but had moved to No. 87 Essex street, and had, three months ago, again changed his location. A certain August Bahls, of No. 139 Stanton street, was cordially asked to attend a meeting of his fellow-citizens. His name appears on the registration lists and in the Directory as residing at the place indicated. He was not found there, however, when the carrier came to make his rounds. The same is also true of Lud. Fendtner, who was popularly supposed to reside at No. 159 Orchard street. He, it appears, had moved, no one knew whither.

Supervisor Davenport held a consultation yesterday with Supervisors John J. Allen, of Brooklyn, and William Muirhead, of New-Jersey, as to the best methods of preventing election frauds, and suggestions were made having this end in view. The verification of the registry was continued yesterday by Mr. Davenport and his assistants. The results obtained were in their general character similar to those already published in THE TIMES. A second verification was made of the registry in the Eighth Assembly District, and of portions of the Second, Third, and other districts. The returns from the Marshal engaged in this work of re-verification were made yesterday, and the additional facts discovered were put in the hands of clerks, who are to combine them with the results obtained in the first verification. The details, however, are not yet sufficiently well arranged and classified to exhibit any glaring instances of attempted fraud.

Yesterday being the last day of naturalization prior to the election, the Judges of the Superior Court, of the Court of Common Pleas, and of the United States Courts were kept quite busy all day in signing papers for applicants for citizenship. Now that the work of the season is over, it will be possible to sum up the entire results, which will be done within a short time. From the data thus far obtained it seems that over ten thousand persons have been naturalized since Sept. 1 in this City. Of these, the Superior Court has admitted to citizenship about thirty-seven hundred, while the Court of Common Pleas has naturalized about five thousand. One instance of alleged fraud in the procurement of naturalization papers was discovered by Deputy United States Marshal David H. Crowley yesterday, and it may lead to the detection and punishment of the offenders in numerous similar cases. It occurred in regard to the naturalization of one John Samsel, a Fulton street barber, in the Superior Court, yesterday. Samsel, it appears, came to the court to get his second papers. With him came one George W. Jones, who acted as the applicant's witness. Jones swore that he had known Samsel for five years. Samsel obtained his certificate of citizenship, and was leaving the court-room with his witness, when both were arrested by the Deputy Marshal, who had been watching the pair for some time. They were brought before Commissioner Davenport, who examined them. Samsel made affidavit that he is a native of Bavaria, and came to this country in 1866. He has lived in the City continuously for seven years. He averred that he had declared his intention to become a citizen in 1873, but did not remember in which Court he had done this. "I got my full certificate," he continued, "at the Superior Court today, about 4 o'clock. George Jones was my witness. He was there when I went there. I took no witness with me, because I thought I should find some one of my acquaintance, which is very large, about the Court room. I had no previous acquaintance with Jones. I had seen him before frequently about the Bowery. He was standing by the door. I asked him where to go to get my papers. I had no ticket. He told me, and went with me. I told him I would have to go for a witness. He said he would be my witness. I was not posted as to what he had to swear to. He took an oath, and so did I, and I got my papers. I paid him fifty cents. I got my first papers in 1873, about September or October."

The witness George W. Jones, who is known, at the Howe Lodging House in Chatham street where he resides, as George A. Scott, was then examined by the Commissioner. He persisted in saying that he had known Samsel for five years, in spite of the latter's assertion to the contrary. Commissioner Davenport held Jones, in default of $5,000 bail, to await the action of the Grand Jury, and Samsel was held, in default of $2,000 bail, for the same purpose. It is believed that Jones was hired to do the work of acting as a witness to applicants for citizenship and that he has been at it for some time.

GUARD AGAINST PERSONATION.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The commendable efforts now being made by the United States Marshals and by the Republican Committee to put a stop to the contemplated frauds upon the ballot-box, are worthy of all praise; but I fear that all the devices of the reformers are not guarded against. We all remember how, a few years ago, these bogus reformers personated honest citizens and voted in their names. The utmost vigilance should be observed to prevent the repetition of such a fraud. It happens that many honest voters in every precinct are unknown to any member of the Registry Board; hence the liability to such a deception. Every Republican voter should be at the polls at the opening, and remain until his vote is taken. The name of every voter, when his vote is offered, should be announced in a tone sufficiently loud to be heard by persons at the door, and some good Republican should there be stationed to repeat the name, and thus give notice to all persons in waiting.

ELECTION FRAUDS IN BROOKLYN.

THE LIST OF ILLEGAL REGISTRATIONS STILL INCREASING — EFFECTUAL WORK BY THE CHIEF SUPERVISOR TO DETECT AND PUNISH THOSE GUILTY OF FALSE REGISTRATION.

Yesterdays' work added largely to the long list of fraudulent registrations discovered by Chief Supervisor Allen and the Executive Committee of the Kings County Republican General Committee. It has been ascertained that sixteen inmates of the City Hospital have registered in the district in which the hospital is located. All these men have residences in other places, and none of them will be permitted to vote on election day. An important arrest was made yesterday, which illustrates the wholesale nature of the frauds contemplated by the Democrats. The person arrested is a man named Philip Murphy, and the charge preferred against him by United States Deputy Marshal Beggart, is that he gave false information concerning his residence in the Seventh Ward. The section of the United States law under which the arrest was made, is as as follows:

SECTION 5,523. Every person who, during the progress of any verification of any list of the persons who may have registered or voted, which is had or made under any of the provisions of the title, "The Elective Franchise," refuses to answer, or refrains from answering, or answering, knowingly gives false information in respect to any inquiry lawfully made, shall be punishable by imprisonment for not more than thirty days, or by a fine of not more than one hundred dollars, or by both, and shall pay the costs of the prosecution.

Murphy was a resident of the Twelfth Ward up to the 28th of September last, when he moved to No. 98 Hall street, which is in the Seventh Ward. When asked how long he had resided in the district he at first refused to answer, and then, it was alleged, gave false information. The prisoner was taken before Supervisor Allen and held in $3,000 bail for examination to-day. Murphy said that he had opened a boarding-house at No. 98 Hall street, and that eleven of his boarders who had been with him in the Twelfth Ward had followed him to Hall street. It is stated that twenty-six men have registered from Murphy's house. The building is a small frame dwelling, and could not accommodate more than five or six persons. Evidence is now in the hands of those engaged in detecting election frauds, which will warrant the making of a large number of arrests in a few days.

PARADE OF THE COACHING CLUB.

THE FIRST FALL TURNOUT OF THE CLUB—TWELVE COACHES TO BE IN LINE THIS AFTERNOON—THE ROUTE.

The Coaching Club of this City will make their first parade since the opening of the Fall season this afternoon, and in accordance with orders the members will rendezvous at their usual starting point, on the east side of Madison square, at 2:30 P. M. Four-in-Hand Day in Hyde Park, London, attracts thousands of spectators, that flock from every direction to witness the handsomely-equipped coaches. The crowd is often so great that it is generally difficult to keep a clear lane for the coaches. This afternoon, judging from the thousands who were present at the last meet of the club, there will be an immense crowd in Madison square, and it will be well for people in carriages to recollect that when they start the coaches will go through Twenty-sixth street to Fifth avenue, and thence to the Park. The drivers of private carriages and hacks should show the same courtesy to the amateur coachman that is always extended to them by the Fifth avenue stage-drivers, and give them plenty of room. In view of an expected crush of carriages in the Park to-day, Mr. William R. Martin, President of the Park Commission, has addressed the following letter to Mr. William Jay, President of the Coaching Club, making some timely and appropriate suggestions, which it is to be hoped will be adopted:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC PARKS,
No. 36 UNION SQUARE, (East.)

William Jay, Esq., President of the Coaching Club:

MY DEAR SIR: In the parade of the Coaching Club, on Saturday afternoon, I wish to secure three results: room and convenience for the coaches; order in the crowd of vehicles you attract to the Central Park; an opportunity for the people who drive there to see the parade. And in this view I beg leave to make these suggestions: That after you enter Central Park and reach the Marble Bridge, you take the West Drive and return from the northern end of the Park by the East Drive. This will give you a continuous course, which will avoid a return by the same drive. It will enable our Police force to keep better order in the crowd than if they go up and return on the same drive. We can permit a line of carriages to stand on one side of the whole length of the Drive, and thus the occupants can comfortably see the whole parade without crowding in between the coaches. Will you please consider this, and see if we cannot agree on a route that will serve your purposes and our own? I intended to call on you, but have not found time any morning. Very truly yours,

WILLIAM R. MARTIN.

The above suggestions, if strictly followed out, will avoid any chance of a block, and, as Mr. Martin writes, will also afford the public an excellent opportunity to witness the largest turnout of four-in-hand coaches ever made in this City. It must be remembered, however, that the success of the parade depends to a great extent upon a uniform attention to Mr. Martin's suggestions, which, though addressed to the President of the Coaching Club, really apply to every person driving in the Park this afternoon. Coaching, like other manly sports that have been lately introduced into this country, has become immensely popular, and gives promise of being very soon one of our most favorite outdoor amusements. The success that attended the recent experiment of Mr. Delancey Kane with the Pelham Coach has given an impetus to coaching, and affords a strong proof of the tastes of the people, as during his entire season it was almost impossible to get a seat without securing it nearly a month in advance. The Coaching Club was organized last January with only half a dozen names, and there are now twelve subscribers to its rolls, it having doubled its membership in less than twelve months. No more satisfactory evidence of the growing interest in the sport could be produced. The present list of members comprises the following gentlemen: Mr. William Jay, President; Mr. J. G. Bennett, Vice President; Mr. W. E. Dodge, Jr., Treasurer; Mr. Nicholas Kane, Mr. Delancey Kane, Mr. Rice, Mr. F. Brunson, Mr. Nelson, Mr. Whiting, Mr. Fairman Rogers, Mr. Leonard Jerome, and Mr. Newbold. As the coaches are to draw up in line on the east side of Madison square, and as in all probability the club will be represented by a dozen four-in-hands, there will not be much room in that quarter for private carriages; and it will be entirely unnecessary to crowd them, as everybody can obtain a good view on the avenue or in the Park.

CONFERENCES OF RAILROAD MANAGERS.

A conference is now in progress in this City between representatives of the Grand Trunk, Great Western, Canada Southern, Michigan Central, and Lake Shore Railroads, on matters of common interest. Mr. J. Hickson represents the Grand Trunk; W. F. Broughton the Great Western; W. L. Scott the Canada Southern; Samuel Sloan and Superintendent Ledyard the Michigan Central, and John Newall the Lake Shore. The chief point under discussion is an advance in rates for eastern-bound freight. There is unanimity in the opinion that the present rates are too low and that they must be substantially increased as soon as possible. The managers of the several trunk lines—the Erie, New-York Central, Pennsylvania, and Baltimore and Ohio Railroads—have been notified of the feeling prevailing in the conference, and it is proposed to call a meeting of the managers of these lines to take decisive action. The meeting will be held at the earliest practicable time, and Mr. Sloan is authority for the statement that without doubt the rates will be raised.

A conference of railroad managers was held yesterday at the Grand Central Depot. There were present at the session Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, and Messrs. Bliss, of the Boston and Albany, Hickson, of the Grand Trunk, and Newell, of the Lake Shore, all representatives of connections of the New-York Central Road. The meeting was strictly private, but Mr. Vanderbilt, when questioned by a TIMES representative, declared that the discussion was in relation to a readjustment of certain differences between the roads represented in the conference.

WOMANS' TEMPERANCE UNION.

The Womans' National Christian Temperance Union, which has been in session at Newark, N. J., yesterday afternoon elected the following officers: President, Mrs. Annie Wittenmeyer, of Pennsylvania; Corresponding Secretary, Miss Frances E. Willard, of Illinois; Assistant Corresponding Secretary, Mrs. Sarah K. Bolton, of Ohio; Recording Secretary, Mrs. Mary C. Johnson, of New-York; Assistant Recording Secretary, Mrs. Mary F. Burt, of New-York; Treasurer, Mrs. S. K. Leavitt, of Ohio, and one Vice President from each State and Territory. The elections were unanimous. Addresses were delivered by several temperance workers, and this evening a large mass-meeting was held at the Second Presbyterian Church, after which the convention adjourned to meet the third Wednesday in October, 1877, probably at Chicago.

THE BALTIMORE RACES.

THREE TOLERABLE CONTESTS OF SPEED.

THE TWO-YEAR-OLD DASH WON BY BOMBAST — GALWAY SUCCESSFUL IN THE SELLING RACE—A FINE RUN OF FOUR MILES AND REPEAT—THE BAY COLT ADD THE WINNER.

BALTIMORE, Oct. 27.—At Pimlico to-day the weather was fine, the track good, and the attendance large. The first race was for a purse of $350. The start was good, with Bombast, the favorite, leading, Hibernia second, Sally McCrea third, and Princeton fourth. At the quarter Sally McCrea ran to the second place, and held it up the backstretch and around the lower turn. Coming into the homestretch Hibernia went to the second position, and the finish was made with Bombast leading Hibernia one length, Sally McCrea a good third, and Princeton a bad fourth.

SUMMARY.

FIRST RACE.—One mile for two-year olds; purse, $350, of which $50 to second horse. Winner of Central Stakes, 5 pounds extra.

Time—1:47¾.

In the second race Galway got away first, with Bill Bruce second, Courier third, and the others running together. There was no change in the lower turn nor at the first quarter, but at the judge's stand Courier was in front, with Warlock second, Paladin third, Bill Bruce fourth, Galway fifth, Kenny sixth and Lady Mac, Tom O'Neil and Modoc bringing up the rear. At the quarter Galway went up second, with Warlock in the lead, and ran around to the lower turn without change. On the homestretch Bill Bruce went to front and came to the finish an easy winner by two lengths, with Galway second, Courier third, Tom O'Neill fourth and the others far in the rear.

SUMMARY.

SECOND RACE.—Selling race, for all ages; one and a half miles; horses entered to be sold at auction immediately after the race; for $1,500, full weight; for $1,000, allowed 5 pounds; for $750, allowed 10 pounds; for $500, allowed 14 pounds; if not to be sold at all, 7 pounds extra; purse, $350 for the first horse, $100 for the second.

Time—2:43¾.

The third race was the Bowie Stake, of four mile heats. In the first heat Big Sandy led off with Add second, Piccolo third, and Heretog fourth. On the upper turn Add went to the front, with Big Sanny second, and Piccolo third, until the end of the first mile, then Heretog went up and held it to the end of the second mile, when he took the second place. The race was then between Add and Heretog, Big Sandy and Piccolo being so far behind as to leave no hope of saving their distance. The third and fourth miles were finished with Add eight lengths ahead of Heretog, and Big Sandy and Piccolo distanced.

For the second heat Add was the favorite at large odds, and he led off in the start. He ran the four miles under a pull, and came to the finish eight lengths ahead, winning the heat and the race.

SUMMARY.

THIRD RACE.—Bowie Stakes, four-mile heats; for all ages; $100 entrance, half forfeit; five or more subscribers to fill, and three or more horses to start; the Club to add $2,000 for the first horse, and $200 for the second, who is to receive the Stakes to the amount of $300. TROTTING AT WASHINGTON.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—This was the fourth and last day of the Fall meeting at the Washington Driving Park. The first race, for four-minute District horses, was won by Lady Elma in three straight heats, Mount Holly second, and Harry third. Time—3:06, 3:00, 3:05. In the second race, for 2:35 horses, there were ten entries and six started. Hunter took the first heat, with Jacob Larian second, Morning third, Queen May fourth Gen. McArthur fifth, and Washington, Jr., last. Time—2:35. The second heat was won by Jacob Larian, Queen May second, Hunter third, Morning fourth, Gen. McArthur fifth, and Washington, Jr., last. Time—2:37½. Jacob Larian also won the third heat, Morning second, Queen May third, Hunter fourth, Gen. McArthur fifth, and Washington, Jr., last. Time—2:39. The fourth heat was won by Queen May, Hunter second, Morning third, Washington, Jr., fourth, Gen. McArthur fifth, and Jacob Larian sixth. Time—2:36. Darkness having set in, the race was here postponed until 2 o'clock to-morrow afternoon.

THE NATIONAL JOCKEY CLUB RACES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—The Autumn meeting of the National Jockey Club will commence on Tuesday next, and continue for three days. All of the stables now at Pimlico will be represented, and it is expected that the meeting will be the largest which has ever been held in this section. On the first day there will be a dash of three-fourths of a mile, mile heats, and two-mile hurdles; on Nov. 1 a dash of one and a half miles, mile heats, and hurdle; Nov. 2, a dash of one and a quarter miles, two-mile heats, and mile heats over four hurdles. These races will be on the Bennings' Course track, five miles from this city.

MARINE DISASTERS.

PANAMA, Oct. 19.—The Panama Transit and Pacific Mail steamer Costa Rica, Capt. Rathbun, which left Panama on the 29th of September, for Acapulco, touching at Central American ports, when within eighty miles of Pontas Arenas, lost one of the blades of her screw. On the 3d of October, at noon, the Costa Rica experienced a heavy gale, with a frightful sea running. On the 4th, the wind increased to a cyclone, shifting all around the compass. At 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon of that day the hurricane-deck was blown away, at the same time carrying away the head of the mainmast, maintopmast, and gaff. A short time after the ship lost one of her quarter boats and stove another. Such weather has never before been experienced on this coast. Capt. Rathbun and his officers behaved admirably throughout the cyclone, and the passengers on board have drawn up a highly complimentary letter praising them for their conduct in such trying moments. The Italian bark Quatro, bound from Lobos for Gibraltar with guano, has put into Valparaiso leaking.

The steam-ship Rio Rio, owned by the South American Steam-ship Company, is reported to have taken fire while at anchor in Valparaiso Bay. The Italian bark Primavera, recently arrived at Montevideo, from Genoa, reports having received, in latitude 35° 4′ south, longitude 57° 35′ west, from the American ship Independence, from Philadelphia, for Valparaiso, the crew of the English ship Scotstown, bound from Glasgow to San Francisco. The Scotstown had been blown on her beam ends in a squall, and subsequently foundered.

A CHICAGO JURYMAN'S LIFE THREATENED.

CHICAGO, Oct. 27.—After argument by counsel for the defense and a protest by Prosecuting Attorney Reed, Judge McAllister yesterday afternoon admitted Sullivan, who was tried for the murder of Francis Hanford, to bail in $8,000. The court vigorously defended himself from the accusations of Mr. Reed, and affirmed his belief that the prisoner was rather wronged than wronging, and that there was no murder in the case. Berry, the juryman who stood out for conviction, states that he was assailed by jurymen during their deliberations in the vilest manner; that threats were made against his life if he should persist, and that he dared not sleep in the jury-room. The excitement over the case is on the increase in the city.

ARKANSAS DISTILLERS PUNISHED.

LITTLE ROCK, Oct. 27.—In the Federal Court to-day, Judge H. C. Caldwell presiding, four of the proprietors of illict distilleries were convicted and sentenced as follows: Newton Storms, to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,000; David F. Inman, to one month's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,000; Frazier Carr, to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $5,000; Amos F. Curtis, to one year's imprisonment and to pay a fine of $5,000.

THE INDIAN TREATY.

SIOUX CITY, Oct. 27.—A telegram from the Yankton Agency says the steamer C. K. Peck passed down at noon yesterday with the Sioux Commission. They report that their mission has been satisfactory and successful. They held councils at all the agencies on the Upper Missouri, and the treaty was signed by all the head Chiefs of the different bands. The commission, at the request of the Indians, struck out the section proposing to remove them to the Indian Territory. The Indians accepted all the other propositions without objection.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.

A SEVERE HURRICANE—LARGE AMOUNT OF PROPERTY DESTROYED—TWENTY LIVES LOST—INSURRECTIONARY MOVEMENTS.

PANAMA, Oct. 19.—A severe cyclone passed over the Central American States on the 3d and 4th inst. The town of Managua in Macaragua, was inundated on the 4th. About four hundred houses were blown down by the hurricane. The inhabitants had to climb up on top of their houses to prevent being washed away by the flood. Many were drowned by the houses falling. The total damage done is estimated to be about two million dollars. The town of Blewfield, on the Mosquito Coast, in Nicaragua, also experienced the hurricane. Over three hundred houses were blown down. The Governor of Graytown visited the spot subsequently, carrying provisions, &c., for the relief of the sufferers. The same storm passed over the Lake of Nicaragua, causing an immense amount of damage. The Commodore Adams, a lake steamer, was destroyed while lying alongside the wharf at Granada. The loss on the coffee crops has been estimated at $3,000,000. About twenty lives were lost, the whole district around being completely flooded.

The news from Bogota is to the 23d ult. The Simon Bolivar, which brought it, had on board a number of officers for the army corps engaged against the Antioquia rebels. Gen. Reyes Patria had an army corps of 5,000 men. He is the civil and military chief of Tolima. The people of the States of Santander and Boyaco rose en masse, offering their services to the Government of the Union of Colombia. On the 9th of October Gen. Santos Acosta attacked the guerrillas of Guasca and took several prisoners, among whom are thirteen of the most noted chiefs of the rebels. Not an enemy now remains in that State save the dispersed remnants of the guerrillas. Señor Para, President of the Union, was about to take the field, and gave orders to detain the steamers Gen. Nieto and Columbia, at Caracoli, to convey his Excellency and the troops about to invade Antioquia by Nare. From Barranquilla the steamer Murillo took the Second Battalion of Bolivar on the 2d inst., to form the vanguard of the army about Zaragoza. Three war bungoes followed, to be stationed at Nechi. The Murillo was to come back to Barranquilla on the 10th of October, to convey to the same place the Third Battalion, joined by the officers brought by the Simon Bolivar, most of whom are Antiequia Liberals. President Para expected to enter into Mevellin soon with 15,000 men, and there were some prospects of an end of the rebellion. Capt. S. Duncan was in command of the Simon Bolivar.

The rebellion continues in the United States of Colombia. The Government intends, it is reported, to raise an army of 30,000 men to suppress it. Fighting has been progressing in Tolima, where Gen. Delgado defeated the rebels under their chief Casabianca. The rebels retreated into Antioquia, and the rebel forces at Manizales, in that State, with whom he formed a junction, are now said to amount to 10,000 men. Gen. Delgado, of the National Army, has joined Gen. Trujilio, in the State of Cauca, and their united forces number 9,000 men. An important fight is expected to take place very soon. The rebels hold Pasto. No movement has yet been made by the national troops in that direction. Gen. Sanchez, with 15,000 men, guards Popayan. From that place the capital is safe from a coup de main on the part of the rebels. Foreigners apprehend some danger to their properties, but their lives are not endangered.

FATAL RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

DISASTER ON THE NEW-JERSEY MIDLAND RAILROAD—AN ENGINEER AND FIREMAN KILLED, AND TWO OTHERS SERIOUSLY INJURED.

An accident of a most frightful character occurred yesterday morning on the New-Jersey Midland Railroad, at Hawthorne, a short distance beyond Paterson. The railroad at that place is carried across the river on one of the Watson iron bridges, about sixty feet long and forty feet high. The road also crosses the Erie Railway track there, at an angle of about forty-five degrees, and an elevation of forty feet. The Erie depot is just under the bridge. Yesterday morning freight-train No. 9, from New-York, which was due at Paterson at 8:05, arrived there on time, and proceeded westward, after taking on a number of empty coal cars, which were put in front of the locomotive. Just before reaching the bridge the lever of the brake on one of the coal cars dropped down, throwing the car from the track. It struck the end of the bridge, jarring it from its moorings, and the whole structure trembled for a moment, and then fell with a crash. The cars and locomotive followed it, and were piled on top of one another. The noise of the crash was heard at a distance of half a mile. John Duen, the engineer, and Patrick McCuliffe, the fireman, must have both seen their danger as the first cars went over, and McCuliffe jumped as the locomotive reached the first abutment; he was crushed under a falling car and reduced to an unrecognizable mass. The engineer bravely stuck to his post, and went down with the engine into the yawning abyss. The locomotive toppled over on her side, and Duen was wedged into the cab. The hissing steam commenced to pour out upon him, and in a short time his flesh was literally par-boiled. His agonizing screams were heard a long distance, and continued until first unconsciousness and then death mercifully released him from his terrible sufferings. The bodies of both men presented a sickening sight when they were taken out and laid upon the ground side by side. Duen resided at Port Jervis and McCuliffe at Middletown. Both were unmarried. H. R. Krum, the conductor, was thrown from the train at the time to save his life, but he received some ugly bruises. James Berthoff, of Middletown, one of the brakemen, had both legs broken, and received internal injuries of so severe a character that he will probably die. He was removed to the Ladies' Hospital in Paterson. The remaining brakeman, who was the only other person on the train, happened to be in the caboose at the time, very fortunately for himself, and escaped uninjured. When the bridge fell one end of it struck the end of the Erie Railway depot, and moved the building from its foundations. A rumor was circulated that an Erie passenger train was just leaving the depot when the bridge fell, and the rear end was struck, but it was found to be untrue. A dispatch was sent to Paterson, and a wrecking train sent out to the scene to remove the debris. This proved to be a difficult job, as fifteen cars, besides the locomotive, were completely wrecked. Travel on the Erie road was impeded and a wrecking train was sent out from Jersey City to assist in removing the wreck. Receiver Hubart and Frank Hoxsey were early on the ground and gave directions for the care of the dead and wounded, after which they superintended the removal of the debris. The two dead bodies were taken in charge by Coroners Meyers and Van Der Bylat, who will hold an inquest this morning. The bridge will be replaced by a Howe Truss wooden bridge and it is expected that travel will be resumed on Monday.

The wreck was cleared from the Erie track at 4:30 o'clock yesterday afternoon, and travel on the Erie road was resumed.

A MAN KILLED ON THE PENNSYLVANIA ROAD.

At 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon an unknown man who had just arrived on a train from the Centennial Exhibition, was killed at the Pennsylvania Railroad depot in Jersey City. One train was going out and another coming in, when he became confused and was knocked down by one of the trains. When he fell his neck rested on the track, and the wheels passing over it severed his head from his body. From papers and a railroad ticket found on his person it is supposed that deceased resided in South Vernon, Mass. The name Dwight Johnson, North Orange, Mass., was written on the back of a card of the Rix House, Philadelphia. The remains were taken in charge by Coroner Gannon.

THE SCARCITY OF WATER.

The following communication concerning the present scarcity of Croton water was sent to President Smith, of the Police Board, by the Commissioner of Public Works yesterday afternoon:

DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC WORKS, COMMISSIONERS OFFICE,
NEW-YORK, Oct. 27, 1876.

Gen. W. F. Smith, President Police Department:

SIR: The circumstances surrounding the unusual and continued drouth constrains me to request that your department make known to the citizens through a general order, not only the necessity for obedience to the ordinance, of which I wrote to you yesterday, in regard to washing streets, sidewalks, steps, or buildings during the day, but also to abstain from the use of the water at all for such purposes pending the present emergency. Your immediate attention hereto will greatly oblige yours, respectfully, ALLAN CAMPBELL,
Commissioner of Public Works.

SERIOUS RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

BIDDEFORD, Oct. 27.—By the breaking of a transom-bolt, the accommodation train leaving Portland at 5:30 P. M. on the Boston and Maine Railroad was thrown from the track near Scarboro. George West, of this city, and George Hobbs, proprietor of the Atlantic House at Wells Beach, were seriously injured. Several others were slightly injured. The cars were badly wrecked and the trains delayed some hours.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Sergeant Firth, of the Thirty-first Precinct, was yesterday transferred to the Twenty-fourth Precinct by the Police Board.

Among the callers on Mayor Wickham yesterday was Mr. Smith Ely, Jr., the Tammany candidate for Mr. Wickham's chair.

The body of an unknown man, about thirty years of age, was found floating in the North River, near Pier No. 6, yesterday, and was taken to the Morgue for identification.

This is the last day for registration in this City. All Republicans who have not already registered should do so to-day; otherwise they cannot vote at the approaching election.

The steam-ship Acapulco, Capt. Clapp, of the Pacific Mail Line, while entering the port of Aspinwall on the 9th inst. was struck by lightning and her topmast shivered down to her lowest mast, a distance of forty feet. No person was injured.

Rev. Chauncey Giles, minister of the Swedenborgian Church, in East Thirty-fifth street, will deliver a sermon to-morrow morning on "Man's Place in the Creation: How He is Related to God on One Side of His Nature, and is Different from Animals on the Other."

Very little progress was made yesterday by Mr. J. J. Anderson, the Receiver of the Continental Life Insurance Company, in arriving at the assets and liabilities of the company. Mr. Anderson says he is more strongly of the opinion that the policy-holders will sustain no loss.

A meeting of the creditors of James Cockcroft, law bookseller, was held yesterday at the office of Register Williams. Mr. S. J. Ahern was appointed Assignee. The liabilities foot up $94,000, and the assets, as returned, consist of a watch and wearing apparel valued at $300. The creditors manifest great indignation at the statement.

The paintings which were recovered from the cabin of the yacht Mohawk have been repainted and retouched by the original artists, and the colors brought out as fresh as when they were first painted. They are to have new frames and are to be placed in Mr. Garner's old home in Thirty-third street for preservation as heirlooms of the family.

BROOKLYN.

This is the last day for registration in New-York City. Republicans who have not already registered should not fail to do so to-day.

Thomas Deroy, of No. 214 Fourteenth street, yesterday caused the arrest of Jacob Reitzheimer, a conductor, on a charge of robbing him of a watch, valued at $100, and $4 in money.

Charles W. Saunders was last night removed by the Police Board from the position of Inspector of Election in the Twenty-eighth Election District of the Fifth Assembly District, and Edward H. Baker was appointed as his successor.

Bella Ward, aged eighteen years, of No. 1 Emmet street, was arrested yesterday morning, charged with being an accomplice of Mary Conklin, who was arrested on Thursday evening, charged with stealing $200 worth of wearing apparel from Sarah A. Allen, of No. 46 Concord street.

Dr. A. W. Shepard yesterday held a post-mortem examination on the body of Patrick Stines, of Maspeth, Long Island, which was found on Thursday morning floating in the water at the foot of Forty-ninth street. He gave it as his opinion that Mr. Stines came to his death by drowning, and that the abrasions of the scalp were caused by being eaten by fishes, and coming in contact with rocks such as line the shores of the bay.

The first monthly reception of Evening School No. 1, corner of Adams and Concord streets, took place last evening. The exercises consisted of piano solos, recitations, songs and declamations, by several of the male and female pupils of Day School No. 1. The school of Mr. S. C. Abbott, Principal is in charge with a competent corps of teachers. There are seventeen classes—twelve male and five female—with an average aggregate attendance of nearly 400 pupils.

The dead body of John N. Mitchell, residing at No. 260 Myrtle avenue, Brooklyn, and employed as a private watchman in the neighborhood of Fort Greene Park, was found at 9 o'clock yesterday morning in a vacant lot on Cumberland street, between Myrtle and Willoughby avenues. There were no marks of foul play on the body. Mitchell was formerly a member of the Metropolitan Police force. Death is supposed to have been caused by heart disease.

James Hayes, formerly of Boston, was arrested yesterday on board the ship Minnesota, now lying at the Brooklyn Navy-yard, for a robbery committed some time since in Boston. Hayes is accused of stealing $1,400 from the office of a saw-mill and escaping with it to New-York. Neither the officers followed him, but did not succeed in arresting him until he had spent the money and enlisted in the Navy-yard. He was handed over to the Boston officers on a requisition from the Governor of Massachusetts, and taken back to Boston for trial.

WESTCHESTER COUNTY.

The celebration of the Battle of White Plains will take place to-day at 2 P. M. Major Gen. James W. Husted, Grand Master of Masons of the State of New York, will lay the corner-stone of the monument which is to be erected on Chatterton Hill, with full Masonic rites. The address will be delivered by Hon. Clarkson N. Potter.

NEW-JERSEY.

This is the last day for registration in New-York City. Republicans who have not already registered should not fail to do so to-day.

In the Hudson County Court of Sessions yesterday, Thomas Drum, who had previously pleaded guilty to a charge of atrocious assault and battery on Patrick Brannagan, was sentenced to State Prison for eighteen months.

During the parade of the Lippincott Minute Men at Union Hill Thursday night, a little boy who stood close to the muzzle of their cannon while it was being fired off, was badly burned about the head, face, and breast. The Police authorities have prohibited the firing of cannon in the streets of Jersey City.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Central Railroad of New-Jersey yesterday afternoon a resolution was passed offering a reward of $1,000 for the arrest and $1,000 for the conviction of the party or parties who misplaced the switch at Evons Station on the night of Oct. 24, which resulted in the loss of three lives and the wounding of fourteen passengers.

Patrick Bayley, aged seven years, was run over by a coal cart at Mitchell's coal yard, No. 141 Commerce street, Newark, Thursday evening, and instantly killed. The boy was hanging to the rail of the cart, when the driver suddenly turned around, and he was thrown off. One of the wheels passed over his head. The boy resided with his parents at No. 137 South Canal street.

John Walker, aged sixty years, jumped from a rapidly-moving Erie Railway train, at Passaic, yesterday morning, and was hurled with so much violence against a board fence that he went clean through it, making a hole with jagged edges, like that made by a stone thrown through a pane of glass. He was picked up unconscious, and found to be badly bruised and cut, but not dangerously injured. His escape from death was miraculous.

DEMOCRATIC DISHONESTY.

STUPENDOUS FRAUDS ATTEMPTED.

DESPERATE ATTEMPT TO VIOLATE THE ELECTION LAWS IN PHILADELPHIA—FIFTY THOUSAND FRAUDULENT TAX RECEIPTS PREPARED—THE RINGLEADER ARRESTED—ALL THE PAPERS IN THE HANDS OF THE POLICE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 28.—We have just arrested Henry Marcus, an ex-member of the select Council from the Fourth Ward and Treasurer of the Democratic City Executive Committee. He was coming from the Democratic State Committee rooms with a paper, prepared to issue 50,000 fraudulent tax receipts. A warrant has been issued for Samuel Josephs, a Democratic candidate for the Legislature, who is charged with conspiring with the said Marcus to violate the Election laws of the Commonwealth. We have unearthed one of the most stupendous frauds ever attempted in this city. All the fraudulent papers have been captured by the Police.

HOW THE SCHEME WAS DISCOVERED.

LOOKING FOR PAPER WITH A PECULIAR WATER-MARK—TILDEN'S TOOLS CAUGHT IN THE VERY ACT—TWO LARGE BUNDLES OF BOGUS RECEIPTS CAPTURED—THE CREDIT DUE TO THE CHAIRMAN OF THE REPUBLICAN COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 28.—The Police last night captured paper for issuing 50,000 bogus tax receipts in this city in the hands of two prominent members of the Democratic Party. It seems that a few days ago Hon. Christian Kneass, Chairman of the Republican City Committee, to whom the credit for unearthing this great fraud is due, was informed that the Democracy intended to flood the City with bogus tax receipts, but that the great trouble was to procure paper with the water-marks "Personal tax, 1876," on it. At last the paper was obtained, and to-night, while the rank and file of the party were giving Gen. McClellan, of moth powder fame, a reception, a wagon came out of Griswold's alley, near Sixth and Bainbridge streets, in the Fourth Ward. This was followed by Detective Harry Weyle. The carriage was driven to the headquarters of the Democratic State Central Committee, No. 1,014 Walnut street. Here Henry Marcus, ex-member of the City Council from the Fourth Ward, alighted. Soon Samuel Josephs, a leader of the Democracy, and candidate for the Legislature in the Twenty-eighth District, appeared. In a short time Marcus and Josephs appeared, coming from the headquarters each carrying a large bundle. The bundles were placed in the carriage, and Marcus got in. Josephs went up Watnut street. Detective Weyle and a couple of officers followed in another carriage, and on Locust street, below Tenth, overhauled the carriage containing the bogus receipts. The party were driven to Police Headquarters, where it was found that it was a great capture, the receipts having the required water-mark, and could not be detected from the genuine. Marcus was given a hearing, and held in $5,000 bail for violating the Election laws. A warrant was issued for Josephs, and he will be arrested before morning. The driver of the carriage said the receipts were to be taken to the printing-house of Gilleen & Nagle, in Fifth street, below Walnut. This capture prevents the consummation of the greatest fraud which had ever been attempted here, and shows where the party of reform intended to get their votes.

A WARNING TO WORKING MEN.

ANOTHER INSTANCE OF THE DISASTROUS EFFECT TILDEN'S ELECTION WOULD HAVE ON BUSINESS INTERESTS.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I notice your correspondent writes from Buffalo that parties in Olean, N. Y., have $175,000 lying idle, awaiting investment in a manufacturing interest if Hayes is elected, but which will be withdrawn if Tildén is elected. We have a parallel case here. A manufacturing interest will be started here, with $100,000 or more capital, which will employ one hundred to one hundred and fifty men, if Hayes is elected, but not a dollar will be invested in it if Tilden is elected. The projectors are among our most successful and wealthy business men.

THE BRITISH ARCTIC EXPEDITION

FURTHER PARTICULARS OF THE VOYAGE OF THE ARCTIC AND DISCOVERY—THE IMPRACTICABILITY OF REACHING THE NORTH POLE.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—Capt. Nares, commander of the Arctic Expedition, has sent a telegram to the Admiralty, announcing his return. His dispatch contains only the following additional particulars of the voyage: "The Polar Sea is never navigable. The ordinary ice averages eighty feet in thickness. Animal life and the northerly migration of birds ends south of Cape Colombia. A memorial tablet was erected to Capt. Hall, of the Polaris Expedition, at Polaris Bay. Esquimaux traces cease on the west shore in latitude 80° 52', whence they cross to Greenland. The impracticability of reaching the North Pole was proved. All the neighboring lands were examined." The telegram confirms all the details of the expedition transmitted to the United States in yesterday's and last night's dispatches.

The expedition brought home a specimen of wheat deposited by the American steamer Polaris while on her Arctic voyage.

LATEST FROM THE SEAT OF WAR.

SELF-MUTILATION AMONG THE SERVIAN SOLDIERS—THE SUCCESS OF THE MONTENEGRINS.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—A Times dispatch from Belgrade confirms the statement that self-wounding is again becoming frequent among the Servians. The dispatch says: During the fight at Krevet a distinguished officer brought half of a Russian battalion to the front, saying he was compelled to leave the other half behind to prevent the Servians from running away.

RAGUSA, Oct. 28.—Dervish Pasha has withdrawn from Podgeritza to the Grondy district in the rear of Palatka. The surrender of Medun to the Montenegrins has produced a strong impression in Albania. The Montenegrins have liberated the Albanian prisoners taken during the recent fighting.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

LATEST PHASE OF THE NEGOTIATIONS—THE MAINTENANCE OF THE OTTOMAN EMPIRE—THE SERVIAN CABINET DIFFICULTY—AN EXTRAORDINARY COUNCIL OF MINISTERS.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—The article published in an official form in this morning's Post, explanatory of the latest phase of the negotiations on the Eastern Question, a portion of which was sent to the United States, also says: If an armistice is agreed upon then comes the question of a conference. Russia objects to Turkish participation therein. It may be assumed that this refers solely to the position of a power deliberating on its own case. Obviously if six Powers meet to discuss recommendations to be made to a seventh, there is something anomalous in giving the latter the casting vote in their decisions, but it is impossible for a moment to consent to the exclusion of Turkey from the European system, of which, in virtue of the Treaty of Paris, she forms a part. It ought to be practicable to find a method by which a representative of the Porte may sit in a conference so as to obviate this difficulty. Before a conference is summoned, the questions of its basis and objects, which might occasion protracted and dangerous debate, should by unanimous agreement be reduced to the simplest terms, which may be stated thus: The basis of the conference is the maintenance of the independence and integrity of the Ottoman Empire; the object is the amelioration of the condition of the Christian subjects of the Sultan, this basis could not alarm Turkey, regarding her sovereign rights; this object is one which Russia professed alone to have in view. We are not without foundation for the hope that the solution here foreshadowed may be happily effected. The Pall Mall Gazette in a leading article to-day takes quite a hopeful view of the peace prospects.

A despatch from Vienna to the TIMES, states that Prince Anerspergs reply in the Reicharath, yesterday, to the interpellations on the Eastern question, is not satisfactory. There will probably be an animated debate on the subject in that body.

BELGRADE, Oct. 28.—The Servian Cabinet difficulty is in a fair way of being settled. It is probable that M. Nicolich will consent to retain the portfolio of Minister of War. A telegram from the Minister of the Interior at Beligrad, to Prime Minister Ristics in reply to an inquiry, says the Turks have not taken Djunis.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 28.—An extraordinary council of Ministers was held on Thursday, to consider the armistice question. The German, Russian, Austrian, and Italian Ambassadors conferred together on Friday. Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Ambassador, will have an interview with the Sultan to-day.

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

FINANCIAL AND COMMERCIAL—THE STOCK EXCHANGE AND MINCING LANE MARKETS.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—The Stock Exchange was much calmer this week, and the principal securities generally advanced. The preparation for Monday's settlement in foreign stocks and bonds has thus far disclosed no embarrassments. The Continental bourses have also been much firmer and calmer. There has been a considerable "bull" movement in Anglo-American and Direct Cable shares, in consequence of reports of a fusion or working agreement. Such an arrangement has undoubtedly been discussed by the parties in interest, but its consummation is improbable. The discount rate has been well maintained, considering the limited number of bills and the large amount of floating capital. To-day's market was quiet but firm, with a generally upward tendency.

In the Mincing lane markets an almost general improvement is noted, with some return of speculative feeling. The political rumors have not had much effect. Sugar continues active and has advanced ten to twenty shillings per ton, and holders yesterday were even asking more. The supply of plantation Ceylon Coffee is running out; buyers are eager, and prices are 2s. @3s. per cwt. higher. Tea is quiet and dull, Rice is rather higher. Saltpetre is firm, but the demand has slackened.

The Times to-day in its financial article, says the feeling that war is staved off at least for the Winter, becomes much more prevalent, and inclining to stock operations for a rise.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

THE ELECTIONS IN GERMANY—A 100-TON GUN FOR THE ITALIAN NAVY—A TERRIBLE ENGINE OF WAR.

BERLIN, Oct. 28.—Complete returns of the election for the Prussian Chamber of Deputies held yesterday give the following result: National Liberals, 177; Centre Party, 86; Progressists, 66; the various conservative sections, 70; Poles, 15; Particularists 5, and 14 of no declared party. The result does not materially alter the political attitude of the Chambers.

LONDON, Oct. 28.—The Times publishes a dispatch from Spezia which says that the trials of the hundred-ton Armstrong gun made for the Italian Government were eminently successful. A bolt fired with 341 pounds of powder attained a velocity of 1,500 feet per second, smashed solid wrought iron plates twenty two inches thick, completely pierced the strong backing and thirty-inch skin of a target, the resistance of which is supposed to equal the sides of the great Italian ironclad Duilio, and had enough velocity remaining to have smashed the other side of the ship, and would have carried complete ruin into her interior. An equal charge completely demolished soft steel plates of Schneider manufacture, but did not penetrate the backing, though it is stated the shock would have so shaken the structure of a vessel like the Duilio as to cause a leak. The heaviest blow of the bolt equaled 31,250 foot tons.

SENATOR BLAINE IN CHICAGO.

A MAGNIFICENT OVATION—OVER 15,000 PERSONS PRESENT—A VIGOROUS SPEECH ENTHUSIASTICALLY RECEIVED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Oct. 28.—The reception in this city to-night to Hon. James G. Blaine was a magnificent ovation in point of numbers and enthusiasm. The Exposition Building, in which he spoke, was filled to its extremest limit, the attendance reaching between fifteen and twenty thousand—fully as large as the turnout to listen to Col. Robert Ingersoll on last Saturday evening. Mr. Blaine spoke nearly two hours, reviewing constically and with great vigor, the objectionable features and record of the Democrat Party. His speech was enthusiastically received, and the whole demonstration takes a leading place with the most remarkable gatherings of the campaign. The Republicans here have secured the appointment of Election Supervisors, under the law of 1871, and are making a preliminary canvass o every ward of Chicago with a view to the detection and punishment of all frauds which may be attempted or perpetrated.

LEGISLATIVE NOMINATIONS.

MIDDLETOWN, Oct. 28.—J. D. Rockafeller, of this place, was nominated by the Republican Convention to-day for member of Assembly from the Second District of Orange County. Stewart L. Durland is the Democratic candidate.

SOUTH CAROLINA TO GIVE TILDEN AND HAMPTON TEN THOUSAND MAJORITY—FOUR DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN TO BE ELECTED—"WE HAVE SHOT-GUNS ENOUGH TO DO IT"—THE TRUTH ABOUT THE DEMOCRATIC NEGROES—ARE THE BLACK MEN STILL SLAVES?

From our Special Correspondent.

COLUMBIA, Monday, Oct. 23, 1876.

The leaders of the shot-gun campaign in South Carolina confidently predict that they will carry the State for Tilden and Hampton by a majority at least ten thousand votes. There are many reasons to believe that this prophecy will be fulfilled. If it is, the war was a failure and the passage of the constitutional amendments a farce. By the acts of reconstruction the right of suffrage was guaranteed to the negroes of the South. Those acts were passed by the Congress of the United States, and if Messrs. Tilden and Hampton receive a majority in South Carolina, it will be because the acts in question are ignored and trampled upon by the supporters of the gentlemen named. In short, to be successful in the approaching election, the Democrats of South Carolina must openly defy the laws enacted by the national legislature. To prove this I need only refer to the last census, which shows that the State has 184,943 male inhabitants over twenty-one years of age. Of this number 110,744 are colored and 74,199 are white, the colored majority being 36,545. There are at least 4,000 white Republicans in South Carolina, but I will not take them into consideration at this time. To prove the Republican majority it is only necessary to state that nearly every one of the 110,744 colored males over twenty-one years of age would vote the Republican ticket if they were left to follow their own inclination and do as they wished. Wade Hampton's talk about colored Democrats is simply humbug, nothing more, nothing less. He knows, as every white man in the State knows and admits privately, that there are not two thousand negroes in all South Carolina who would vote the Democratic ticket freely and from choice. Every observing Southern traveler knows that a colored Democrat is a curiosity. I have spent months in this State, I have traveled through every county in it, and I know of only seven black men who willingly support Tilden and Hampton. One of them is a barber in Columbia, who has been nominated for a minor office on the Democratic ticket. The others are old family servants of leading Democrats who are opposed to the rifle club and shot-gun policy.

WHY THE NEGROES ARE REPUBLICANS.

It is very easy to understand why the negroes are all Republicans; right or wrong they are the most "clannish" people in this country. For generations every white man's hand was raised against them, and now it is no wonder that they do not join what is called here "the white man's party," "the anti-nigger army." They are a grateful people, and they know that they owe their freedom, their manhood to the Republican Party. They all want to vote—to do so is a religion with them—and they all want to vote the Republican ticket. If such were not the case, why have they been frightened away from the polls? Why are hundreds of them now hiding like hunted slaves in the swamps of Barnwell and Aiken? Why have they been whipped, beaten, kicked, intimidated, starved, cut, shot, murdered in all the up country of South Carolina? The blood-thirsty Butler, the hero of the Hamburg massacre or Gen. Gary, "the unreconstructed" idol of the Edgefield rebels, may answer these questions as they have done others of the same sort, by the general assertion that thousands of negroes have already pledged themselves to vote the Democratic ticket, and hundreds of them have joined the Democratic clubs and march in the Democratic processions. Such assertions are ridiculously false, and are only made to deceive people at the North. After the election the Democrats will doubtless recall them for the purpose of covering up the methods by which the Republican majority was overcome and a Democratic victory secured. Then the people will be told as they were after the Mississippi election: "Oh, we always knew it would be so. It was a foregone conclusion; thousands of negroes joined the Democratic clubs and voted the Democratic ticket.

I have been at some trouble to get at the truth in regard to this matter, and I find that in the Counties of Anderson, Greenville, Chesterfield, Horry, Lexington, Marion, Oconee, Pickens, and Spartanburg, which go to make up the pronounced white district, between fifteen and eighteen hundred black men have been forced into promising to vote for Hampton; but, as a number of them tell their friends, they will not keep this promise if they can possibly avoid doing so. In "bloody Aiken," and unreconstructed Edgefield, about five hundred colored men have promised to vote the Democratic ticket. These two thousand or twenty-three hundred are all the Democrats have any right to count upon. Every other negro who votes the Democratic ticket will do so because it would be death to refuse, and on the 7th of November next every black man who fails to vote will fail because he dare not go to the polls. This is the simple truth about what Gen. Wade Hampton calls "the great multitude of negroes who are going to vote the Democratic ticket." The wild statements that "hundreds of negroes have joined the Democratic clubs, and march in the Democratic processions," have about the same foundation. It was reported in all the Democratic papers in the State and in Georgia that at the Hampton meeting held in Edgefield a few days ago more than two hundred colored men marched in line with the Democratic clubs. There were just twenty-three negroes in that procession. At the Aiken meeting held on Friday last there were nineteen colored men and boys in line. Two of them assured me that they would have been whipped if they refused to join the procession, yet the following item is now going the rounds of the South Carolina and Georgia press: "At the glorious Hampton ratification meeting held in Aiken, nearly three hundred uniformed colored men marched in line with the white Reformers. They have all pledged themselves to vote against the Radical usurper."

ROAD-LINING.

It will be remembered that what is known as "road-lining" was one of the plans resorted to by the Democrats of Mississippi to keep the negroes away from the polls. Timid by birth, timid from long years of servitude, timid by habit, timid by education, the black men of the South are the most easily frightened people in the world. If one of "the superior race" look crooked at them they are almost ready to go down on their knees, and at sight of a gun in the hands of a white man, most of them run for their lives. Against such a people "the road-lining plan" can of course be used with great effect, and as it can now be definitely stated that the rifle-club leaders are preparing to put it into practice on election day, it may be well to explain some of its principal features. In South Carolina, as in all the Southern States, the polling places are few and far apart. In some instances it is necessary for a man to ride or walk a number of miles to get to the ballot-box. In what is known as the "up-country" of South Carolina, this ride has to be taken through a lonely and thinly-settled country, and there are only two or three roads leading to the central places where the polls are situated. The plan of the Democratic leaders is to "line" these roads on election day with armed and mounted members of the rifle clubs. A company of these men, under the command of a Captain or some minor officer, will be stationed at every cross-road and at intervals along all the highways and foot-paths through the woods. As a black man going in the direction of the polling places approaches, he will be stopped by these men and asked where he is going. If he replies "to vote," they will warn him that there is going to be a fight at the polls, and that he had better go home. If he still insists upon going on, and there are no United States troops in the neighborhood, he will be beaten until he is insensible, and then left as a warning to those who come after him. The Democratic leaders have coolly considered and arranged this plan, and they estimate that if it is properly carried out at least 10,000 negroes can be kept away from the polls in the up country and middle counties.

Among other things, the Democrats predict that they will elect four out of the five Congressmen to be voted for at the approaching election. A few days ago in Columbia a rifle-club leader was boasting that they would do so. "You will," said a brave but indiscreet white Republican, "if you have shot-guns enough." "Well, by ——, we have got them," was the Democrat's reply. Of course, when people talk in this way, legal majorities do not count for much, still the following figures may be of interest: In the First Congressional District there are 20,523 colored and 14,147 white voters. The white vote in the Second District is 10,750, and the colored 24,273. In the Third District there are 18,295 white and 20,918 colored voters. In the Fourth District the voting population is: white, 18,970; colored, 19,957. Of the whites, at least 1,000 vote the Republican ticket. In the Fifth District there are 12,037 white and 25,065 colored voters. In the face of these overwhelming Republican majorities, it might be well for Wade Hampton and his friends to tell the public just how many shot-guns they will need, and how many negroes they will have to whip and kill to elect four Democratic Congressmen. NEW-JERSEY REPUBLICANS.

A LARGE MEETING IN PASSAIC—ELOQUENT SPEECH BY CHARLES H. TREAT—AN EFFECTIVE AND CONVINCING ARGUMENT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PASSAIC, Oct. 28.—Rettinger's Hall was crowded to overflowing with an attentive audience to listen to Charles H. Treat, Esq., of Bath, Me., on the issues of the hour. Owing to a delay of the train Mr. Treat did not arrive until after 9 o'clock. His address was intensely logical and convincing. He referred to Tilden's action as Governor in signing the specie payment bill passed by the Legislature of New York, in striking contrast with his later views of the no-fixed-day policy of resumption for the United States; showing him to be unworthy the confidence of the people. He endorsed the work done by THE NEW-YORK TIMES, and stated that revelations made in its columns the past two days concerning the Beody matter and the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, were made known to him two years ago, but in such a manner that he could not make them public, though he knew them to be true. He made a telling hit on the danger of the payment of the rebel claims by showing the record of the Democratic Party through its legislators in the several States on the ratification of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, which he forcibly presented in tabular form showing that fourteen Southern States were overwhelmingly opposed to it, while the record in New-Jersey stood: Senate, yeas, 11; nays, 10; House, yeas, 31; nays, 24. New York: Senate, yeas, 23; nays, 3; House, yeas, 76; nays, 40—or a solid Democratic opposition all round. This he claimed, gave great force to the opinion that the claims would be presented and allowed if Tilden is elected. During the campaign there has not been such an effective and convincing argument as this, and with the rousing meeting to be held next Friday night, Passaic may be relied on to do her duty for Hayes and Wheeler and the general ticket. At the close, three times three were given with a will for the speaker, Hayes and Wheeler, James G. Blaine, of Maine, and for the numerous ladies who were present.

HURRICANE IN THE WEST INDIES.

NEW-ORLEANS, Oct. 28.—Capt. Bremner, of the steam-ship Chilian, from Kingston, Jamaica, reports the severest hurricane ever experienced at Grand Caymans Island, lasting from the 17th to the 21st inst. One hundred and seventy houses, and a large number of fruit trees were destroyed. A portion of the island was submerged, and a large number of cattle washed away. The inhabitants are in a destitute condition, having lost all their provisions. All the provisions that could be spared from the Chilian were given them. Capt. Bremner reports that he boarded the Norwegian bark Niard, from Porto Rico for New-Orleans, with fifty-five bags of coffee, which was wrecked during the hurricane at Grand Caymans. The vessel was badly wrecked, and the cargo entirely washed out. The bodies of three of the crew were found; two alongside, and one on board the bark. It was learned from the islanders that the bark's papers had been taken possession of by a magistrate. Nothing could be learned of the fate of the balance of the crew.

A REPUBLICAN NEWSPAPER'S TROUBLES.

WILKESBARRE, Oct. 28.—The Workingman, a Cooper and Cary organ, was to appear as a Republican sheet to-day. The business managers took out articles which had been written by C. Benjamin Johnson, editor, in favor of Col. Wright for Congress, and inserted one for Payne, Republican. When Mr. Johnson discovered it he ordered the printing to be stopped, but was disobeyed and driven from the office by threats of violence. He applied to the court for an injunction, but before it could be served part of the edition was run off and circulated. The Workingman circulates largely among laboring men. The affair caused a great deal of excitement in political circles.

CONVICTED OF MURDER.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28.—The jury in the case of Joannah Turbin, colored, indicted for the murder of her husband, on July 5 last, came into court today about 4 P. M. with a verdict of guilty, accompanied, however, with a petition to the President, signed by the full panel, to commute the death penalty to that of imprisonment for life. The Judge presiding, and also the District Attorney, expressed their intention to give their personal attention to the furthering of the object of the petition, which will also receive the signatures of the prisoner's counsel.

VIOLATING THE REVENUE LAWS.

RICHMOND, Oct. 28.—In the United States Circuit Court to-day, Judge Bond presiding, Ezekiel Myers, recently convicted of illicit distilling in Petersburg, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $5,000. John Minholland, porter of the steamer Wyanoke, convicted yesterday of violation of the Internal Revenue laws, was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $1,000.

THE CONTEST IN NEW-YORK.

ONONDAGA, CORTLAND, MADISON AND JEFFERSON.

THE PEOPLE WIDE AWAKE AND ENTHUSIASTIC FOR HAYES AND WHEELER—MORE EVIDENCES OF TILDEN'S LATEST CORRUPT BARGAIN—AN INCREASED MAJORITY PROMISED FROM ALL THE COUNTRY ABOUT SYRACUSE.

From Our Special Correspondent.

SYRACUSE, Thursday, Oct. 26, 1876.

Syracuse is the handsomest, the best built, the most active, wide awake, enterprising and business-like of all the cities of the interior of the State; and, judging from appearances, it is the wealthiest in proportion to its population. It has excellent schools, an abundance of churches, good streets, fine public buildings, elegant private residences, and an intelligent population. In a word, it is just the kind of place where spurious Democracy of the modern type, and spurious Reformers of the type of Samuel J. Tilden, would not be expected to thrive, and they don't. There is no city in the State that is sure to furnish so little comfort to an anxious Democrat on the night of election as Syracuse. It never took any stock in the fraud who is now running as the Democratic candidate for President. Two years ago, when the "tidal wave" that bore him into the Gubernatorial chair swept over and engulfed the greater portion of the State, Syracuse and Onondaga County gave 2,230 majority against him. Tilden is fond of attributing his unpopularity in Syracuse to the "Canal Ring." But this was before he inaugurated his Canal raid, or had conceived the idea of running for the Presidency on the hobby of "reform." In fact his Canal raid helped in Onondaga County so long as the people were deceived with the idea that it was a sincere effort at reform instead of being a political trick, as is shown by the fact that in the following year (1875) the majority against his ticket was reduced to 1,880. But when it became evident that his boasted crusade against the canal theories was not going to produce any fruits, and that it had been gotten up solely for the purpose of advancing the political fortunes of Samuel J. Tilden and crushing out his political enemies, the people of Onondaga County of both parties, who admire honesty and detest hypocrisy, cast him off as a sham and a fraud. They will show their estimate of him in November by increasing their majority against him to 3,000 or 3,500. And they will not have the aid of what Tilden calls the "Canal Ring," either. It would not amount to half a dozen votes if they did, but the truth is that the Democrats whom Tilden tried to crush by calling them Canal thieves are taking no part in the campaign. They are not of course working for the man who tried to ruin them because he was not their first choice for President; neither are they working for his opponent. One of them, indeed, and that one the man who was most shabbily treated of all by Tilden, has shown so much of Christian forgiveness or so little of self-respect as to take the stump for his enemy. Attorney General Pratt, who, at the instigation of Tilden, was undermined and superseded in his own office by the sneaking "nincompoop" whom he had given a position out of charity, is now actually recommending Tilden to the highest office in the gift of the people. Such meekness and magnanimity surely deserve a reward, and Pratt's friends hope, and some of them expect, that Tilden will be able to repay him—but not with a Government office.

In addition to a majority of 3,000 and upward that Onondaga County will give for Hayes and Wheeler and the Republican State ticket, she will send three Republicans to the Assembly, and, with the aid of Cortland County, will elect a Republican member of Congress in the person of Hon. Frank Hiscock, of this city. From the First Assembly District Gov. Alvord will be returned by an overwhelming majority to his old seat in the Assembly, and in the Second and Third Districts the last year's members, Messrs. Carroll Smith, of the Syracuse Journal, and C. Fred Herbst will be re-elected by a majority equally decisive. The Republicans are united and harmonious in this county, and prepared to move in solid column on the enemy's works next Tuesday week. Preliminary to the movement they are to have a grand demonstration of Union soldiers here next Tuesday afternoon and evening. After the ignominous failure of the soldiers' demonstration which the Democrats attempted to get up in Albany the other day, a few of the Union soldiers who reside in Syracuse suggested the idea of having a gathering of their old comrades here some day before election. The suggestion was caught up with eagerness, and the result was shown in the columns of the Syracuse Standard yesterday, where the names and residences of over twelve hundred men who fought for their country in the Union Army are appended to the call for the gathering. Every one of them resides in this county, and I am told that there are less than a dozen Union soldiers all told in Onondaga County who are in favor of Tilden for President, and every one of them was either a deserter or came out of the service with a stain on his reputation. The demonstration on Tuesday next will be participated in by soldiers from other counties, and will be one of the largest and most notable gatherings of the campaign.

CORTLAND COUNTY.

The adjoining County of Cortland, which, together with Onondaga comprises this Congressional District, is alive with enthusiasm, and is conducting the campaign for Hayes and Wheeler with vigor and remarkable success. No Republican there estimates the majority for the national and State tickets at less than twelve hundred, and from that up to fifteen hundred. Last year it was less than seven hundred, and in 1872 it was 1,200. The Republicans have nominated for Assembly in that county Charles McGraw, whose election is certain, and the county will give its full party majority for Frank Hiscock for Congress.

MADISON COUNTY.

Ex-Senator Kellogg, of this county, informs me that Republican prospects there never looked brighter than they do now. The party has made a thorough canvass of the county, under the supervision of A. M. Holmes, the Chairman of the County Committee, and the lowest estimated majority for Hayes and Wheeler and the State ticket is 2,000. Last year the Republican majority was 1,200 and in 1872 it was 2,200. Two Republican Members of the Assembly are certain to be elected from this county. Both of the nominees are new men and both bear an excellent reputation In the First District the nominee is A. N. Sheldon, formerly District Attorney of the county, and in the Second District Dr. Merchant Billington. Mr. Baker the present member of Congress from the Oswego and Madison District resides in this county, and is running for re-election without opposition thus far, as the Democrats cannot find a man who dares enter the field against him. Tilden's incompetent Attorney General Fairchild, also resides in this county and is trying hard to be of service to his master, but he has made as little headway thus far as he has in serving the State as prosecuting officer. They call him Lord Dundreary in his native village, where he has more reputation for hair and eye-glasses than for brains.

JEFFERSON COUNTY.

Reports from Jefferson County are more encouraging for the Republicans than from almost any county in the State. There never was a more lively campaign than is now being carried on there by both parties. Meetings are held nightly in all parts of the county, and were never so fully attended and enthusiastic on the Republican side as now. There has not been anything like a full vote of this county polled since the last Presidential election. Last year the Republican majority was only about seven hundred. This year it will approach nearer two thousand. Last year the Republicans and Democrats elected one Assemblyman each. This year the chances are in favor of the election of two Republicans.

Charles F. Skinner is the Republican candidate in the First District and Henry W. Spicer in the Second District.

A GREAT MEETING IN ITHACA—AN ELOQUENT SPEECH BY EX-GOV. NOYES, OF OHIO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ITHACA, Oct. 28.—Another of the series of political meetings with which Republicans here have been favored in this campaign was held to-night, ex-Gov. E. F. Noyes, of Ohio, being the speaker. Mr. Noyes held the undivided and delighted attention of an audience of over a thousand people for nearly two hours. He showed, in a clear, logical, and convincing manner, the qualities of the Republican party which entitle it to the continued confidence of the people of the United States, and as the personal and intimate friend of our candidate for the Presidency for a period of twenty years, rendered such a tribute to the man and patriot Hayes as took his auditors entirely by storm, and provoked the most vigorous and prolonged applause, closed by three rousing cheers. The address left a profound impression on all thinking men present, whether Democrats or Republicans, and will have incalculable effect for good in this section during the remainder of the campaign.

On Wednesday, Nov. 1, a grand mass meeting will be held at Ithaca, at which Senator Blaine, Hon. Gainsha A. Grow, and others will deliver addresses. Preparations are under way for the largest political meeting here at that time ever held in Tompkins County. Republican organizations in numbers of the adjacent towns and villages have already expressed their intention of being here at that time, and there are many others yet to hear from. We have the enemy on the run in this section, and we will keep jogging at a lively gait until they are finally defeated.

FRAUDULENT REGISTRATION IN TROY—TACTICS OF THE DEMOCRACY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TROY, Oct. 28.—There is no disguising the fact that Tilden's "still hunt" here means a large fraudulent registry. Three arrests have already been made. An ex-convict named Lynch was found illegally registered. Another man came over from West Troy, which is in Albany County, and registered. Yesterday, James Kavany, a Democratic Supervisor of Election, was arrested for registering a minor aged twenty, who had declined to register himself, and allowed Kavany to do so. More arrests will follow.

SERIOUS FIRE IN ROME.

THE FORT STANWIX KNITTING MILL DESTROYED—LOSS $65,000.

A destructive fire occurred in Rome, N. Y., Friday night. The Fort Stanwix Knitting Mill, owned by Messrs. Mudge & Ames, was entirely consumed. The fire originated in the engine-room, but its cause has not yet been ascertained. The building was of stone, built about the year 1815, and designed for a United States arsenal. It had been used as a knitting mill about four years. The interior of the mill was entirely destroyed, with all the looms and a large quantity of raw material. The lots is estimated at from $65,000 to $70,000. The insurance is about $40,000. One hundred operatives are thrown out of employment by the disaster, and Rome loses one of its largest industries. The mill was surrounded by houses occupied by mill hands, but they were saved from destruction. There was a Democratic mass-meeting the same night, and a torchlight procession, and when the alarm was given it was supposed to be false and intended to break up the procession. Hence many of the firemen failed to respond promptly to the alarm. Otherwise, it is thought, the building might have been saved.

OTHER FIRES.

The grand stand, judges' stand, poultry-house, sheds, and fencing of the fair grounds leased by the Louisiana Jockey Club, were destroyed by fire yesterday afternoon. The main exhibition building was also considerably damaged. The loss is estimated at $25,000.

A house and barn in Fall River, Mass., owned by Thomas Healey, with their contents, were destroyed by fire yesterday morning. The loss is estimated at $2,000; insured. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin.

Lyster Bennett & Co., wholesale stationers, on St. Paul street, Montreal, failed yesterday. Their liabilities are $40,000, and the assets are nominally placed at the same figure.

A fire on the estate of W. E. Baker, at Wellesley, Mass., destroyed the white porcelain building and a large quantity of valuable plants. Loss, $6,000; insurance, $1,000.

BY MAIL AND TELEGRAPH.

The United States steamer Gettysburg sailed last night from Halifax for the Azores.

The total interments yesterday at Savannah, Ga., were six, including one of yellow fever.

Yesterday's admissions to the Centennial were: At full fee, 77,589; at half fee, 1,171.

The first cargo of Malaga fruit sold in Halifax yesterday at prices somewhat lower than last year's.

In a game of base-ball at Boston yesterday, the Bostons again defeated the Hartfords by a score of 13 to 9.

The United States steamer Tallapoosa, Commander McRitchie, arrived at Boston yesterday from Portsmouth.

Hills & Haven, furniture dealers, Watertown, N. Y., have failed. Their liabilities are $23,000, and assets probably $12,000.

Captain Williams, of Liverpool, N. S., of the brig Zerelina, and his child, were drowned on the voyage out to Demerara.

Rev. M. W. Jacobus, D.D., of the Western Theological Seminary, in Allegheny City, died suddenly yesterday morning.

The report of a proposed Fenian raid into Canada, telegraphed from St. Albans Friday night, is pronounced to be without foundation.

The Lacrosse match yesterday, between the Montreal and Shamrock clubs, was won by the former getting the first, second, and fifth games.

The car, machine, and carpenter shops of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railroad Company at Great Bend, Penn., were burned last night. Loss about $12,000.

It is understood that the Northern Railroad yesterday morning paid over to the Canadian Government £100,000 sterling—the amount required to cancel a Government lien.

Henry C. Miller was arrested at Providence, R. I., yesterday afternoon for stealing a horse and wagon from Col. S. J. Lane, of Lunenburg, Mass. The horse has been recovered, but the wagon is still missing.

W. J. Lewis, Superintendent of the East Franklin Colliery at Lower Rauech Creek, Penn., was run over and killed while walking down the slope yesterday afternoon. Sixty cars passed over his body before the accident was discovered.

Yesterday morning, in Port Chester, N. Y., William Reily, aged fifty years, while standing at a well on E. B. Westley's place, preparatory to drawing a pail of water, dropped dead. A Coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from heart disease.

The Harvard Fall rowing races occurred yesterday on the Charles River two-mile course. The four-oared lap-streak race was won by the Holyoke crew in 14m. 49s. The six-oared lap-streak race was won by the Holyoke crew in 14m. 52s.

A VISIT TO CALIFORNIA.

A FEW LEAVES FROM A TRAVELER'S JOURNAL.

MOUNTAIN SCENERY VIEWED FROM A RAILWAY CAR—THE CALIFORNIANS A VERY PECULIAR PEOPLE—DESOLATION OF THE ALKALI PLAINS—A SAN FRANCISCO LADY'S OPINION OF NEW-YORKERS.

From Our Special Correspondent.

SAN FRANCISCO, Thursday, Oct. 19, 1876.

The traveler for the first time to California is gently initiated into the spirit of the Pacific slope long before he arrives at San Francisco. Whether he is personally acquainted with his fellow-travelers in the palace car of the Union Pacific, or whether he is a solitary wanderer, matters little. The Californians who are in that car detect him with unerring instinct, and opening the proceedings by a preliminary question "Is this your first visit to the Pacific slope?" they deluge him with the most monstrous and exaggerated glorification of everything Californian. It was my fortune to serve as escort to two ladies, whose names are lode-stars in California, and who are thoroughly imbued with the spirit of the place. Consequently, I was in a position to be victimized without mercy, and if I could only have remembered one-tenth of what was told me, and if I could only have believed one-tenth of what I remembered, I should have been satisfied long before I arrived in the Golden State that I was bound for the terrestrial paradise. It seemed strange to me that one lady, who professed the most enthusiastic appreciation for the varied landscapes of her Californian home, could find no other adjective to express her admiration of the Rocky Mountain scenery than "pretty," for appreciation means discrimination, and that word argued a plentiful lack of it. But this was because we were still in the United States, so to speak, and had not arrived in the one State worthy of her genuine admiration. When the tireless action of the iron horse had brought us into California, then her vocabulary expanded into poetic proportions, and her adjectives developed themselves in the most wonderful fashion. She was not content to find everything pretty then; the plains were broad and had the grandeur of vast stretches; the mountains were sublime, their peaks serrated, and their clouds silvered gray; the trees were named with ecstasy, and the branching of their foliage dwelt on fondly; the very bushes, the manzanita, and the chemizella were described with the fervor of real love. Had she died on the route, I should have believed her incapable of appreciating the beauties of nature. As it is, I know that she feels them warmly, but was resolved in her own mind ers—to the Californian fiends of description. It was a slight comfort that the chief personages in the conspiracy against my peace of mind came to ignominious grief, for in pointing out the San Joaquin and the Sacramento Valleys she got them completely mixed, and an exceedingly tall Californian, about six feet seven inches high, had to come to the rescue and put the valleys back in their respective places. He was very polite and pleasant, and seemed disposed to make allowances for the prejudices of people from the East, but even he looked preternaturally stern when I innocently hazarded the remark that the hay seemed rather poor. His eyebrows went up in astonishment, and his mustache moved uneasily in wrath, but I was fortunately able to conciliate him by some handsome reflections upon the future of California as a wheat country.

The evening of our arrival in San Francisco there was an informal sort of reception in the rooms of one of the ladies at the Palace Hotel, for she is considered and considers herself très grand dame in California. There were many inquiries about her sojourn at the East, and it was evident that there was an underlying fear in the minds of many that she might have been false to California to the extent of finding something in the East preferable to the Pacific slope. But she soon set the minds of her friends completely at rest, and proved that she, too, was Californian to the back-bone. "Yes," she said, "I was in New-York part of the time, and at the Centennial, and at Long Branch, and at Saratoga, and I stopped for some time at the villa of a friend in Westchester County, where the rich New-Yorkers play at farming. But I didn't see anything to compare with California." [Chorus of subdued but general applause.] Warmed by this evidence of popular approval she continued. "There was very good older on my friend's place, and the chickens are certainly excellent, but as a general thing the living can't be compared with what we have." [Increased murmurs of approbation.] But what particularly struck me in New-York was the inferior look of the people, specially the men. I did not see upon Fifth avenue one single large, handsome man. [Chorus of men who had never been in New-York, nor further east than Indiana—"That's so."] "There are good-looking men, but they are underaized," she resumed, looking in an abstracted way at an unfortunate New-Yorker, who became very red and very conscious. "And I may say, if you see a big man, he's sure to be homelier than Abe Lincoln; and if you see a real good looking man, he's sure to be small. As for the women, I never saw such ill-dressed creatures in my life. They may talk about New-York style, but I never saw any of it. They dress showily, it is true, but without sense or discretion. Fancy wearing velvet in the middle of July, when it was frightfully hot. And the men are exceedingly ill-dressed too, and won't compare with the men you see on California street, or Sansome and Montgomery."

Here she took breath, and looked around for applause, which was freely bestowed. Everybody then took a glass of champagne, and inspired by the pleasing stimulant, a gentleman now of San Mateo, but formerly of Canada, assumed the responsibility of the conversation.

"What Mrs. M. says," he remarked, "is most certainly true. I never saw any well-dressed men in New-York save those who got their clothes in Montreal."

Here the New-Yorkers present (there were two only) broke into a peal of irrepressible laughter, and one of them interrupted the orator by asking if the coat he wore, which had such a resemblance to a coal-heaver's sack, was not from Montreal.

"Yes," he replied, waving an arm clad in a sleeve that would have given the collo to a Broadway tailor, "I always have my things made in Montreal, and so do half the New-Yorkers of my acquaintance. Of course you New-Yorkers laugh, because you think that there is nothing good outside of Broadway and Fifth avenue, but that is where your mistake lies. But I'll venture to say that there are better tailors in San Francisco to-day than there are in all New-York City." This shifted the topic to ground where he was sure of hearty support, and accordingly the New-Yorkers were disposed to argue the matter seriously. But the arriving lady broke the talk off, by resuming "There's another thing I have to say: I did not see one pretty child East, not one, and it gave me quite a pang, because I'm fond of pretty children—as what mother isn't?" But they were all such frail, pallid, thin creatures, that my heart ached for the poor mothers, and I wanted ever so many times to be back in California that I might see a real stout, ruddy child."

This monstrous proposition struck me dumb, and I therefore mutely listened to the grave reasoning of a learned doctor who proved to his own satisfaction and that of the assembly that this was an incontestible physiological fact, and that this was the best argument in favor of a glorious future for California. As I listened, it came into my mind that the Californians themselves were a more interesting study than their scenery, and that it would be infinitly more amusing to analyze the social aspects of San Francisco than to describe the Yo Semite and go into raptures over the Bridal Veil fall. I have therefore made up my mind to examine the people and not the scenery, and I feel sure that I shall receive the most cordial assistance from every Californian. Their reputation for the most whole-souled and generous hospitality is evidently well deserved. I have already made the acquaintance of two leading Californians. One has given me the most pressing invitations to come down and see him at his office, and the other has informed me that he has the best map of California in existence, which he will be happy to show me at any time. I think of calling to see it some night when I am returning from the theatre, as it will be on my way from McCullough's to the Palace Hotel. GAR.

TILDEN'S SELF-IMPOSED RESTRICTIONS.

The New-Haven Palladium thus comments: "In Mr. Tilden's letter accepting the Democratic nomination, he said: 'Experience has exposed the futility of self-imposed restrictions by candidates.' This was a sneering allusion to Gov. Hayes' declaration in his letter of acceptance that in the event of his election he would not be a candidate for a second term. The sneer has a very important bearing upon Mr. Tilden's recent letter promising to veto Southern claims. 'The futility of self-imposed restrictions' has indeed been frequently shown by the history of Democratic candidates. Mr. Tilden's promise, admitting his sincerity, is worth no more than the promises of Polk Pierce, and Buchanan. Polk won the vote of Pennsylvania by a letter promising to sustain the tariff of 1842, but in less than a year after his election he violated his pledge. Pierce was pledged to sustain the compromise measures of Clay and Webster, but he had scarcely taken his seat in the White House when he went with the 'solid South' for the repeal of the Missouri Compromise and the consequent extension of slavery over free territory. Buchanan became the abject tool of the Southern slaveholders, and refused to lift a hand to prevent secession. Mr. Tilden's record is not so good as that of either of these men previous to the time when he became the Presidential candidate of the Democracy. He has had less experience in public life than any of them, and his promise is worth no more than theirs. He pledges himself to veto all bills for the repayment of the cotton tax or for Southern war claims, but, to use his own happy phrase, 'Experience has repeatedly exposed the futility of self-imposed restrictions by candidates.' It is safer to elect the man that is not required to give any pledge because the party behind him is not even suspected of an intention to pay the Southern claims. Mr. Tilden virtually admits that the Democratic Party is what Mr. Halstead felicitously terms 'the Claim Agency of the Confederate States.'"

STOKES RELEASED.

HIS DEPARTURE FROM AUBURN.

ARRIVAL AT ALBANY YESTERDAY—HIS COMPLAINTS OF HARSH TREATMENT BY THE PRISON AUTHORITIES—HIS PLANS FOR THE FUTURE.

Edward S. Stokes was released from Auburn Prison at 8 o'clock yesterday morning, and accompanied by several relatives and a few friends, left there on the special train, arriving at Albany at 2 o'clock. He is much changed in appearance since leaving Sing Sing Prison. He seems unable to realize that he is free, and says that notwithstanding he is about to meet those near and dear to him, he yet has the most melancholy feeling he ever experienced. A TIMES reporter met Stokes at the Delevan House, and he complained bitterly of his removal last July from Sing Sing to Auburn Prison. He said: "During my entire stay in Sing Sing Prison I was never reprimanded by any official, for the reason that I always studiously complied with all the rules and regulations. I never endeavored to obtain any privileges or immunities that were not vouchsafed to a score of convicts situated as I was. The notoriety of my case was bad for me in many ways. To escape the curious gaze of visitors necessitated almost constant seclusion. Of course, any work that my contractor could find for me was always welcome, but I was most of the time alone, and, when not reading, a prey to bitter thoughts. Thus you can readily see that the cause of my transfer to Auburn had not its origin in anything that was prejudicial to the discipline of the prison, growing out of partiality shown me by the officials. It was on the 14th of July last that a draft of convicts was made up for transfer to Auburn. The final preparations for the departure were made, when, as I was crossing the prison-yard, I was summarily seized and taken to the blacksmith shop, where I was heavily ironed, hands and feet. In this condition I was placed in the car and linked to one of the most hardened criminals. This arbitrary procedure was as remarkable as it was unprecedented. What was the necessity, think you, for such brutal treatment? My widowed mother, and worse than widowed sister, were now denied the little comfort of occasionally visiting me, while the inspectors, Messrs. Crowley and Clark, permitted to remain in Sing Sing Prison hundreds of protegeal criminals of long sentences, and many that had previously escaped had been recaptured, and who had defied the authorities to their very teeth. My removal was directly contrary to the established prison rules, and was prohibited by the statute which says that the State shall not be put to the expense of removing from prison to prison any convict whose unexpired term is less than one year. I was not long on my journey to Auburn before I perceived that every humiliation was to be heaped upon me. A man stationed in the rear of the car shouted at every station at which the train stopped: "Stokes is here, going to Auburn Prison." For twelve hours I endured the most terrible agony; my ankle being swollen to twice its natural size in consequence of the manacle being harshly riveted. On arriving at the prison I was faint and exhausted, and I asked to at least see the physician. Permission was refused, and I was ordered to take a cold bath. Being very feverish I protested that I was not in condition to receive such treatment, but it was of no avail. Coming out of the water I was taken with a severe chill, which was followed by an attack of my old malady, asthma. In this condition I was taken to the State shop and all my clean clothing removed, and in their stead I received the filthiest shirt that ever was worn, together with a pair of pantaloons that were a good match. Neither undershirt, vest, or coat was given to me, and in this half nude condition I was seated on a stool, and my hair and beard, which were very short, shaved off as roughly as if it had been done with a lawn-mower. Becoming completely exhausted I was compelled to lie on the floor, and not until then was I visited by the doctor who at once directed me to a bed in the hospital. I had no sooner fell into a doze than I was aroused, an order having been given to remove me into cell No. 58 instanter, whether sick or dying. Being unable to walk, I was carried out by two attendants, and handed over to Capt. Johnson, who endeavored to help me along. The exertion I made to walk was such that I fell, fainting, in the corridor. After restoratives had been applied I was again taken up and put in the cell. I was left in an insensible condition, and upon returning consciousness I found myself dripping wet, the cold perspiration having started from every pore of my body. Again had a severe paroxysm of asthma. My agony was complete when I found the cell without ventilation and the bed and bedding teeming with vermin. The next day I was conducted to the hospital, and again returned to the same cell. In fact the Prison Physician, Dr. Hoxey, after an interview with Inspector Clark, told me he could do nothing for me. On the 21st of July I was unable to leave my cell. I had so suffered from the asthma and want of air that I was completely prostrated. I again asked to see the physician and also asked for a mustard plaster to place on my chest. The physician did not visit me, but I received the plaster, and then my cell door was again locked during the entire day as well as night. Not having retained any nourishment, I was fed on bread and water. For two weeks I daily begged to have a clean cell or to have the vermin that were devouring me exterminated. My body was completely scarified. I endured this state of affairs for two weeks before having my cell cleaned out and proper bedding supplied. During my imprisonment I have suffered with asthma in its most distressing form, being deprived of rest at night."

Stokes said he could give reasons for his unusual treatment, but he declined to make any positive statement at present. Referring to his trial, he said that "but for the willful perjury of the two ball boys," he would have been acquitted. He will, he said, spend a short time in this city to attend to some business, and then take a trip to California.

BRIEF HISTORY OF STOKES' CASE.

The murder for which Stokes has suffered is still fresh in the memory of the citizens of New-York, though nearly five years have elapsed since the deed was done. On Saturday the 6th of January, 1872, shortly before dark, Stokes shot James Fisk, Jr., on the stairs of the ladies' entrance to the Grand Central Hotel. The notoriety which had been attained by Fisk, connected with his tragic death, caused immediate and widespread excitement, and all kinds of opinions were expressed in regard to the event. Stokes was immediately arrested and confined in the Tombs, and on Feb. 23, 1873, after undergoing trial for murder in the first degree, he was sentenced to be hanged, a sentence which was finally annulled. A new trial was granted, and on Oct. 29, 1873, he was sentenced to four years' imprisonment in the State Prison. The length of his incarceration has been reduced by good conduct, so that in reality Stokes has served but three years under the last sentence.

MORTON ON A REGISTRY LAW.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal:

The result of the recent election in Indiana is but additional evidence of the absolute necessity for a registry law, and of a law requiring a residence in the voting precinct of some weeks before having the right to vote. The law, as it stands now, is an invitation to commit fraud, and such a thing as a fair election in Indiana is absolutely impossible until it is changed. As it is, the impression that this cannot be done without an amendment to the constitution, the Republicans of Indiana should make that an issue, contending for it until it has been accomplished. That Indiana is Republican upon a full and honest vote, I do not doubt, but this can never be had until we shall cut off the great convenience and facility for frauds. If a previous residence is required in the voting precinct, in addition to registration, they could not colonize upon us from other States with such facility as they have done for some years past. If a man appears at the polls and swears that he has taken up his residence and that he is a qualified voter, he cannot be prevented from voting, although he has come into the precinct only that morning. The present legislature should be called upon to pass constitutional amendments requiring registration and a previous residence for some period in the voting precinct, and the Republican Party should make this issue until they have been adopted by a vote of the people and become the law of the State.

O. P. MORTON.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

A distinguished ex-Army officer writes as follows from Charleston, S. C., Oct. 24, to the Secretary of the National Veterans' Committee, Fifth Avenue Hotel:

"The political situation has wonderfully changed within the past few days. The President's proclamation had a magical effect. In the upland counties, where Hampton's cavalry exercised full control and where not a single Republican vote could have been cast in November without the proclamation and troops to enforce it, Republican meetings are now held undisturbed—terror has vanished, and the old confidence and enthusiasm have returned. Let our friends in the North place no faith in the sensational press dispatches sent from here to mislead them. The majority of Associated Press agents in the South, as in this city, are lying hypocrites connected with the Democratic newspapers. No blow has been struck by Republicans except in defense; all they desire is a fair election and a free expression of opinion, which the presence of United States troops will secure them. South Carolina can be counted safe by at least ten thousand majority for Hayes and Wheeler, and the Republican nominations for the State."

THE CHINESE QUESTION.

SAN FRANCISCO, Oct. 28.—The commission appointed by Congress to investigate the Chinese question, has been in session during the past two weeks, in this city, and a large number of witnesses have been examined. Representative Meade, of the commission, leaves for his home this morning.

ALLEN, THE INFLATIONIST.

HE ENROLLS HIMSELF AMONG THE SUPPORTERS OF TILDEN.

Ex-Gov. William Allen, one of the Ohio Democrats whom Gov. Hayes has vanquished, spoke at Chillicothe, that State, on Thursday evening, in advocacy of Gov. Tilden's election to the Presidency. Among other things, he said: "Grant's first public act was for the benefit of the money power—the signing of a bill increasing the public debt $100,000,000. For what? To keep off the Indians? [Laughter.] To resist the British invasion, or one of the armed world, if the armed world behind them can crush out the American people? No. This bill signed was for the benefit of the bondholders of this country. It was entitled 'A Bill to Strengthen the Public Credit,' and it did so by adding five hundred millions of debt to it. [Laughter.] It has come to the point now that begins to look the other way, because Grant and his successor bringing the country to the conditions of anarchy. What will all our public debts be worth? What will stocks of States, city and railroad bonds, amounting fully to one thousand million dollars, and fully equally to one-tenth the whole property of this country, what will they be worth? Then there is repudiation, which they will have to regret and that will make them tremble in their shoes when they come to vote next month, then the persons that are now leading the people like so many cattle will be the first to tremble. It is not to be supposed that the American people will submit to everything, for when they find that they have to submit to the despot that will be another thing. We are now becoming accustomed to the encroachments or power, and witness something in the way of encroachment that any President would have been turned out of office for twenty-five years ago. It is proposed, and a proposition more imprudent could not have been made by any one, by the very men who have done these things and contracted these debts, that the people should keep them in power a little longer. You have got a few shinplasters left, and they want them too. [Laughter.] I want to make a few remarks about the persons who are candidates for the Presidency of the United States, and I do not ask you to vote for Tilden because I love Tilden, but I have reason for loving the Democratic Party, and we can not vote against him without voting against the Democratic Party. Mr. Cooper is a good man, and the platform he stands upon is a good platform, and I stand upon it myself. [Applause.] His platform was taken from the Ohio platform, but Mr. Cooper, great and good as he is, stands in a position that makes it impossible to elect him President of the United States, and for us to stand by, not taking part in this contest, would be like standing by to get the country driven through Hell Gate before the explosion. In Greece it was a crime to stand aloof and not vote. Twelve and fifteen thousand voters of Athens voted upon all questions relating to taxes, diplomatic and municipal affairs, which were discussed by the speakers, and the voters voted yes or no upon them. We cannot do it here, because the country is too big, but we ought to have the sanction or disapproval of every one entitled to vote. They should express their opinion one way or the other. It has now become a question whether or not we have the right to legislate for our own State. Within its constitutional limits the sending of Federal troops South is just as bad as the sending of foreign troops was to put down our fathers. The South Carolina affair presents itself to every American, and should be rebuked at the polls. If the party that does these things ought to be indorsed and reinstated, how long would it be before we have bayonets in Ohio to keep these Democrats from talking. I understand they have some Deputy Marshals in Columbus to order the people from and to the ballot-box. I said about Mr. Cooper that he is a good man, worthy of the high dignities he aspires to. Some people have sense even if they do have gray hair. I have seen people who had gray hairs who had sense, and I have seen persons who did not who were the same I did when they were born. [Laughter.] We vote for Tilden because, if elected, he will be elected by the Democratic Party, and he will be found to act fairly. As to his stealing, there is no danger as to the Democratic Party doing so, because they have nothing to steal, for the others have it all."

TILDEN THE PERJURER.

ALL THE EXPLANATION DELUSIVE AND UNSATISFACTORY.

From the Davenport (Iowa) Gazette.

The charge of direct fraud in the matter of his income tax preferred against S. J. Tilden by THE NEW-YORK TIMES still awaits explicit refutation by Mr. Tilden or his friends. The Republican journals in the State of New-York, at least, seem determined to press Mr. Tilden to the wall for an answer. Why don't he meet the issue squarely, as becomes a "reformer?"

From the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser.

That income-tax perjury of which Mr. Tilden was guilty, has never been explained. After a very lame attempt at explanation, with promise of more of the same sort, the Democratic candidate has had to abandon all efforts at defense. THE TIMES still pegs away at him. In its issue of Saturday it publishes an article from a correspondent who proves, with all needful detail, a dozen separate items of income accruing to Mr. Tilden between 1862 and 1863, and amounting to at least $174,000. There is no evidence that any of these were included in Mr. Tilden's income-tax returns, and there is evidence that those earned in 1862 and 1863 could not possibly have been taken into account in preparing the sworn returns of these years. And this is the "great reformer!"

From the Philadelphia Press.

Mr. Tilden's income return for 1863 is more circumstantial than that of 1862. In his sworn return for the former year he stated that the amount of his income from the "profits on any trade, business, or vocation" was $8,350, when it was notorious that his professional profits exceeded $50,000 a year at the very lowest estimate. Under the head of receipts from interest or dividends on railway bonds or stocks he returned $7,096, and from interest or dividends on the stock or bonds of other corporations, $3,717. These were gross receipts from which expenses, &c., were afterward deducted. Yet THE NEW-YORK TIMES proves that Mr. Tilden in that year received certainly one item of $30,000 cash by the sale of a mortgage of the Dayton and Union Railway. THE TIMES gives all the particulars of the transaction, from which this sum was realized by Tilden, and thus establishes indubitably that perjury was committed by him in swearing that $7,096 comprised all his receipts from railway securities in 1863.

HOW IT LOOKS IN MISSOURI.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Missouri Republicans are grateful to THE NEW-YORK TIMES for its bold and masterly exposure of Tilden and his "reform" pretensions. He is an artful trickster of the Tammany school. We have all faith in your expected triumph in New-York on the 7th of November by 30,000 to 40,000. But the battle there nor here will not be won now by a mere flourish of trumpets, torchlight processions, or discussions on finance. The issues before us to be decided on the 7th prox. are as pregnant with good or evil to this nation as they were in 1861, when we captured Camp Jackson here on the 10th of May of that memorable year. There is no use in disguising the fact that the now "solid South" calls for a solid and united North as imperatively as it did in 1861. The South, by its success in 1874 in filling the House of Congress with the better portion of Gen. Lee's old veterans, is now jubilant and defiant in its sanguine expectation of capturing all departments of the Government.

Our party should organize with the same energy and thoroughness and loyal purpose that it did to conquer the rebellion. A good General in preparing for a great battle does not show his hand to the enemy by marching and counter-marching, with a great flourish of trumpets, before his antagonist. The rule is to drill, drill, drill. The lowest subaltern must know just what is expected of him, and the private soldier is taught the importance of standing firmly at his post of duty. The Democrats of the North have combined for a solid South, and the great battle of the ballot next month is as much a battle between the loyal North and the Confederate South as was the battle of Gettysburg. This is the conviction of border State men, like myself—who have made St. Louis my home ever since I helped to elect Gen. Harrison in 1840. Here we are recovering from the party treasons of 1870 and 1872, and expect to elect from four to six members of Congress, and possibly our Governor. The best men of the party have been nominated in this city and county; and as every additional member of Congress won is worth his weight in gold to the party and nation, we will do our best. S. R.

ST. LOUIS, Saturday, Oct. 21, 1876.

THE VICTORY IN COLORADO.

A letter from Denver, dated Oct. 21, says: "The results, then, of the Colorado election are as follows: John L. Routt, Republican candidate for Governor, has a majority of nearly 1,000 over Bela M. Hughes. James B. Belford, for the Forty-fourth and Forty-fifth Congress, has a majority of between 800 and 900 over Thomas M. Patterson, late Democratic Delegate to Congress. The balance of the Republican State ticket has majorities running from 1,000 to 1,500, and the legislative ticket from 1,600 to 2,200. The average Republican majority on the whole ticket is 1,500—a gain of 3,600 over 1874, when the Territory went Democratic by 2,100 majority. The total vote of the State foots up 27,000—an increase of 10,500 in two years, and, taking this as a basis for estimating population, it would show Colorado to have about 125,000 inhabitants."

THE REGISTRY FRAUDS.

MEASURES FOR PROMPT DETECTION.

THE VERIFICATION OF THE LISTS NEARLY COMPLETED—NO FEAR OF ILLEGAL VOTES BEING RECORDED—WARRANTS TO BE IN READINESS ON ELECTION DAY FOR THE ARREST OF SUSPECTED PERSONS.

The arrangements made by Chief Supervisor Davenport to prevent election frauds in this City are completed, with the exception of the verification of the registry of Friday and yesterday. Every one of the plans and methods adopted has worked well, and it is now considered impossible for any glaring or numerous instances of fraud to be attempted without instant detection, and most summary punishment. In the case of no election in the past have such efficient and thorough measures been put into operation as in the present case. Although over 11,000 persons have been naturalized in the courts, the number of those who have obtained their papers through fraud is very small, and such of the latter as attempt to vote will be promptly punished. The great bugbear in regard to the bogus papers issued in 1868 has also been dissipated, and need no longer enter into the calculations. Any person voting on such fraudulent naturalization papers will be apprehended. Lists of the fraudulent papers in each election district of the City have been made out and arranged, and certain detection will follow any attempt to use them. The verification and reverification of the registry has also been most systematic and thorough. Before election day warrants will be in readiness for the arrest of every suspected person, and the requisite testimony in regard to each one will be in readiness. Great numbers of persons, who were prepared to perpetrate frauds in the old-time Tammany way, have been deterred from registering through fear of consequences. Supervisor Davenport, when questioned on the subject yesterday, said that there would be few attempts at fraud, and these would be easily detected and punished, so thorough are the arrangements. The work of the United States Marshals and Supervisors and of the Republican Inspectors at the polls will also be very carefully and completely done. There is nothing to be feared from fraudulent attempts in this City, excepting by those attempting the frauds. In regard to the use of the mails as a means of detecting fraudulent registration, there was an unintentional mistake made in the report published yesterday. Postal cards are not used for the purpose, but the large accumulation of them in the stations excited comment. Postmaster James and his assistant, Mr. Pearson, when questioned on the subject yesterday, said that nothing of the kind had been attempted, so far as they knew, though it was possible that some of the letter-carriers in the various districts had made comments on the large number of postal cards returned, and so brought it to public attention. The postal cards are not shown to the United States Deputy Marshals, or the Supervisors, but are destroyed at the main office, according to law, in case the persons to whom they are addressed are not discovered. Any use of the Post Office for detecting frauds is by means of letters, which, when not received by those to whom they are addressed, are returned to the sender, whoever he may be. In such a case the Post Office merely acts mechanically, and according to the usual practice.

Yesterday having been the last day of registration, Commissioner Davenport was at work all day in answering anxious inquirers who had been refused registration in various parts of the City for different reasons. The Commissioner issued numerous warrants for the arrest of persons endeavoring to register fraudulently.

THE WORK IN BROOKLYN.

In a great many instances within the last three weeks, letter-carriers have been told that persons for whom they had letters were not just then at the places to which the letters were addressed, but that they would be back on election day to vote. They will undoubtedly be back on election day, but it is not quite so certain that they will vote. The United States Marshals, the Supervisors of Election, and vigilance committees are still vigorously at work, and each day their labor is rewarded by the discovery of fresh frauds. For reasons explained already in THE TIMES, some days will elapse before any large number of arrests can be made, but those who fear that the honest vote of the county will be overcome by ballots fraudulently cast, may rest assured that such means have been taken as will absolutely prevent fraud.

AN IMPORTANT POINT DECIDED BY JUDGE BARRETT.

The Board of Registry of the Seventh Election District of the Thirteenth Assembly District refused to register the name of James Carroll, on the ground that he had not lived in the district for thirty days previous to election day, as required by law. Yesterday, Mr. Charles S. Spencer, counsel for Carroll, applied to Judge Barrett, holding Supreme Court, Chambers, for a mandamus to compel the registering of his name by the board. He held that by the words "election district" the Constitution does not mean that arbitrary subdivision of districts which the Board of Aldermen have a perfect right to make for the purpose of receiving the vote, but on the contrary it means an election district which covers every office to be voted for, and therefore his client was still in the same election district within the meaning of the Constitution, he only having moved from one election district in the Thirteenth Assembly District to another, and was consequently to vote for the same officers as if he had not changed his residence. He also raised the point that Carroll having moved on the 9th inst., he would on election day have resided in the district a full thirty days. Judge Barrett intimated that the first point was a very good one, and said that as yesterday was the last day of registration he would decide that question. He held that Carroll would have resided in the district thirty days, counting both the day on which he moved and election day, to which he was entitled, and therefore granted the application.

A SCOTCHMAN'S NATURALIZATION PAPERS.

John Torrey, a Scotchman, came to this country in 1858, and soon after his arrival declared his intentions, taking out his first papers. In 1868, without visiting the naturalization head-quarters of either party, he went to Judge Barnard, in the Supreme Court, taking with him two witnesses, and was formally naturalized. On the papers given him he voted in that year, and has continued to do so ever since. Friday last he presented himself at the polling place of the district in which he lived, and handing his papers to the Inspectors, made known his desire to be registered. The Chairman of the Board of Registry claimed that his papers were illegal and refused to register him, whereupon he applied yesterday to Judge Barrett, holding Supreme Court, Chambers, for a mandamus. One of the members of the board pointed out to Judge Barrett that Mr. Torrey's papers, instead of bearing the seal of the Supreme Court, bore the seal of the City, or one in close representation of it. The court decided that the seal was not a correct one, and made an order directing that the proper seal of the Supreme Court be affixed provided a record of the naturalization be found. The affixing of this seal to the papers of Mr. Torrey in 1868 either shows a remarkable degree of carelessness or else that it is a palpable fraud.

HOW TO SIFT THE REGISTRY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Fully appreciating the admirable measures perfected by Mr. Davenport for the prevention and detection of fraudulently registered votes, I would nevertheless submit the idea that he should offer a substantial reward—say $25 or $50—for the detection of each fraudulent vote. I know that in my district there are certain parties who are cognizant of every illegal vote, and of course it is the same in every other district in the City where fraudulent registration has been perpetrated to any extent and with any system. Such a reward would, I am confident, prove irresistible to those parties, who would unhesitatingly peach upon their political superiors, knowing that they could make a much headsomer thing by so doing than they could hope or expect to do by keeping silent. Besides, it would deter many who still meditate perpetrating this villainy. I am credibly informed that in my Assembly district (the Fifteenth) there are at least 2,200 fraudulent votes registered, and I am prepared to believe it fully from what I have seen myself of the lax, ignorant, and suspicious manner in which names have been placed on the register in my own registration district. MR. CALVIN AS A REFEREE.

THE CASE OF STARIN AGAINST THE CITY—PROMINENT LAWYERS TESTIFYING THAT THE PLAINTIFF WAS ENTITLED TO LESS THAN $50,000—MR. CALVIN AWARDS $389,924 66.

The counsel in the suit of John H. Starin, Jr., against the City, settled the case and exceptions in the action yesterday, in order to enable the City to bring its appeal to the Supreme Court, General Term, from the decision of Delano C. Calvin, who was the Referee, and who gave judgment against the City on a claim that was grossly exaggerated. Starin appeared in the case merely as a figure-head, he being the Assignee of one William McKeag, who had assigned the claim for a nominal consideration. The case is a very singular one, the facts being as follows: McKeag was in 1857 a clerk in the law office of one Holmes, then an Excise Commissioner. Through Holmes' influence, McKeag was appointed Attorney to the Excise Commissioners, but no salary was fixed for the office. McKeag was ordered to institute proceedings against liquor dealers who had no license, in order to recover the statutory penalty of $50 in each case. There were 14,915 suits of this character begun between 1859 and 1866. The work was a very easy one, since the summons, complaint, &c., in each suit were precisely the same, with the exception of the name of the offender and the date of the alleged offense. All the papers used in the suits were, in fact, printed blanks, not requiring the addition of half a dozen words to each. After the drawing of the first set of papers, nothing more was necessary, excepting the services of a few clerks to fill in the printed blanks. McKeag went to work in a rather peculiar way, apparently seeing in his employment a royal road to affluence. Instead of bringing the actions in the District Courts, where the fees and costs are very light, and cases can be brought to trial speedily, he brought them in the Court of Common Pleas, where the fees and costs are much larger, and where delays were more frequent. The suits crowded the calendar of the Court of Common Pleas, and after one or two of them were tried, the Judges refused to try any more. The trials themselves were very trivial affairs, requiring merely the testimony of a single policeman. It may be mentioned here, that McKeag was put to no trouble in getting the information on which to base his suits, that being furnished by the Police Department. Of the suits brought, ex-Recorder James M. Smith appeared for the defendants in 7,225 cases; Frederick Smyth in 537 cases; ex-Judge John J. Freedman in 395 cases, and other attorneys in about 439 cases. Thus in only 8,646 cases was there even the pretense of a defense. In 1,054 cases, judgment was entered by default. Many others were discontinued; and, in a great many, the papers were not even served by that "noble work of the Creator," John Kelly, who was then Sheriff, and to whom the papers had been given. McKeag employed his time for a few months only in each year, from 1859 to 1863, in working on the excise suits, remaining all the time as a clerk in Commissioner Holmes' law office. The Board of Supervisors paid all the expenses, with the exception of about three thousand dollars. McKeag collected penalties to the amount of about ten thousand dollars, which he retained for his own services. After the work was finished McKeag set up a claim against the county for $453,800. The claim was so monstrous that even Tweed's Board of Supervisors refused to allow it, and as they could not be sued in the matter it seemed as though McKeag would be checkmated in his attempt. The City and county governments were, however, consolidated by an act passed in the Winter of 1874-5, known as chapter 304 of the Laws of 1874. Just previous to this, McKeag had assigned his claim to Starin for a merely nominal consideration, and the latter, seeing that the consolidation act made the City liable for the payment of the old claims against the county, brought an action to recover from the City the amount of McKeag's claim. Ex-Recorder Smith appeared as counsel for the City in the litigation. The case by consent was referred for trial before Delano C. Calvin, the present Surrogate and Tammany candidate for the same office. Mr. Calvin began to take testimony on Jan. 3, 1875, McKeag asked $10 for the summons and complaint in each of the cases. This made $149,150. In 1,054 suits in which judgment had been entered by default he claimed $25 per suit. At a similar rate he asked $216,150 for the 8,646 suits in which Smith, Smyth, Freedman, and other attorneys had put in answers. He also charged $50 for each of 1,243 suits put on the calendar, making $62,150. The total amount claimed was, as before stated, $453,800. According to McKeag's own testimony before Mr. Calvin, a few clerks hired at from $5 to $10 per week during two or three months in a year did nearly all of the work. McKeag also swore that the filling out of a blank summons and complaints occupied only about five minutes. Among McKeag's witnesses as to the value of his services was W. J. Haskett, who was one of the Excise Commissioners under whom McKeag acted. He admitted that his own charges might be higher than the law would allow, and thought that $2,000 per day was not too much for a few hours' work. Two or three other lawyers, called on McKeag's behalf, were of the same opinion. On the other hand, the City set up in defense various legal points, among them being that McKeag's claim was barred by the Statute of Limitations. Calvin ruled adversely to the City on these points. The City also alleged that McKeag's services were not worth the preposterous amount which he claimed, and various witnesses were called in its behalf; whose testimony Mr. Calvin heard.

Thomas Allison, of Messrs. Allison & Shaw, a lawyer of fourteen years standing, testified that McKeag's services were worth less than $30,000. Eugene A. Black, of Messrs. Scudder & Carter, having thirteen years standing as an attorney, testified that the services were worth from $2,000 to $3,000 per year.

Sidney V. Lowell, who occupied in Brooklyn a position similar to McKeag's in this City, testified that $4,800 per year would be a very liberal salary for the services.

Simon Sterne, who has been in practice for seven teen years, testified that $5,000 per year, exclusive of disbursements, would be very liberal. The disbursements, as has been said, were provided for by the Board of Supervisors.

Ex-Attorney General Francis C. Barlow testified that McKeag's claim could be put justly at about $30,000. Deducting from this the $10,000 received by McKeag for penalties, there would be left $20,000 due.

Wheeler H. Peckham testified that the services were worth $35,000 in all.

Ethan Allen testified that $5,000 per annum would be a fair and just compensation for the services performed by McKeag.

United States District Attorney Bliss testified that the services were worth from $5,000 to $6,000 per year, or between $35,000 and $40,000 in all.

James C. Carter testified that $1 would be a fair charge for each summons and complaint; 25 cents for receiving each of the 8,634 answers, and 50 cents for putting on each of the 1,243 cases on the calendar. This would make the entire claim $17,700.

A. J. Roe testified that the services rendered by McKeag were worth from $5,000 to $6,000 per year.

The Spring has passed this way. Look! where she trod
The daring crocus sprang up through the sod
To greet her coming with glad heedlessness,
Scarce waiting to put on its leafy dress.
But bright and bold in its brave nakedness.
And further on—mark! on this gentle rise
She must have paused, for frail anemones
Are trembling to the wind, couched low among
These fresh green grasses, that so lush have sprung
O'er the hid runnel, that with tinkling tongue
Babbles its secret trouble. Here she stooped
A longer while, and on this grassy sweep,
While pensively she lingered, see! she dropped
This knot of love-sick violets from her breast,
Which, as she threw them down, she must have kissed,
For still the fragrance of her breath they keep.
And look! here, too, her floating robes have brushed,
Where suddenly these almond branches flushed
To greet her, and in blossoms burst as she Swept by them—gladsomely and gracefully.

Where is she now? Gone! Vain it were to try
To overtake her. Here, then, let us lie
On this green bank and weave a wreath, and sing
From our full hearts the joyous praise of Spring,
Grateful for these dear gifts she left behind—
The flowers, the grass, the soft and odorous wind,
The lingering effluence, the subtle grace
That still, though she has vanished, haunts the place.

Pursuit is vain: for she, like all things fair,
Will not be hunted down into her lair,
And caught and prisoned. Let us not be rude,
Nor seek into her presence to intrude,
But praise her in the distance. Then, perchance,
She may not flee away with winged feet,
But pause and backward cast a favoring glance
And waft a fragrance to us rare and sweet.
Too eager, we our present joy may miss
In the vain chase of an imagined bliss;
The ideal joy no human hand can seize,
The dream that lures us and before us flees.

The day is passing. Let us own its spell;
And as these trees, feeling within them swell
The blind, dim stirring of the Spring, express
In leaves and blossoms their mute thankfulness,
So, grateful, let us take what Nature gives;
Love be our blossoms—gentle thoughts our leaves.

CHAPTER VI.

Gone! before my eager disclaimers could reach him! Gone! perhaps to his death, and he would never know!

He believed that once I had been fond of him; oh, it was hard!

Then, after all, the command he had laid upon me, to forget, was not an utter impossibility, for had he not fulfilled it? Was it, then, indeed, so easy? In two years!

Why, why had not the same mercy been vouchsafed to me? I had prayed and struggled to forget, and had not succeeded; but even as these wild thoughts swept over me, a still, small voice repeated in my heart of hearts, "It is just; you have sinned, and the sin has brought its punishment."

"But why?" I cried, "why am I the only one to whom it has come? When we both sinned, why is he happy? Why has memory been taken away from him, and not from me?" And the still small voice replied, "Judge him not. There is no sin without its punishment; perhaps his has already come; perhaps not yet. The heart knoweth its own bitterness; we cannot judge another because he appears light-hearted, and say of him, 'That man is happy.'"

"No, ah, no," I said to myself, "how could I hear his last words and think him anything but miserable; and with that I remembered his parting injunction. For his sake I would take care of her. What would I not have done for his sake!" So with slow steps I traversed the hall, and entered the drawing-room.

On hearing the door open, Hélène came forward to meet me, brushing the tears away as she did so.

"Don't say a word," she began; "I am so ashamed of myself, but I am myself again now, and after a night's rest, you shall see no more tears. What must you think of me? It almost looks as if I grudged him to France; but don't imagine that, only farewells are always trying, are they not? But come, let us go to bed; you look as white as a ghost, and I have been selfishly leaving you to bear your griefs alone—without even the relief of tears.

And then I, seeing the mistake into which she had drifted, even as her husband had done, determined to do everything in my power to avoid present commiseration or future complications, so I said boldly—

"Madame, you must not think I have any more feeling for M. de l'Orme than for any other old friend; he once tried to make me care for him differently, but I could not. This I tell you in confidence," I added, "because I do not like you to waste undeserved pity on me."

She held out her hand, and taking mine, said simply, "I am sorry, although, perhaps, it saves you much unhappiness now, but I always rather hoped you would have married him, because I consider M. de l'Orme a good, honorable gentleman, and I thought, as did Raoul, that you were one of the few girls we knew who was worthy of him; but, perhaps, when he returns he may plead his cause again, this time more successfully—we will hope so!"

"Never, never!" I said excitedly, and with that she led me up to my room, and wished me good-night.

Then week after week went by in dreary monotony; sometimes we heard news, and sometimes none for days together. Next came the sad certainty that Metz was besieged, and that the German troops were drawing nearer and nearer to the capital itself. At that my father suggested that perhaps, after all, we should be safer at Montcour. But to this Hélène would not agree; every one was of opinion that Paris was almost impregnable, whereas in the country, with bands of soldiers, friends and enemies, wandering about, there must be always cause for alarm; so in Paris it was settled we should stay. Besides all this, if the siege of Metz were raised, to Paris Raoul would come.

And shortly after that dawned the dreadful day when the first German gun echoed in the ears of the inhabitants of the "White-walled City." It is needless to dwell upon that terrible time. Day by day Comtesse Hélène and I crept out in our long, black dresses and veils to the hospital opposite the Hôtel Montcour, where the fresh wounded were daily brought, to nurse them and tend them, and whisper words of hope and religion to them, and then either send them forth to lift an arm again for France, or else see them laid in their coffins, and follow, with our tearful eyes, the little funeral train leaving the hospital doors to take them to their last home. And day by day, as I watched her bright face bending over the sick, and saw how they one and all looked forward to her advent, and how, notwithstanding the terrible, agonizing suspense in which she lived, she yet always managed to keep a brave, cheerful face for those poor sufferers; so as I saw all this, my heart softened toward her, and my coldness was being gradually melted away in the light of her sweet eyes.

"I don't know what it is," said one of the young soldiers to me, as I stood talking to him, one sunshiny, Autumn morning—"I don't know what it is about Madame de Montcour, but she seems to remind us all of our mothers. Not her age," he added, with a smile—a very tearful one, however, at the remembrances that name called up.

I cannot think now how I stood out so long against her soft, winning ways—in my heart, I mean—for outwardly I was always, if not friendly, at least something like it; but one day on our return home, my father met us with the dreadful tidings that Metz had fallen.

"However, I scarcely know what to believe," he went on, "for the town is full of confused rumors. Now, please, don't go and imagine all kinds of dreadful things, Madame, until we can find out the truth."

He added this at a frown from me, for I saw the face at my side becoming whiter and whiter.

"Don't frighten us needlessly, father; tell us what it all means. Metz taken! Impossible!"

"What does he say?" said Comtesse Hélène, looking piteously from him to me, "what does he say?"

And then my father told us that a soldier, who had escaped from Metz, had managed to pass through the Prussian lines into Paris, and had brought the news that Metz, our virgin fortress, had been taken by the Germans, and that Bazaine and his whole Army, who had escaped death, had been made prisoners.

"Has," said Madama de Montcour, with trembling lips—"has he brought any list of the killed and wounded?"

"No," replied my father, hurriedly; "the man was at the Palais de Justice, telling his story; but what I have told you is all I heard. But don't, pray, don't grieve now. Of course he is all right," went on my dear old father, putting his arm round her as though she were indeed his daughter—I am sure she had a daughter's place in his heart. "Of course he is all right—so many prayers could not have been all in vain!"

"Please," she said, pleadingly, taking his hand in both of hers, "please, I should so like to see this man. Could you find him? I must speak to him!" And before either of us could answer, she had passed us and gone into the baby's room, and locked the door behind her.

"I will go, Hester," said my father; "try and cheer her up as soon as she will see you, for truly she is deserving of help from every one she meets upon her road, for no one has ever asked help from her in vain!"

I went up to my own room, and sat down, feeling quite dazed with misery and anxiety. Hour after hour passed, but still I never moved; at last approaching night roused me. I got up and went down to the dining-room, where I found my father talking to a rough-looking soldier lad.

I would have retired, but my father called me back. "Send up and tell Madame de Montcour that the man is here she wished to see."

I gave the message to a servant, and then sat down to await, with a beating heart, the story that was coming.

Presently the door opened, and Hélène entered. The soldier started, and twisted his cap nervously round between his fingers, when he looked up and saw the frail figure of Madame de Montcour standing before him, for in her black dress, her brown eyes looking larger and brighter than ever, and the fair hair like a halo round her head, she did present somewhat the look of a messenger from another world.

"This is the lady," said my father, and then he went toward her to lead her to a chair, but she paid no attention to him, only turned to the soldier, and said—

"Tell us now everything you know."

He related his story then, much in the same words in which my father had already told it to us.

"Yes," she said eagerly, "but how did you escape, and when was it, out of Metz?"

"No," he replied, "I was taken prisoner with many others, but somehow, in the confusion that followed the surrender, I managed to get away. But I did not come here directly; under the cover of the darkness, I walked on some miles during the night, until I reached a station some distance farther on, that I knew they," with a little emphasis on the they, "would have to pass. I wanted to see the last of them—my own regiment—you understand?"

She nodded her head impatiently. He went on.

"I hid behind the station, and watched, and presently the train came in. A great many officers got out, and stood by their chargers, and I asked a man near me if he knew what was going to happen, and he told me that as the French were not allowed to take their horses into Germany, the officer commanding had given them leave to try and sell them, as many as could, which of course they were willing enough to do, as money was not over-plentiful. Two or three I saw sold to farmers and those sort of men, for fifty or a hundred francs, as the case might be. I tell you all this because you want to hear everything?" he said interrogatively.

"Yes, yes," she cried, "go on; did you see anything more?"

"Let me think. Where was I? I am telling you all this because at the end something did happen worth repeating. One officer I noticed, standing by the head of a most magnificent charger. Drawing his arm through the bridle rein, he presently brought it up quite close to where I was standing, as far away as possible from the spot where the others were shouting and bargaining. He stood beside it quite motionless for a minute, while it looked at him, as it it knew the terrible chance that had befallen its master, and then he muttered: 'No, you shall never take me back a prisoner;' and at that he kissed it twice between the eyes; then, before a single German could interfere, he drew a pistol from his pocket and shot it through the brain; the poor beast fell over almost at my feet, quite dead." As he finished his story, the soldier passed his rough coat-sleeve across his eyes, and looking at me said, apologetically, "You would have been sorry too, Madame, if you had seen it?"

"Was the officer wounded?" I asked quickly, for something seemed to tell me who he was.

"Yes, Madame," he replied, "he was very lame."

"Did you never hear his name?" said Madame de Montcour, in a quick, gasping voice that made me rise, and move toward her.

"I did not, Madame, although I asked, but his horse was covered with a cloth, in the corner of which was a coronet, with 'R. de M.' beneath it. See, I wrote the initials down for fear of forgetting them," and he held out to me a piece of a dirty letter, beginning "Very dear son," on which the letters were copied.

"Then he is not dead," Hélène cried out, and with that fell fainting at my feet.

My father lifted her up, and carried her to to her own room, where I followed her; first, however, pausing to turn to the soldier, and hold out my hand, much to his surprise. "It is her husband," was all I could find to say, and then I followed my father.

I tried every remedy I could think of, and at last the life began to return to Hélène's pale form. She opened her eyes and smiled up at me. "You have had plenty to do looking after me," she said, "but oh, you cannot imagine what this afternoon has been; I had such a dreadful presentiment that I should never see him again, and now that my mind is easier, it has been too much for me!"

As she spoke she half rose, and stretched out her hand to draw me toward her; the movement caused her wedding-ring to fall off. I picked it up, and handed it back in silence. As she took it she said, "That fitted too tight when I was married to do that!"

I threw myself down on my knees beside her. "Oh don't, don't," I cried, "you must not fret like this. I promised to take care of you, and just see how I have kept my promise!" And when I looked at her, my heart ached as I thought of her as she was at that ball at Ligny only two years ago!

"My dear," she replied, "it cannot be laid to your charge that I worry myself, and imagine all sorts of horrors. But you know it is useless telling me not to think, because I really cannot help it. And yet you have your brother there too—your nearest and dearest are in as much danger as mine, but you are not as selfishly nervous as I am!"

"Yes," I soobed, with my head resting against her knee, "I can feel for you! Sometimes I have felt as if I should go mad with fright, but it is over now," I added thankfully.

"You have some one absent then as dear to you as Raoul is to me?"

"Yes," I echoed absently, "as dear as Raoul is to you!"

And with these words silence fell between us again, unbroken until Hélène said, speaking in a hesitating voice, and passing her hand over my hair with a caressing gesture, for I had never moved my head off her knee, "I think we understand one another better than we did, do we not? At least I hope you like me better—do you?"

I was crying so that I could not answer, but I stroked the soft hand I held between mine.

"What was it," she whispered, "that always stood between us?"

"Oh, don't ask," I cried, "please don't, but rest contented with this, that there is nothing between us now," and at that I kissed the white face for the first time since I had known her.

"Then we are real friends, at last," she said.

"At last," I replied sadly through my tears, and then I left her.

CHAPTER VII.

The next morning, immediately after breakfast, which meal was not quite so plentiful as it had been, Madame de Montcour said, turning to me, "Will you come with me to church? I think I should like to go this morning, and if we start directly we shall have plenty of time before we are due at the hospital."

"Plenty," I replied, "and I should like it of all things."

Before leaving we went into the nursery, to take a last look at the boy. She took him in her arms—such a big child as he was growing! and kissed him many times. "Ah, when shall we see him again?" she murmured, "how many more dreadful months! Oh, I think if the Prussians only knew little Raoul, how much we wanted him, they would either let us out to him, or send him back to us?" and kissing him again she left him.

Directly we were outside she began talking; and much more freely than had been her wont of late. Evidently our confidences of the night before had brought us closer together.

"You think now," she asked earnestly, "that he is sure to be all right?"

"Oh, surely," I replied.

"It is only a matter of time now," she went on; "the Germans must raise the siege of Paris, or—well, something must happen soon; this dreary monotony many weeks longer would kill me. And to think of his being a prisoner, and Etoile dead! It seems as if nothing were going right. If I had only followed your father's advice we should have been safe at Montcour now. Don't you feel angry with me sometimes for my obstinacy? and now, here am I being as irritable and cross as if I had not heard, only yesterday, that he was alive, which after all is the great thing, instead of being most thankful at having heard of him; of course the lameness cannot be much?" she concluded interrogatively.

"Of course not," I assented soothingly, "he would not have been walking if he had not been nearly well."

"Thank you for saying that. I think you are so unselfish, Hester; you always manage to say something soothing when I am perturbed and cross, and it must be difficult to try and cheer another when one is feeling anxious one's-self. I shall tell Raoul when he returns what cure you have taken of me."

"It I am thoughtful for others I have learned it from you," I said slowly.

"From me," she repeated, "indeed that cannot be, for I never think of any one but Raoul, which of course, in the end, means the same thing as never thinking of any one but myself! But we will hope," she finished as we reached the steps of the church, "for your sake, that I shall come out in a more cheerful temper."

"I don't wish you the least bit altered," I exclaimed enthusiastically, "for I think you are perfect!" and with these words we entered and knelt down side by side.

I knelt down devoutly enough, but my thoughts would not be controlled. They wandered away, first, to the dear old Ligny garden—I almost seemed to smell the sweet scent of the linden flowers—and from that to my strange dream on that hot July morning; what had it meant, I wondered, as I had so often wondered since; and from that to the entangled present, on to the more entangled future. How would it all end?

And as I thus thought, there came across me with a shudder the memory of my wild prayers that I had then offered up; then I prayed earnestly, most earnestly, that they might be forgiven me, and that for the future I might learn to trust everything to my Father in heaven, and not strive to arrange things for myself; for though I did not love Raoul any less than I had done, yet clearer sight seemed to have been given me, and so when I looked at the woman at my side, whom I had at last learned to love also, and who was so far worthier of him than I was, I realized how wicked my prayers had been, which, it answered, would have brought down such grief upon her innocent head!

As I rose from my knees, I felt like the ancient mariner, when the albatross had at last fallen from his neck, and with that feeling of release from my own sins came a kindlier feeling than I had ever had before for Hélène de Montcour, whom, after all, I had so deeply wronged.

As we walked down the aisle together I, seeing that there were tears in her eyes, took her hand between both of mine, and caressing it gently, said, "Courage, Hélène," and as we once more stood on the church steps I repeated, "courage, think of the end of all this! One enjoys happiness so much the more in proportion to the sorrows that have preceded it!"

"The end," she said, dreamily, gazing up at the blue sky above us; "ah, yes! but who knows when and how the end may come?"

And even as she spoke the end came. There was a flash—a quick report—and with one sharp cry that echoed in my ears for years, that I still sometimes hear, Hélène lay stretched at my feet. With strength that must have been given me for the occasion I lifted her up and bore her, staggering under her light weight, to the hospital where she had spent so many hours. It was only a few steps from where we had been standing, but I was almost speechless from exhaustion when I entered. I laid her down on one of the beds, and taking off her veil sprinkled cold water over the white face, while nuns crowded round, asking questions and making suggestions, until I was too bewildered to think of anything to say or do. The next thing I remember was a tall man in uniform pushing his way toward where I was, and begging to know if there was anything he could do. Without attending to his question I stood up, and said in stiff, unnatural tones, which did not sound like the creation of my own voice, "How did it happen?"

"It began with a fight between two drunken soldiers; I was passing up the street and attempted to separate them, upon which one suddenly drew a pistol from his pocket; I tried to snatch it out of his hand, and in the struggle that ensued it went off. The shock sobered the man, who is now under arrest. But," breaking off in his narrative, "have you sent for a doctor?"

"Oh, yes!" I exclaimed, clasping my hands together. "Why does he not come? If you really would be of any service, pray go to the Hôtel Montcour on the Champs Elysées, and ask M. de Ligny to come here immediately; tell him all that has happened, and ask him to bring Madame de Montcour's baby."

Directly he had withdrawn, Hélène opened her eyes and looked round for me. "Have you sent for a doctor?"

I nodded, and as I did so he entered the room.

I suppose I must have looked very white—I never am useful in an emergency—for he said to one of the Sisters standing by, "Take Mademoiselle away."

She led me unresistingly into another ward of the hospital, where the white faces of the soldiers looked eagerly round for news. I sat down on a chair and remained speechless, my face buried in my hands for what seemed hours; then I again heard voices near me; the officer who had done my commission was standing close beside me, talking to the doctor. Her fate was then settled.

"What is it?" I cried wildly, starting to their side, "what is it—life or death?"

The doctor looked from him to me, and answered slowly and sadly, "Death, Madamoiselle; nothing could save her. She may live a couple of hours, but not more."

The blow was too great almost to be realized; the very force of the shock seemed to calm me.

"Did you," I said to the officer, "give my message to M. de Ligny?"

"Yes," he answered, coming nearer, and attempting to take my cold hand in his. "Don't look like that, you frighten me, I would rather you wept torrents! And don't shrink away from me," he went on, "and look at me as if I were her murderer. Do you not think it is awful for me, too? I feel almost as if I had killed her, and I thank God the pistol was not in my hand when it went off."

Although I knew he was just as innocent as I was myself, yet I could not prevail upon myself to touch his proffered hand. I pushed past him into the room where she lay, looking to me almost as if she were already dead. I knelt down by her side, and at my touch she opened her eyes and turned toward me. "The baby," she whispered.

"He is coming," I returned, soothingly.

"I cannot speak much, it hurts me so, and besides it wastes my strength, and I must live to see the child—but will you tell him all about the siege, and how kind you were—and that I was quite happy after I heard that he was safe," she went on in little disjointed sentences. "Be sure and remember to say that I was happy," she repeated.

I nodded my head.

After a little pause, "Where is the officer who was there? Here?"

"Yes, dear."

"Then please ask him to come here."

I opened the door and called to him.

"Monsieur," said she, with a shadow of the bright smile of old, "I wanted to say good-bye to you, and to thank you for all you tried to do to save me, but it was not to be; and please don't let the man be shot; it was not intentional. Will you promise?" she said, holding out her hand.

"I will do my best for him," he answered, taking it in his. "Good-bye, Madame; I feel, though I know before Heaven I am perfectly guiltless, as it I had killed you,—and I have a sister no older than you are."

"Hush!" said the soft faint voice, "don't speak like that; it only makes me unhappy. I saw all, only I seemed incapable of moving, but I know exactly how it happened."

"Good-bye," he repeated; I think he could not trust his voice to say any more, and he turned to go, meeting, as he left the room, my poor old father, accompanied by a priest, and behind him the nurse carrying the child.

The little Raoul was laid by his mother's side, and the last words of consolation to the dying were read over them both, while I knelt by their side. At last the service was concluded, the Benedicite was said, the tinkle of the bell preding the Host had died away on the air, when she spoke again—

"Hester, take off my diamond ring and give it to Raoul, when you see him, with my very dear love; don't forget, dearest." I took it from her as she spoke. "And now kiss me for good-bye—and you, too, Monsieur, I am so glad," she whispered to me, "that we understood one another at last!"

Then she fell back and I thought her dead, but once again she spoke. "Tell Raoul—Raoul,"—and with that word, that had been all her life to her, she gave a little sigh, and so fell on sleep.

And I was left thinking—thinking of my wicked prayers that I had prayed in my madness, and of how they had been answered! For now, at last, it was no sin to love him, for was not the woman who had stood between us taken away? Yes, but only when I found out that she was necessary to his happiness; only when I would have given my life to see her standing once more a loving, living wife, by his side.

And so in this way the reply came. Oh, let us take heed, then, for what we ask; let us learn to say, not only with our lips, but with our hearts, "Not my will but Thine be done."

CHAPTER VIII.

We buried Hélène de Montcour in the cemetery of Père la Chaise, on the very same day that we also laid in his grave the young soldier who had told me that she reminded him of his mother.

My old father, the officer who had been the innocent cause of her death, and I, with the child, followed the coffin, besides many of those who had learned to love her in those terrible times.

A simple stone cross was all we put to mark her resting-place; all else should be left till Raoul returned, and then we had nothing further to do but to wait day by day for the termination of the siege.

Every day the same things happened; every morning there was a fresh sortie of brave, hopeful hearts, firmly believing that before evening they must break through the Prussian lines, and every nightfall fresh soldiers were brought into the hospital to be nursed and cared for, and every night also fresh graves were dug for the fallen in the cemeteries around. But all things must come to an end some time, and at last a day arrived when it was declared to be a useless waste of human lives to hold out any longer, and that the keys of the capital were to be given into the hand of the enemy—a day when, with an aching heart and tear-blinded eyes, I leaned over the sleeping child, with my fingers in my ears to shut out the tramp, tramp of marching feet up the streets, that told of the presence of the conqueror within the gates of Paris.

Ah me! Ah me! I hope I shall never live to hear such sounds again. Perhaps it is wrong to sacrifice more lives than are absolutely necessary; but it seems to me that rather than have seen that day, it would have been preferable that every man, woman, and child within those walls had armed, and died upon the ramparts!

It did not kill my father as he had once said it would; but though he moved about and spoke as of old, yet I think the day that saw the German flag float above ours in the capital, destroyed in him all that makes life worth having. To my mind he has never been the same man since.

Some weeks after that, as I sat in the drawing-room on the hearth-rug, watching the flames, and dreaming of many things past and present, the door was slowly opened, and some one entered.

I did not speak, did not even look up, for though it was too dark to see any one, I concluded it was my father, until suddenly a voice fell on my ear—a voice so sad, so unutterably hopeless, and the one word it said was, "Hélène."

Changed as it was, for all the glad ring of youth had gone out of it, I knew it in a moment.

"Hélène," he repeated, "comfort me, for I sorely need it. Are you broken-hearted too?"

"Then he does not know," was the thought that flashed across me, "and I have to tell him!"

I started to my feet, feeling sure that the difference in our height would appear even in this dim light.

"I beg your pardon," he said, sinking down into an arm-chair, "but it was very dark. Where is Hélène?"

There was not the slightest echo even of cheerfulness in his voice; anything so drearily sad I never heard.

I crossed over to his side and laid my burning hand on his cool one, and without a word, for speak I could not, I drew off the diamond ring I had worn ever since her death, and laid it on the table.

The stones gave a flash in the light from the dying embers on the fire, and in that flash he seemed to recognize it. He walked over to the hearth, deliberately knelt down, and stirred the fire into a blaze, and examined it in the light.

"What is this for?" he said, calmly; but I saw his hands tremble as he held it toward me.

I could not speak even yet; but I suppose there was no need for words; my reply must have been written on my face, for with a despairing cry he sank down into the arm-chair from which he had risen, and throwing his arms on the table buried his face in them.

How long we sat there I know not. I never moved from my position on the rug, my eyes never quitted the fire. I can remember now how it sent up some little bright jets of flame in the place where he had stirred it to see the ring, and then how it gradually settled down into a dull, gray mass of burned-out ashes, all the time I was thinking thoughts that well nigh maddened me; for was it not almost maddening to see the man I loved best on earth suffering such cruel grief, and to feel that by my own sin I was so far away from him that I could not even attempt to comfort him?

Then I rose to my feet, for I thought I heard a sob, and I could bear it no longer.

"Raoul," I said, laying my hand on his shoulder, "I am so sorry for you! oh, Raoul! what can I do?"

He made no answer, so I bethought me of the child. I ran up stairs, and lifting him off the nursery floor carried him down stairs. At the door I kissed him and put him down. "Go in, dear little Raoul, to papa," I whispered.

I placed the candle I held in my hand on a table inside, to guide the tottering footsteps, and then I shut the door again, confident that the presence of the child must rouse him. I was right; before I moved away I heard an exclamation as he started to his feet, and then I guessed by the loving whispers that he had taken him in his arms.

An hour afterward the nurse came to me in my room, to tell me that M. le Vicomte wished me to take him a glass of wine in the drawing-room. "I tried to persuade him," said the old woman, who had nursed the father, as now she nursed the son, "to go in and take his dinner comfortably in the dining-room, where it is all ready; but he would not hear of it. 'Anywhere but there!' he cried out. Ah, but he is sadly changed!"

I could easily imagine why he did not wish to go in there, when I remembered that last eventful evening.

Changed indeed, I thought, as I opened the door—so changed that it was hard to believe how few were the months since I had seen him last. The tall figure looked taller than ever from his great thinness, and there were dark shadows under the gray eyes that had never been there before. His aide de camp's uniform, that had looked so fresh and gay the night he had started, was tattered and frayed in many places, and when he moved toward me to take the wine from my hand I saw that he was a little lame.

"You have been wounded," I said quickly.

"It is nothing," he replied; "I am all right again now. Now please tell me everything."

Without another word I told him the whole sad story. All the time I was speaking he stood at the entrance of the little conservatory gazing out into the night, so motionless that I might almost have thought he did not hear me, until I gave him her last message, when he turned round, and pouring himself out a glass of wine drank it hastily.

I said all I had to say in a hard, dry voice, that I could not alter try as I would. When I had finished he said, with a feeble attempt at a smile, "Thank you, Mademoiselle, and good night. I am sorry for the way I have behaved, but really I felt quite stunned. You can tell your father when he comes in that I have returned and will see him in the morning;" then he went up stairs, leaving me where I had stood the whole of that dreadful interview.

Directly his footsteps had died away in the distance, I ran up to the nursery and made my moan to the old nurse—there seemed no one else left to comfort me now.

CHAPTER IX.

Once again I am at dear old Ligny, and I am glad that it should be in this house that I put the few last words to the story of my life, which story has all been contained in three years.

Once again the hot July days have come round, but to tell how the end came about, I must go back some three months, when after hearing and telling the history of those terrible weeks we had been separated, my father and I had returned to Ligny.

From Raoul we learnt that Eustache de l'Orme and my own brave brother had fallen in one of the sorties from Metz, and then with the sound of weeping in our ears, for every one seemed to have lost a husband or brother in that awful war, we returned home.

A week ago I was leaning listlessly against the window of the salon, gazing, with eyes that saw nothing, at the linden trees and the placid waters of the Loire, which no changes could ever move out of their course, and as I did so that other day came back to my remembrance, when, like to-day, I had looked out on the lovely landscape and seen nothing. Involuntarily I turned around, almost expecting to see my old grandmother, but her absence disturbed my dream. "Ah, dear old grandmère," I cried aloud, "how I wish you were here! Oh, that these three years could come over again, how different would I make them!" But, alas! the dead return not, and the days that are no more come not back to us!

So imbued was I with the spirit of the past, that it seemed the most natural thing in the world to see Raoul riding up the avenue, though I had no idea he had returned to Montcour; but before I had time even to wonder what had brought him away from Paris, he was in the room.

"Good morning, Mademoiselle. Where is your father?"

"He is out, but I expect he will not be very long."

"Then I will wait."

No more. He did not seem inclined either to speak again, but wandered about the room, taking up first one thing and then another. I sat down, and took out a piece of work, but not many were the stiches I put into it; my eyes would stray to the tall figure moving so sadly and hopelessly about.

"I beg your pardon for fidgeting so, but it seems to work off some of the restlessness of my mind. I cannot sit still any more," he said, with a faint smile.

"Raoul," at last I said, laying my work down, and folding my trembling hands above it, "I did try to take care of her; you believe it, do you not?"

He stopped in his restless walk, and stood gazing down into my anxious eyes. "Certainly. Of course I do. I never saw any one kinder than you are, and no one ever could, try as they might, have had unkind thoughts about her, after they had known her;" and then after a little pause, "I had once, as you know. Do you think that I should be as hopelessly unhappy as I am, it it were not for the knowledge that for the first year of our short married life I almost hated her! You cannot imagine what it is, night and day, to bear about with me the burden of this sin, a sin indeed repented of; but repentance cannot take away the punishment or the remembrance. Don't cry, Reine; you did try to make me do right, I know you did, and at last, after causing you almost as much grief as I had suffered myself, I left you alone, and as you told me that night, if I only tried I must grow fond of her. But after your sweet words had come true, and that I had learned to love her as you had prophesied, that I always felt certain that sooner or later my sin would find me out, and it has, Reine. See," he went on, pushing back as he spoke his fair curls off his forehead, and showing how white his hair was underneath, "I shall be grey-headed before I am forty! All sorrow, little Reine, all sorrow, and the worst of it is, that it is all brought by my own fault!"

"Oh, Raoul," I sobbed, "shall we be punished all our lives?"

"Not we, dear, for you did your duty; you might have said 'Stay,' and you knew full well that had you said so then I should have stayed; but you behaved well and bravely, and said, 'Go,' and I obeyed, but only after trying to teach you the same thoughts I had myself. I did you a grievous wrong, and I am heartily sorry for it."

"Reine," he began again after a long silence, while I was thinking of words wherein to answer him, "I might now do you, perhaps a worse wrong; I might try and persuade you to marry me and share my ruined life; but when I think of doing so I seem to see her spirit between us bidding me pause and consider whether that would not be falling into the same mistake that I did once before, namely, marrying where I do not love as I should love the woman who is to be my wife; and yet, Reine, do not think from this that I am not very, very fond of you, only I am puzzled sometimes to know what is best. Now I leave it to you; you shall decide. What say you?"

When he began to speak I had laid my work down, and crossed my hands, to try and hide the trembling of my fingers, but when he had done, strength seemed to be given me; by my very love I conquered. Marry him thus! Find out day after day that his heart was buried in his dead wife's grave, and that never, try as I might, could I hope to be anything to him? Live, perhaps, to see him hate me, as the woman who had been the cause of his disloyalty—the woman who had caused him, as he himself owned, to lose a whole year of happiness in his short married life.

"Never," I exclaimed, sadly; "never, never!" and then there was a long pause, spent by him in pacing up and down the salon; at last he stood still, and placed his hands upon my shoulders; but I did not look up into his face as I had done the day under the lindens, to see the love that was lighting it up. No, this time I kept my eyes bent upon my folded hands, so as not to let a glimpse of the saddened eyes above me tempt me to alter my decision.

"Reine, did you ever hear your mother's history?"

"Yes."

"I only ask you because I want you to think of yourself—if you think it would make you happier to be cared for by me, as I would care for you, than to be left here all alone. Come! it is only for your own sake I warn you against myself, for I have so very little to offer."

For one minute I hesitated. With his hand upon me, and his voice in my ear, the temptation was strong. I think if there had been one word in all his pleading for himself I should have yielded; but no, it was all for me, and my pride could not stoop to that.

"No, Raoul; I think you are very kind and thoughtful, but nothing could make me happier now!"

"Nothing? Is it, then, indeed, true that you did lose your dearest on the battle-field?"

He waited evidently anxiously for my answer. How could I add to the burden of his own ruined life the weight of another! No, whatever might be my future, no shadow from it, as far as it was in my power to prevent it, should ever fall across his; so I looked up full into his eyes, and answered—"yes!"

I was glad then when I saw a gleam of relief pass over his careworn face, and I am glad still. I had caused him trouble enough, God knows, as it was, and, after all, had not the answer a great deal of truth in it, for had I not lost my dearest on the battle-field of life?

"I have long sought an opportunity, Reine, to give you a message that he sent to you. Here it is," he said in a low voice. "'Tell her that the daisy, though not for me, was worth fighting—and dying for!' I always feared that that message meant that the daisy was unwon; now I hope that it was only ungathered!"

I made no answer.

"Those were his last words," he concluded.

"Did he suffer much?"

"Not for long, at any rate; a bullet through the lungs is a quick ending. Did you hear that I made an effort, though an unsuccessful one, to save him. I hoped that once off the field, with care, his life might have been saved, so I went back for him, but I knew it was of no use directly I had lifted him up on the saddle in front of me, so my bullet, which has pretty well lamed me, was all of no use."

Not till long afterward did I hear from an eye-witness of the gallant attempt Raoul had made to rescue his dying friend, who had been left, sorely wounded, on the battle-field.

"Poor Eustache! Well, it was for your sake—and his; and it was something worth, for I was able to follow him to his grave, and to bring back to you his last words. See also," he added, drawing an envelope from his pocket, "here is a lock of his hair I cut from his head after he was dead. Would you like to have it?"

I unfastened the paper with trembling fingers and tear-dimmed eyes, for though I had not loved him in the way that Raoul believed, still I had been found of Eustache de l'Orme. I just glanced at the thick, black curl, then I opened my desk, and locked it up in it. I did not seem able or willing to listen to anything about him then; I put it by to solace me with the remembrance of the faithful love I had won, in the dreary times that I knew were coming—dreary times that have, indeed, come at last, for since that day I have heard that Raoul is going to Algeria. He cannot bear any longer to be a French soldier in France, and at this very moment I am sitting waiting until he has left my father when he is to come and wish me farewell.

I bore the waiting as long as I could; but his last words to my father seemed to take a great while saying, and at last I rose up, determining to seek the picture-gallery, always my favorite resort in time of trouble, and my trouble is now verily and indeed great, for I seem with my own hand to be pushing the glass of happiness away from my lips untasted, and my sorrow is so great that even the commanding voice of conscience is hushed.

There are two new pictures in the hall now, one of myself and one of my brother, this latter still stands half-finished on an easel in the centre of the room. I stood a long time looking at it, and trying to realize that terrible battle-field, where he and Eustache, who had been such friends through life, in death had not been divided. But he, unlike his brother in arms, had had no time to send last, loving messages to broken-hearted friends at home. Struck down in one minute, leaving no time for those around to question even whether it were life or death; perhaps more merciful for him, but ah, far sadder for us! But my thoughts would stray away from him to that other soldier risking his life to try and save the friend.

Oh, Raoul, Raoul! And even as my thoughts reached him, the door from the conservatory opened, and he came in. He walked straight up to my side, and stood for a few moments in silence gazing at the representation of myself that hung above me.

"It is like," at length he said, glancing from it to me.

I was painted in the long black dress and white cap that I had worn so many months while working in the hospital at Hélène's side. I had chosen the dress in memory of her.

"Very like," he repeated; and as he said so he stretched out his hand and took mine in his. I did not shrink away from him; he was my brother in all but name, in his own eyes at least, and I was to him, now and for ever, a woman broken-hearted at her lover's death, and therefore very, very much in need of comfort.

"But it grieves me, Hester," he went on, to see you looking so worn and sad; "is there nothing I can do for you—nothing?"

And what could I do now but echo sadly, "Nothing."

Then his eyes wandered to the picture of Comtesse Hester opposite. "I cannot think, Hester, how we could ever have thought you so like her; let me look at you well," he continued, putting me at a little distance from him, so as to see me better. "I cannot make it out, for the features are the same; it must be the expression that is so different."

Did no remembrance come back to him then as he said those words? Was it possible so totally to forget?

I scarcely dared look up, so frightened was I lest my eyes should say too much. But there was no danger; the grave that lay between us was wide as it was deep—so wide, that no memories from the years that had gone before could bridge across it.

Had not the warning sent me in my dream been fulfilled? I felt it had then as I stood there. I almost seemed to see, as I saw once before, the white wings between him and me. "Surely, surely," I solaced myself by thinking, "it must be right if it is an angel of God that stands between us!"

So I looked from my picture with its folded hands and tearful eyes, to the laughing lovely face opposite, and said, "Yes, of course, the expression is different, Raoul. No one could go through what I have done and remain a child."

Then we walked up and down the old gallery many times, he telling me things he wished done while he was away. I listened to all he had to say, and then I told him of a plan my father and I had formed of bringing the little Raoul to live with us at Ligny.

"Would you really do that?" said Raoul, his face brightening. "I should so like him to grow up with one who knew his mother."

"And loved her," I added, with tears in my eyes, "and, God helping me, Raoul, her little child shall grow up like her."

"Thank you, Reine, there is no one to whom I would sooner trust him. Take care of him, and of yourself, and some day I will return to thank you for all the help you have been to me through my life."

Then he stooped and pressed one kiss, a brother's kiss, upon my forehead, and whispered, as he had once done before, "Good-bye, God bless you, little Reine!"

And I? In that moment I clung desperately to him; it seemed then as if I could not let him go,—as if my very life was going with him,—but before I said a detaining word all my good resolutions came back to me; were they all to be broken like this at the very last out of pure selfishness? No, a thousand times no.

So I loosened my hold upon his arm, and only said, "God bless you, dear, dear Raoul. Good-bye!" and he went, and as the door shut behind him, I fell fainting on the floor. Well, that is the story of my life, all the joy, the suffering and the love, begun and ended in three years!

Now the time of rest after the strife has come and I live on here in dear old Ligny, with my father and little Raoul, contentedly if not happily; for the end must come sometime, and in the meanwhile, if it were not for the thought of how my life has been spoiled by my own sins, I could wait pea ing down to the very footlights. The strength and capacity of this frame may be conceived by its carrying one hundred and fifty persons. Behind were other vessels, and a triumph was reached when the huge mass with all it bore rolled over and sank slowly in the waters. All this was contrived on scenic principles, for the gigantic portion presented to the spectator served to indicate what was not seen, and imagination did the rest. Often a torrent is required to roll its waters from the mountains and heights; this is contrived by arranging a piece of transparent material in the shape of the stream, while behind a metal cylinder revolves whose surface is cut into a number of irregular holes, lit up by jets of gas. As it revolves, the transparency becomes illuminated in a fitful and irregular fashion. It must be admitted that all attempts at presenting the moon, whether "horned" or at the full, have been of a rather lame and impotent kind, not reaching beyond the elemental principle of cutting a hole in the canvas and covering it with a transparent material. Sometimes, indeed, a ragged cloud is suffered to trail across, but the edges are so hard that they betray that they are of stouter material than vapor. Here it seems that scenic artists do not care to apply their minds to the study of the question. For the representation of sunrise or sunset an ingenious machine has been devised. The lime-light is placed behind the transparent canvas that is to be illuminated, a metal funnel cut out in the shape of rays, which radiate from an open centre, being interposed. The opaque portions intercept the light, which is thus obliged to take the shape of the rays.—New Quarterly Magazine.

ECHOES.

The blithesome shepherd sings
His artless songs,
And Echo's wandering voice
The notes prolongs.
A maiden's eye strikes mine
My cheeks flush red,
And, like a flower oppressed
She droops her head.

I love the mystic voice
That back again
Returns in purer tones
The shepherd's strain.
I love the maid whose soul,
Reflecting mine,
Would speak its kindling thoughts
In looks divine.

THE LUXURY OF GRIEF.—Mr. Herbert Spencer remarks, in his Principles of Psychology, upon the indulgence generally known as the "luxury of grief," and otherwise called "self-pity." He offers an explanation of its meaning, but admits that his explanation does not completely satisfy himself. One explanation is, as he remarks, that, pity being in some sense an agreeable feeling, the pleasure remains even when we are ourselves the object of the emotion. This explanation, if partly sound, still leaves it to be explained why pity should be agreeable. We need not consider how Mr. Spencer accounts for this last phenomenon, as he offers a different account of the pleasure of "self-pity." He thinks that it may perhaps arise from a vague impression in the mind of the sufferer that he has received less than his deserts. It is natural, for example, to a rejected contributor to think that the editor must be stupid. By a natural association of ideas, he learns to dwell upon the fact of the rejection as illustrating the fact that he is not properly appreciated. Logically speaking, such a fact is hardly consolatory. The true conclusion is, "The world does not value me as it ought." The proposition confounded with it is, "I am worth more than the world thinks." If my own merits are taken as the starting-point, the opinion is painful; if the world's opinion is the starting-point, the opinion is pleasant. The bare fact, then, that a certain person does not do me justice, can afford no legitimate ground for satisfaction; but when converted by an illogical process into a proof that I am worth more than that person thinks, it may be made to flatter that most illogical passion, my vanity. The pleasure which people often take in contemplating injustice to themselves seems to show that this explanation is often correct. A pet grievance becomes a hobby with many men. In setting forth their grievances to the world, or even on brooding over it in solitude, they are necessarily dwelling upon their own virtues. And it is not surprising that, in many cases, the habit should generate an unreasonable self-complacency. We should doubt, however, whether this doctrine is wide enough to cover all cases. The most familiar examples of the "luxury of grief" seem to be but indirectly connected with any form of vanity. A sentimentalist takes a perverse pleasure in cultivating melancholy, after the fashion of Jaques, and delights in self-abasement and exaggeration of his own incapacity for action; or a widow cherishes her grief for a dead husband till she resents any attempt at comfort, and takes a pride in self-torture. In such cases, unfortunately familiar enough, it is often almost impossible to say what are the ultimate components of the passion. We have such marvellous skill in deceiving ourselves that nothing is more difficult than to give a fair account of our own emotions. The morbid recluse may be really nothing but a thoroughly indolent man, who dwells upon his weakness to excuse himself from action. Excessive grief for the dead easily connects itself with personal vanity. We are really seeking for the praise of constancy, or yielding to a sort of superstitious belief that the dead will take pleasure in our useless sacrifice of our own happiness. The play of motives is so intricate that the attempt to analyze them or sum up the result in a single formula, is necessarily illusory. Much, therefore, that passes for self-pity may be really some more intelligible passion in a metamorphic state. One of the most familiar symptoms of the state of mind in question is the feminine pleasure in crying. You cry, we are apt to say, because you are unhappy. How then can you find pleasure in crying? The answer would probably be that, although crying is caused by grief, it implies a transformation of grief which, at the moment, is agreeable. The mind has been in a state of tension, and the tension is relaxed when the tears come. The process is one of relief from a painful state of the system. Grief, like other emotions, swells and falls, as every one must have observed, in a series of waves. The passion gradually increases to a culminating point; then comes a period of relaxation during which it declines, and, by comparison, this period is agreeable. In men, and especially in women, of weak and irritable nerves, this second period announces itself by weeping. The stress of the torture is over; the tension is relieved by the discharge. The two periods are generally translated in terms of sentiment by a feeling of blank despair during the first period, implying a hopeless impulse to struggle against the inevitable, and, during the second period, by a sense of resignation or readiness to accept the position against which it is in vain to struggle. It is not surprising that, under certain circumstances, this latter period should be regarded as absolutely pleasant, and finally become an object of desire.—The Saturday Review.

THE COURT OF PRUSSIA.—The other two interesting things in the book [Sixty-nine Years at the Court of Prussia. From the Recollections of Sophie Marie, Countess Von Voss] are the two parallel love stories—that between the heroine and Frederic's brother, Prince August Wilhelm, and that between her niece Julie and King Frederick William II. In the history of the Hohenzollern house, these two stories are really not unimportant, and the more so because they run parallel to each other. In both cases the lady is pursued with the most ungovernable passion. In the first case, she makes her escape from the royal addresses by a marriage without affection; in the latter case she yields. But both the lovers, at the time of falling in love, bear the title of Prince of Prussia, and one is the father of the other. King Frederick William II. is a person who, as soon as it becomes part of a proper English education to learn something about Continental, especially about Prussian history, will be recognized as having a great historical importance. His peculiar ungovernableness, his total want of the stern self-discipline which has made the greatness of his house, had great consequences in the world, for they produced that demoralization of the Prussian State and Army which ended in Jena and the Peace of Tilsit. His character is the more worth studying because it was not without strong and remarkable qualities, so much so that Kant could describe him as a "brave, honest, humane, and —putting aside certain peculiarities of temperament—a thoroughly excellent Prince." We seem to get some light upon his character from the way in which in this book it is set over against that of his unfortunate father. Ungovernableness is equally the characteristic of both father and son. The elder Prince of Prussia, at the celebration of the marriage which he has forced our diarist into contracting, actually falls down in a fainting fit, and has to be carried out. The same unrestrained sensibility is shown in the circumstances of his death. In this volume is printed a letter from a Fräulein von Kleist, describing the persistency with which, when attacked by illness, he, broken-hearted by the harshness with which his brother treated him, refused to listen to medical advice or take remedies, until, in spite of all the care of those about him, he succeeded in rendering his illness fatal. The family likeness is plain in the notes which the diarist makes of the behavior of his son, Frederic's successor. He pursues Julie as his father had pursued our diarist, until she consents to a left-handed marriage, and, in the remarks here made, both on this persecution and on his other amours, we see how different was the Prussian Charles II. from the English one. We see a man of passion rather than a man of pleasure, a sentimentalist rather than a cynic; that is, a man not wanting in the feelings so much as in the discipline of virtue.—The Athenæum.

CURIOSITIES OF PATENTS.—The most amusing part of the subject is connected with the inventions for which the patents are obtained—the oddity much more manifest than the importance, in so many instances. The first patents, issued in the time of James I., were more in the nature of monopolies or privileges, for which a "consideration" was paid to shrewd Jamie himself. The very first patent of all was an exclusive privilege for drawing, engraving, and publishing maps of London, Westminster, Windsor, Bristol, Norwich, Canterbury, Bath, Oxford, and Cambridge. The next was for the privilege of publishing portraits of his Sacred Majesty. The third was for an unexplained group of wonderful inventions; for plowing land without horses or oxen, making barren land fertile, raising water, and constructing boats for swift movement on water. Many of the patents relating to clothing are singular either for their immediate objects or for the language in which they are couched. One patent for breeches, at a date when trousers had not yet come much into use, described a mode of cutting out and making "to do away with all the inconveniences hitherto complained of"—by the aid of elastic springs, morocco elastic supporters, straps, buckles, &c. Another "protects trousers from mud," by means of a shield attached to the hinder part of the boot-heel, which shield receives the splashed mud. Martha Gibbons, early in the present century, patented "a certain new stay for women and others, called the 'Je ne sçais quoi stay,' which may be padded in any part when required for persons to whom nature has not been favorable"—probably a euphuism for "flat figures." George Holland patented a mode of "making false or dummy calves in stockings." A famous modiste has an improvement in ladies' dresses, "rendering the same body capable of adapting itself to fit different figures." For those "who cannot bear a ligature round the leg," a patentee has a garter made of steel springs, connected with a silver plate placed in the waistband of the dress. One patent tells of a machine for brushing trousers; a frame-work supports a spindle which carries a set of concave brushes; a cylinder of wicker or cane is placed inside the trousers to keep them distended; and the spindle is set rotating by an endless band acting on a beveled pulley. From the cradle to the grave, patentees take care of us in some way or other. Even Dolly is attended to. One patent among many tells us that "dolls hitherto made have never been so constructed as to allow of their being placed in a sitting posture, with the legs bending at and hanging down from the knees;" and announces that this important desideratum has now at length been secured. Another inventor "gives a rocking motion to dolls' cradles" by an elaborate array of clock work, eccentric wheel, winch, and connecting-rod. One of the early patentees had "a hydraulike, which, being placed by a bedside, causeth sweete sleepe to those which either by hott feavers or otherwise cannot take rest." A patent medicinal powder, compounded of tobacco and herbs, was so meritorious that "if one tablespoonful be struck for a dose up the nose as snuff, will cure various disorders of the hypochondriac and melancholy kind." Eighty years ago many persons believed in a patented mode of curing numberless aches and pains "by drawing over the parts affected various pointed metals, which from the affinity they have with the offending matters, or for some other cause, extract or draw out the same, and thus cure the patient." One patentee has a thief-proof coffin, in which the corpse is secured by chaining or hooping it to a false bottom; and another a coffin made impregnable by some special application of "tapped and case-harhened screws." If we cut short our budget of curious patents, it is only because space fails us. Two of the Lilywhites, the celebrated cricketers, have at different times patented bowling machines; in one instance for the adoption of machine bowling in actual play; in the other only for practice at batting, when a trained bowler is not at hand. It the reader will imagine something of the catapult or crossbow kind, he may form some idea of these cricketing oddities. One patentee has a balloon for catching fish; a balloon, inflated with air and ballasted with water, is supposed to drag or trawl the fishing lines or nets. Before the Manchester and Liverpool Railway was constructed, a bright genius conceived the idea of using balloons to draw a ship overland between those towns, on a tramway of twenty feet gauge! A balloon has been patented for preventing sea-sickness; a platform, resting on a huge ball and socket, supports the seats for the passengers; the platform is connected by cords with a circle of small balloons, and the balloons are expected to keep the platform always horizontal—of course to the great satisfaction of the passengers. Balloons are also intended, by another patentee, to keep in motion the swings which are such a source of delight at country fairs. One of the very earliest patents was for "a fish-call, very usefull for the fisherman to call all kinde of fishes to their netts, speares, or hookes; and for fowlers to call several kindes of fowles or birds to their nects or snares." In one part the inventor speaks of his fish-call as a "looking-glass"—rather a puzzle to interpret. Acrobats are invited to use a patent shoe soled with iron, which will enable the wearer, with the aid of a powerful electro-magnet, to walk head downward along a metallic ceiling. There are patents for milking cows, for preserving the hands from chapping, and for curing the crous in fowls. Snuff-taking is made easy by "two snuff-boxes, one with a slider and the other with a sweep, out of which snuff may be taken without pulling it (the box!) out of the pocket, and without spilling."—Chambers's Journal.

THE CHESAPEAKE AND SHANNON.—The First Lieutenant of the Alligator bore the name of Smith—not a very uncommon one, perhaps—but, like many others of its gallant bearers, he was distinguished by a sobriquet which he had won in battle, and was popularly known in the Navy. This prefix he obtained by his conduct in the famous action between the Chesapeake and the Shannon in 1813. The circumstances connected with that passage of arms were worthy of the days of chivalry. A short time previously Capt. Broke wrote a very polite and even flattering letter to Capt. Rogers of the Chesapeake, hoping that he would do him the honor to come out of harbor and try his strength with him. The challenge was promptly and courteously accepted, and the Captain of the Chesapeake sailed out of Boston jamid the cheers of his countrymen, who prepared an entertainment in anticipation of his victory. As the two ships came to close quarters, Stevens, the boatswain of the Shannon, who had served under Rodney and Nelson, lashed them together. After some desperate fighting Broke succeeded in gaining the quarter-deck of the enemy with about sixty of his followers. At the same moment William Smith entered the Chesapeake by the fore-yard-arm. The Americans in the rigging fled at his approach on to the deck. One of them, however, he caught by the waistband of his trousers and hove him out of the top. The last who sought to make his escape was a hulking midshipman, with huge boots like those of an English trawler; the foretopmast back-stay had been shot away and trailed on the forecastle. By this rope he slid down, but before he could reach the deck Smith's feet were on his shoulders, and in this fashion they came down together by the run. The first use that Capt. Broke made of his victory was to stay the impetuosity of his men. While so employed three American sailors attacked him from behind. "Broke parried the pike of his first assailant and wounded him in the face. Before he could recover his guard the second foe struck him with a cutlass on the side of the head, and instantly on this the third American drove home his comrade's weapon until a large part of the skull was cloven entirely away and the brain was laid bare." At the moment that Broke sank bleeding on the deck, Smith had reached the enemy's forecastle in the manner already described. He hastened to raise his Captain, followed by the American midshipman, who expected every moment to fall a victim to the fury of his assailants; and such would have been his fate if Broke, the moment before he lost all consciousness, had not touched his collar. So the life of the prisoner was saved, and his English captor promoted to a lieutenancy.—Lord Albemarle's Recollections.

MEDIÆVAL WALL DRAPERIES.—The love of decoration in the mediæval era was intense, and the delight in color. It is noticeable with all semi-civilized people, that long before they attain equal eminence in other points, they arrive at perfection in their knowledge and love of color. This is the case to-day with the Japanese, and this was the case with our ancestors. They early hung upon their walls the best they could; if partly for warmth, for beauty also—that is, they made their warmth beautiful; if it was linen, it was painted in divers tints; and if it was leather, they had it correspondingly variegated; if it was needlework, it was the glory of the East, or that to which all the women of the household dedicated their lives until the day when Arras began to take tribute of the nations; or here it was of damask, woven at first of scarlet and violet, green, yellow, blue, and gray, with the figure thrown up in gold and silver, afterward of the rich crimson that has given its name to the damson plum, and there of the Venice silk, where violet flowers swam upon a silken ground. Sometimes the hangings were used for portières, sometimes to separate the great room into several, always to ornament the wall, and the best ones were not all the time in use. In the few dwellings remaining of this era, although the hangings are utterly gone, portions of the hooks that held them are yet in the wall. In certain rooms, not the loftiest, the hangings swept from top to bottom; in others the benches, with their decorated and daised backs, ran nearly round the room, in which case the hangings were sometimes dispensed with, except for the windows and doorways, and for the strip of stuff depending from the chimney piece, to be swept aside or to pull between the sitter and the blaze according to the degree of heat; in others a wainscot extended some six or eight feet from the floor, then came the hangings, and above the hangings a painted or sculptured frieze, the directions for the painting of these walls above the hangings being often of the most elaborate description. In the last days of the Gothic an ornamental plaster-work supplied the place of this hanging, and intruded upon the cornice. But at a period shortly before that, when not only had windows been enlarged, but filled with glass, and the glass stained, it is difficult to imagine anything too rich and brilliant for the effect of these wall decorations—the panels carved and gilded, the hangings emblazoned with the most rich and delicate coloring, the painted glass carrying on the story in even greater brilliancy. We may be more comfortable to-day; we cannot be so splendid.

"Clothes of gold and arras were hanged in the hall,
Depainted with pyctures and hystoryes many folde,
Well wraughte and craftely with precyous stones
Glyteringe as Phebus and the beten golde."

The hangings and the wall paintings also were usually scenic; the "Mort d'Arthur," historical events, hunting, falconry, and Scripture supplying subjects, the latter always treated as if it were a story of chivalry, and David and Jonathan being armed as knights. The personages whose story was thus wrought were portrayed in gigantic stature, the necessity of size and space being caused by the peculiarity of the tapestry-work, which absorbs light in the interval between the stitches, and does not represent a slant by a direct line, but by a succession of minute angles formed by the stitches. When such sums were paid as each hundred "francs d'or pour un tapis Sarrazinois," two thousand for a chamber of three pieces of tapestry, and about twelve thousand pounds, modern money, for a set of arras, cloth of gold, and baudequin, it may be understood that they were held as great treasures; and we are not surprised that nobles moving from one place to another took their hangings as well as their glass windows with them.—Harper's Magazine.

HUMORS OF A DUBLIN AUDIENCE.—The humors of a Dublin audience, much as I had heard of them before going to Ireland, surprised and diverted me very much. The second night of our acting there, as we were leaving the theatre by the private entrance, we found the carriage surrounded by a crowd eagerly waiting for our coming out. As soon as my father appeared, there was a shout of "Three cheers for Misther Char-les !" then came Dall, and "Three cheers for Mistriss Char-les !" then I, and "Three cheers for Miss Fanny!" "Bedad, she looks well by gas-light!" exclaimed one of my admirers. "Och, and bedad, she looks well by daylight too!" retorted another, though what his opportunity for forming that flattering opinion of the genuineness of my good looks had been, I cannot imagine. What further remarks passed upon us I do not know, as we drove off laughing, and left our friends still vociferously cheering. My father told us one day of his being followed up Sackville street by two beggar-women, between whom the following dialogue passed, evidently with a view to his edification: "Och, but he's an iligant man, is Misther Char-les Kemble!" "An' 'deed, so was his brudher Misther John, thin, a meighty foine man! and to see his demanour, puttin' his hand in his pocket and given' me sixpence, bate all the worrid!" Lord C——, whose tall, lathy figure and prominent teeth were well known to the pauper population of Dublin, having told a tiresome old female beggar, who was pursuing him, to "go along," received the agreeable rejoinder, "Ah! go 'long wid your own self; ye're like an old comb: all back and teath!" When I was acting Lady Townley, in the scene where her husband complains of her late hours and she insolently retorts, "I won't come home till four to-morrow morning," and receives the startling reply with which Lord Townley leaves her, "Then, madam, you shall never come home again," I was apt to stand for a moment aghast at this threat; and one night during this pause of breathless dismay, one of my gallery auditors, thinking, I suppose, that I was wanting in proper spirit not to make some rejoinder, exclaimed, "Now thin, Fanny!" which very nearly upset the gravity produced by my father's impassive exit, both in me and in the audience.—Mrs. Kemble in the Atlantic Monthly.

THE CHURCH OF ENGLAND.—We have now lying before us some files of the Times of the date of 1845. They tell of riotous meetings in London and elsewhere, of excited debates in both Houses of Parliament, of episcopal manifestoes to avert an alarming catastrophe, of leaders in the Times "full of sound and fury." They tell also of a simple question, asked during a lull in the storm by a Bishop who did not lose his head—Henry of Exeter—"What is it all about?" An innocent question enough, it seems now. Yet it forms the text of a fiery leader in the Times, of which the concluding paragraph is as follows: "If both the Bishops stand firm to what they call their convictions, they ought to retire from the bench; and if they are conscientious men they will retire. The Church of England was not made for them, but for the people of England; and the people of England—God, we are sure, blesses them in the effort—will have the sacred service of the Church as their sires and grandsires had it. Should the prelates in question still adhere to their errors, we shall show further reasons for removing them." "The prelates in question" were the late Bishops Phillpotts and Blomfield. And what do our readers suppose was the nature of the fell conspiracy in which the two prelates were engaged against "the sacred service" of the "sires and grandsires?" One of them, at least, appears to have been unaware of it himself, since he asked in his bewilderment, "What is it all about?" The answer reached him speedily in an avalanche of petitions to Parliament and addresses to the Crown—petitions and addresses backed by the press and by peers and members of Parliament—and which had for the burden of their prayer the removal of Charles James Blomfield and Henry Phillpotts from the Episcopal Bench for wickedly conspiring against the religion of the "sires and grandsires." And this conspiracy consisted—risum teneatis, amici—in recommending the use of the surplice in the pulpit, and the reading of the offertory sentences and Church militant prayer after the sermon! Nobody now laughs more heartily at the unreasoning panic of the "sires and grandsires" than the leaders of the evangelical party. Dr. Miller was one of the preachers at the Plymouth Church Congress, and he preached in a surplice. Of course, nobody was offended. If he had preached in a black gown, it is probable that nobody would have been offended either. But he would have been considered odd and eccentricity—so far removed are we from the surplice controversy. It is true, indeed, that echoes of it now and then float faintly on the air, like birds of passage from a distant land. There is the Rock, to wit, still chirping its doleful threnody over the vanished golden age of Tate and Brady and black gown. But nobody dances to its piping. Even Canon Ryle laughs at it. If the Rockites, says Canon Ryle, "mean to take up this ground—that an evangelical clergyman absent from home on a holiday is to refuse to preach in a church where the surplice is worn in the pulpit, the Psalms chanted, and Hymns Ancient and Modern used—I can only say that I totally disagree with them. * * * If I were a hearer, I would far rather listen to a lively, searching, ringing Gospel sermon from a man in a surplice than to a dull, dreary, mumbling, stupid homily from a man in a black gown." These are the words of truth and soberness. But what a comment on the fierce war waged thirty years ago to defend "the sacred service" of our "sires and grandsires."—The Saturday Review.

PHOTOGRAPHED "SPIRITS."—"Spirits," though still refusing to be captured like ordinary mortals, have consented to allow themselves to be photographed. They now obediently follow those over whom they watch to the studios of photographers, and there falling into a graceful attitude, allow those who believe themselves to be accompanied through life by a "guardian angel" to satisfy their vanity (and credulity) by having a carte-de-visite taken of themselves and their "attendant spirit." The resulting carte gives such an air of reality to the affair that it is considered rank folly to doubt any longer, when the spirits can be actually photographed, and thus brought within the ken of the most hardened skeptic. Such piteous folly on one side and arrant deception on the other are more prevalent than ordinary folks generally suppose. A case brought to our notice from Paris will illustrate the way in which this class of photographers impose on the public. The Police, hearing that a certain photographer of that city was pocketing large profits by taking these photographs for credulous people, dispatched an emissary to discover the fraud. On making known his wish to be photographed with his guardian spirit, he was requested to leave the studio for a short time for the purpose of the spirit being invoked. During his absence, a plate, prepared in the ordinary way, was exposed to light for a few seconds opposite a screen whereon a vague ghostly image was figured. The man's photograph superposed—gave, it is needless to say, the required effect. The photograper, on a hint from the Police, ceased to take spirit photographs. These photographs may also be produced by the photographer's common process of printing from two negatives; one negative takes the sitter, the other the "spirit" as before; on printing from both the effects are combined. Another method depends upon a curious electrical fact. If a tinfoil device be laid between two sheets of glass, and tinfoil be laid on the outer surfaces of the glass, and then electric sparks passed between the tinfoil coatings, it is found that an image of the device is formed upon the two glass plates, caused by a molecular change in the glass. This image is at first invisible, but on breathing on the glass it becomes visible, and a photograph can then be taken of it in the ordinary way. But the cleverest plan of all is that which utilizes the lately-discovered optical principle known as fluorescence. Paint on a white screen with sulphate of quinine (which is colorless) something shadowy to represent the "ethereal being." Expose this to bright sunlight for a short time, and then place your unsuspecting believer in "guardian angels" before this screen; photograph him in the ordinary way, and at the same time you obtain a picture of your painting, about which he is ignorant. Finish the photograph in the ordinary way. The quinine drawing will "come out" hazy and indistinct as part of the picture, and then your believer in spirits who has longed to have his "attendant spirit" manifested to him, receives it tremblingly with gratitude.—Chambers's Journal.

NATURAL FEROCITY OF THE PHEASANT.—I had noticed two pheasants pecking at one another most persistently, and took care not to lose sight of them, while noticing other matters of interest. At the end of half an hour, several missing feathers on each side, and their bills stained with blood, showed increasing earnestness in the combatants, which were now fighting in the paths and thickets. The keeper, finding that I was paying very little attention to the information he was trying to give me, and seeing me still watching these two birds, told me that I might follow them for a long time without seeing the end of the combat, for these fights would often be kept up for an hour, and even then his intervention would be necessary to prevent the antagonists from killing each other.

"I think," he said, "that our golden pheasants would be more interesting."

"Let us go and see them, then," I replied.

But I could not resist looking round again after the warlike couple, who were now, however, out of sight.

Before entering the buildings where the finest specimens are reared and kept, I said to my guide:

"Do you think we shall be able to find those two again when we come out?"

"You are interested in that couple, Sir," replied the man; "certainly, we can find them again, unless—but we will see."

He looked toward the spot where I had last seen the combatants, and I was astonished to see him jump quickly over a hedge.

"Let us run, Sir," he said; "perhaps it is too late."

I followed him eagerly, hoping to find an explanation of his unfinished remark.

We soon discovered one of the duelists, just expiring, while six of his companions were picking at him viciously, each apparently trying to excel the others in cruelty.

The keeper then told me that he had been drawn to the spot by seeing the other pheasants collecting, as in these cases, unless he interfered, the fight might probably become general, the duel turning into what our Irish friends term a "shaloo," only with far more serious consequences, as in such a case the ranks would be terribly thinned.—Once a Week.

LIONIZING IN LONDON.—The good people of England are notorious for their love of what is frequently called a "lion"—while their attachment lasts it is always at fever heat. At one time a Shah is the lion, at another it is the Claimant. In the month of June, 1814, there was a whole menagerie of this description of animals in the persons of the allied sovereigns and their most distinguished Generals. They had come over to pay a visit to that ally whose powerful co-operation had enabled them to hurl from the throne the mightiest tyrant with which the world has been afflicted in modern times. I formed one of the crowd that assembled on Westminster Bridge to witness the arrival of Field Marshal Von Blucher, or "Blucher," as the Londoners used to call him. We had been waiting a good hour and a half, when we heard loud cheering from the Surrey side, intermingled with cries of "Blucher for ever." The object of this ovation turned out to be a fat, greasy butcher, mounted on a sorry nag, and carrying a meat tray on his shoulder. Shortly afterward Marshal "Forwards" appeared in a barouche drawn by four horses, which from the density of the crowd were obliged to go at a foot's pace. We gave him a most enthusiastic reception, and he returned our greetings by holding out his hand to be shaken by the men and kissed by the women. The next great object of attraction was Count Platoff, General of Cossacks. Our idea of the troops of which he had command was derived from the prints of them in the shop windows—men of colossal forms, with red lank hair, high cheek bones, and snub noses. My mother took me with her to Covent Garden, not so much to see the performances as to have a sight of the renowned Hetman. We were in the Duke of Bedford's box, which was next to the Prince Regent's, and, forming an obtuse angle with it, we could see without being seen. There was Count Platoff, sipping his coffee, but instead of a semi-barbarous giant, I beheld a little narrow-chested man, with regular features, an olive complexion, black hair, eyes, and mustache, and teeth to match. The Emperor of all the Russias paid a visit one morning to Dean's Yard, and preserved his incognito so well that he was nearly going away without being discovered by us Westminsters. Leaning on his arm was the lovely Grand Duchess of Oldenburg, and it was her big hat that gave us a clue to her Imperial brother. At the time of the arrival of the allied sovereigns, English ladies wore straw bonnets fitting close to the head, somewhat in the shape of a beehive cut in half, but the pretty Grand Duchess had not been with us a week before the "beehive" disappeared, and the "coal-scuttle" usurped its place. I went one night to see Elliston in his best character—Vapid in the "Dramatist." When the curtain dropped Vapid seemed to be so busy making notes for his new play as to be unaware that he was left alone. After trying both stage doors he declared that the "rogues had shut him out," and, advancing to the front, informed the audience that he meant to dramatize them all. He began by addressing some clever verses to the pit and gallery, and then pointed to a very pretty woman sitting in the dress circle and coiffée à la Oidenburg. All eyes followed the direction of his pencil. The lady at first appeared unconscious of being the object of such universal observation, but suddenly arose to escape, when Elliston called out:

"Stop! Madam, stop! you lady in the bonnet,
I'll have you down, you may depend upon it."

The whole affair was of course a preconcerted coup de théâtre.—Lord Albemarle's Recollections.

TROUVILLE.—The Casino, and the plage while bathing is going on, are the two great features of Trouville; and both afford the observer of manners some curious points of interest. In both are to be found, naturally enough, a wide range of character, from respectability pinched into the narrowest sect of Philistinism to the broadest and most full-blossomed Bohemianism—from quiet good breeding and unobtrusive refinement to the loudest vulgarity and showiest finery. They say, indeed, that there are certain fixed characteristics in the visitors according to dates. From the formal opening of the season on the fifteenth of July to the Deauville race week in August the élégantes arrive with their best dresses and their finest airs. During the race week there is a crowd of all sorts—élégantes bent on amusement, and women of business come to see what they can pick up, lionnes and humbler cocottes rubbing shoulders with Princes and turfites, chevaliers d'industrie, and that gilded youth which is burdened with more gold than wit, and anxious to prove for itself how soon it can get rid of its money as it has already got rid of its brains. After the races come the families with the babies and schoolboys; and in September the magistrature and the lawyers. And certainly to those who have gone through the whole of the season the distinctions are plainly marked enough, though there is always that percentage of oddity on the one side, and of Bohemianism on the other, which connects each set with the preceding, and keeps up the character of Trouville for a certain "fastness" which is as much part of its constitution as its bad smells and its filthy streets, its extortionate prices, and its daring architecture. The queerest sights are to be seen during the bathing, if the more serious affairs are transacted at the Casino. The machines are seldom moved from the high ground where they are always ranged; and as the French have no disinclination to bathe at low tide, even on a sandy shore, and as they think nothing of running a couple of hundred yards or more in dripping knickerbockers and clinging maillot, in full view of an assembled multitude, it is easy to understand that one sees droll things at times. Women of middle age, "many-fleshed," and from whom all lightness of step has long since departed, walk to and from the sea in short bathing costumes that barely cover their knees, and make a mere frill round their waists; while fathers of families, obese and bald, display their inches in tight-fitting tricot, and seem rather prond than not of themselves. Pretty women in their prime, and those only just on the wane, are sure to take the cabins which are nearest to the ropes, and, if they can swim, they swim with their heads toward Villerville; the greater part bathe in hats, some in bathing-caps, and but few "in their hair"—the Frenchwoman believing that sea-water hurts the hair and makes it fall. Here and there, on the hotter days may be seen men and women holding up huge red or yellow cotton umbrellas, standing tranquilly, like so many cows in a stream, as far as their waists, without the pretense of swimming or ducking; and others think that they have done all that is required of them by the laws of health if they crouch on the sand and scream when a little wave runs over their legs. But there are also some who swim boldly and fearlessly, and who dive from the boats with that grace and ease which are to be had only by long practice. It is hard to believe that these are Frenchwomen; but it is only fair to say that some among them are. At all times, however, there is much to be seen on the plage which is both strange to English eyes and amusing, if one is not too fastidious to be amused by a certain sans façon which the French suppose that we find "shocking" because they themselves find it "extraordinaire."

DISCOVERIES IN ROME.—A singular chapter in the monumental history of Rome could be written, were the causes, more or less problematical, of the singular dispersion of several classes of monuments studied. It is known, for instance, that the Acta Arvalium, or Annals of the Arval College, were engraved on the base of the temple of the Dea Dia, of which the remains are to be seen still at the Vigna Ceccarelli, five miles from Rome. Yet there is not a spot in the interior of the city, or in the suburbs, which has not yielded fragments of the Acta Arvalium. They have been found in the Catacombs of Callixtus, in those of Generosa, in the Lateran, in the Vatican, in the vineyards that line the road to Fiumicino, and elsewhere. When, in 1870, the pavement of the Basilica of S. Maria in Transtevere, was reconstructed, there was found a fragment of the monumental inscription of the Macellum Liviæ, copied in the eighth century, by the Anonymous of Einsiedeln, near the church of S. Vito on the Esquiliæ. The point has been recalled to my mind by a recent occurrence. In January, 1873, while walking in the Via di Porta S. Lorenzo, where the foundations of a new house were being dug, I picked up the bone handle of a pocket-knife which had belonged to a driver (agitator) of the Circus. Upon one side of the handle were cut with much skill the cap of the driver, whip, and his name, "Eyspreps;" on the other side, the head of the successful horse and his name, "Nereo," and a palm branch, the emblem of victory. How this knife came there, almost on the surface of the ground, in a place remote from every habitation, nobody could explain. But the other day there was found in another quarter of the city another knife-handle, exactly similar to the first, and adorned in the very same fashion. Only the name of the horse is changed, and instead of Nereus we have "Eymele." Little did the humble driver dream that, seventeen hundred years after his death, (the paleography is that of the second century,) the scientific world would be occupying itself with his name and exploits, and the names of his favorite horses.—The Athenæum.

AMATEUR HORSE JOCKEYS.—Time hung somewhat heavily on the hands of us officers in the Aeren Cantonment; a swim across the Dender, or a stroll into Grammont, where we made acquaintances with the Twenty-third, Fifty-first, and Fifty-second Regiments, formed our principal recreations. Our men were more agreeably and usefully employed; they were quite at home with the "peasants," upon whom they were billeted, and clubbed their rations of bread, meat, and schnapps with the vegetables, cheese, butter, and beer of their hosts. Whenever not on duty they were to be seen assisting the Boers and Boerrinen in their various labors. Before they left the cantonment they had weeded the flax and the corn, and the potato crop of that year was entirely of their planting. Races on a grand scale came off at Grammont on the 13th of June. There was a strong muster of men of all ranks and of all arms. On that day I completed my sixteenth year, and passed my birthday very pleasantly with some "old Westminsters." Everybody seemed determined to make the most of his holiday. Perhaps the pleasure of the assembled thousands would not have been without alloy if they had known that within two days' march of us there lay concealed behind the low hills of Avesnes a hostile army, 122,000 strong, commanded in person by the greatest Captain of the age. I was standing close to Lord Uxbridge, when a cheer from the neighborhood of the judges' stand announced the winner of a sweepstakes. I thought I had hardly ever seen so handsome a lad. He was beaming with health and spirits as he took his place in the scales in his gay jockey dress. It was Lord Hay, an ensign in the First Regiment of Guards, and aide de camp to General P. Maitland. The races were on a Tuesday; on the Friday young Hay was killed at Quatre Bras, and the following Sunday the gallant veteran by my side left a leg on the field of Waterloo.—Lord Albemarle's Recollections.

AFFAIRS IN ENGLAND.

MISCELLANEOUS NOTES FROM LONDON.

THE EFFECTS OF THE WAR ON THE STOCK EXCHANGE—WILD STATEMENTS MADE BY SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS—LIFE OF THE PRINCE CONSORT—THE SOVEREIGNTY AND PARLIAMENT—PERSONAL REMINISCENCES—THE IRISH VICE-ROYALTY.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Oct. 14, 1876.

The Stock Exchange people are just now in a very deplorable state of mind. Rumors of the most alarming and contradictory kind are constantly coming from abroad, and it is impossible to know what to believe. The English newspaper correspondents have, from the first, been in an utterly false position, having been able to see little of the military movements for themselves, and being dependent on the information supplied by the authorities on either side, which, of course, was merely what it suited their respective interests to say at the moment. During the Franco-German war, there was an organization, on each side, which kept the combatants well supplied with information, and though, no doubt, they were not very communicative to the newspaper folk, still the latter were kept supplied with a certain amount of facts, which formed a substantial basis for current history. In the present instance, however, the correspondents, most of whom are entirely ignorant of the languages of the various races among whom they find themselves, have been hopelessly at sea, and their letters and telegrams worthless. All they could do was to take up one side or the other, and reflect the vague and violent emotions of the people about them. The wild statements and hallucinations prevailing on both sides have, accordingly, led to much bad blood on the part of the newspaper emissaries, and even to a duel between two of the more frenzied ones, in which, however, no harm was done. People here who have interests which are affected by the fluctuating state of affairs abroad are thus left destitute of anything like trustworthy information. They are fed with rumors, which are constantly being disputed or confuted, and have been thrown into that bewildered state of mind in which they believe or disbelieve in an equally wild way, and jump at all sorts of absurd conclusions. One day they hear that the Czar has decided to abdicate, and that Young Russia, with all its bellicose projects, is to be in the ascendant under the new monarch. Another time it is that Russia and Germany have arranged a grand scheme of common aggrandizement, which the other powers will be helpless to resist; or another time there is a report of a rising being got up among the Turks for a war to the death against all classes of Christians. It is difficult to understand how sedate and cautious men of business should give any attention to such extravagant stories, instead of simply suspending their judgment till some real information is to be had. But so it is, and the consequence is the most absurd freaks—now of abject panic, and now of equally absurd hopefulness, on the part of the speculative world. As regards the political aspect of affairs, public opinion in this country seems now to have settled down for the present to the conviction that whatever may be thought of the action of the Ministry, they have extraordinary difficulties to contend with, and deserve consideration and indulgence.

A great deal has been said about the dispatch of the British squadron to Besika Bay, but its great doings have only just been heard of. It has been engaged, it seems, in a war of extermination on at least one portion of the native races. We read: "The officers of the fleet are very zealous at present in the pursuit of red-legged partridges, and have almost exterminated them within a radius of ten miles. A few snipe only remain in the middle of the deepest marshes."

HURRICANES AT SEA.

THE STEAM-SHIP CITY OF MEXICO IN A STORM—THE STEAM-SHIP SPOTTSVILLE PICKED UP AT SEA—DAMAGE TO THE BARK ASHANTEE.

The steam-ship City of Mexico, of the New-York, Havana, and Mexican Mail Steam-ship Line, Capt. W. B. Sherwood commanding, which arrived at this port at 8 o'clock on Thursday morning last, encountered one of the most terrific hurricanes ever experienced in sea voyages. The vessel left New-Orleans Oct. 1 for New-York, via Tampico, Tuxpan, Vera Cruz, Campeachy, Progreso, and Havana, and had fair weather until she reached Progreso, in Yucatan. This latter port she left at 5:15 P. M. on Sunday, Oct. 15, the wind at the time blowing fresh from the north-west. She had on board a cargo consisting of 1,603 bales of hemp and a large amount of general merchandise, including a lot of hides, sugar, &c. She also carried $300,000 in specie, and had fifteen passengers on board, among whom were six ladies and one child, a little girl, eight or nine years of age. About 10 o'clock the same evening, after leaving Progreso, the wind increased in violence, and the following day (Monday) it became a gale, which continued for forty-eight hours, from the north-west. The vessel, during this time, shipped a large amount of water, but behaved well. About 4 o'clock, on the afternoon of Wednesday, the 18th inst., the gale changed to a hurricane, and then it was that the terrific part of the voyage began. The rain fell in torrents, the ship rolled heavily, and the noise made by the war of the sea and wind was frightful. Capt. Sherwood, who has been at sea twenty-eight years, and has passed through many storms, says it was the most terrific hurricane he ever encountered. The state-rooms, Captain's room, the saloon, and engine and boiler rooms were flooded with water, the doors of the rooms on the main deck were broken in, and the glass in the skylights was smashed. On Thursday morning, Oct. 19, Capt. Sherwood gave orders to have the hemp portion of the cargo thrown overboard, and 1,603 bales of hemp were thrown into the sea. This lightened the ship considerably, and in the afternoon of that day, about 4 o'clock, the storm abated in violence, the hurricane having lasted twenty-three hours and the previous gale forty-eight hours. During the hurricane the vessel was kept headed with the wind, and no observations could be taken, but on Thursday evening the course was directed toward Havana, which port was reached on Friday afternoon, Oct. 20, the vessel coming to anchor at 3 P. M. No damage was done except the flooding of the rooms, the breaking in of doors and windows, and the throwing overboard of 130 bales of hemp.

On the voyage from Havana to New-York, and when off Cape Hatteras, the bark of Lerice picked up the steam-ship Spottsville, bound from Galveston to Providence, R. I., which had been disabled by the loss of her propeller, and towed her to the Delaware Breakwater.

The bark Ashantee, Capt. Roberts in command, arrived at this port from Belfast on Friday last, after a very stormy passage of 53 days. She encountered a violent hurricane on the 19th of September, from the west north-west, which continued for six hours unabated. During the entire voyage heavy westerly winds were experienced, and the vessel lost and split her sails.

THE MURDERER OF MAGGIE BAUER.

Frank McConochie, the murderer of little Maggie Bauer, is the son of John McConochie, who keeps a small shoe store in Gates avenue, near Nostrand, Brooklyn. The father is Scotch, the mother English, and Frank was born in this country. He has two brothers and five sisters, one of the brothers being a physician, and one of the sisters being married to a practical chemist. Frank admits that his father once sent him to the Penitentiary for vagrancy, where he served a term of six months. When fifteen years old he was sent to the House of Refuge, and, according to his own statements, he has ever since lived the life of a vagrant. One of his sisters is the only relative who would hold any communication with him, and he occasionally visited her house. For the purpose of fixing the crime and its method more definitely, Detective Payne on Friday afternoon again conveyed McConochie to the scene of the murder, where he was met by District Attorney Downing and one or two other gentlemen. On the way out McConochie exhibited much nervousness, and every few minutes begged that no violence should be committed against him, being apparently afraid that he would be either shot or hung in the woods. He freely admitted having killed Maggie, and said he was willing to be punished for it, but thought he would not be hung, as no one saw him do it. He said he did not intend to bring up the river—that is, to Sing Sing—and would "tell God's truth" if they would not hang him in the woods or at the court-house. He seemed to have a particular horror of hanging. When near the Bauer place he became still more nervous, but pointed out the different places where he had stopped previous to the murder. Mr. Bauer did not appear to be much agitated at the sight of the murderer of his child, but the mother could hardly repress her feelings. On going into the woods all persons, excepting the District Attorney's party, were kept back as a precaution against any chance of violence, and when McConochie found that he was not likely to be injured he became more calm. He then pointed out the spot where he seized Maggie, struck her down, sprang out of the corn-field upon her; how he grappled her by the throat and walked her through the corn-field to the cedar bushes, and how he strangled her. He also showed the tree and the limb that he had broken down to mark the spot, so that he could return after dark and more effectually secrete the body. He also admitted that he took little Maggie's two-cent piece with a hole in it which Kate Hoffman testified to having given to her when she parted from her at Hammond's farm. The wounds which the doctors were in doubt about were made with his hands, and he strangled her to prevent her telling about it—remaining with her until he was sure she was dead. He was so circumstantial in his narrative that, at the request of Detective Payne, he folded a leaf and showed how he crammed it into the mouth under the tongue. The District Attorney now being satisfied with the expedition, McConochie was returned to his cell at the Jamaica Town Hall, and will have his formal examination to-morrow.

A RIVER THIEF SHOT.

The old Cardiff Dock adjoining the Public Dock on Morgan street, Jersey City, is now the property of the Pennsylvania Railroad, and the boats on which the freight cars are taken over the river lie there. Friday night, Alexander Perry, the night watchman, was startled by seeing three stalwart men climb to the deck of one of the barges. When he called on them to surrender they answered with a pistol shot. The officer leveled his weapon and fired back, and one of the men, crying "I'm killed," fell to the deck. His confederates made a dash at the watchman and he ran. The men fired two three times at him, and he returned the fire while retreating, and finally, finding himself closely pressed, sounded the call whistle for assistance. Officer Zacharias promptly responded, and the river pirates fled toward the river. The officers pursued them, shooting at them occasionally, but apparently without effect. On reaching the float they looked up in the body of their prostrate companion, lowered it into the boat and followed it themselves. They rowed out into the river and escaped. It is believed that the shot, which prostrated one of the pirates, was fatal.

A POLICE OFFICER FIRED UPON.

At 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning, Patrolman McCormack, of the Sixteenth Precinct, while on duty, discovered that the liquor store of Peter McConnell, No. 269 Tenth avenue, had been entered and robbed by burglars. While he was examining the premises five young men emerged from the hallway adjoining the liquor store and ran off. The officer followed in pursuit, sounding his baton on the sidewalk as he ran. The thieves turned into Twenty-sixth street, and were met by Patrolman Conners, also of the Sixteenth Precinct, who had been attracted by the sound of his comrade's club. Conners endeavored to head off the fugitives, when one of the gang, whom he recognized as "Dutch Hen," a notorious thief and loafer, drew a revolver and fired two shots at him in rapid succession. The first shot missed its mark, and the second bullet struck the officer's belt and, passing through the leather, lodged in the inner lining of his heavy overcoat. All the thieves succeeded in making their escape. A general alarm was sent from the Sixteenth Precinct, asking for the arrest of "Dutch Hen."

DISAPPEARANCE OF A SPIRITUALIST.

George W. Young, the Secretary and Treasurer of the Brooklyn Society of Spiritualists, disappeared from his home and from Brooklyn, N. Y., about three weeks ago, since which time all efforts of his friends to ascertain his whereabouts have proved unavailing. Mr. Charles R. Miller, the President of the Society, said yesterday that investigation into the financial affairs of the Society, since Young's departure, had revealed the fact that they were in a very bad condition. It is also said that other parties having claims against Young are anxiously awaiting his return.

A COMPLIMENT TO LENOX W. LYON.

A party of personal friends of Assistant District Attorney George W. Lyon gave him, last night, a dinner at Delmonico's, preparatory to that gentleman's marriage, which is to come off next week. The company comprised only twenty guests: J. L. Flint, G. W. Lyon, H. C. Ward, D. W. C. Wheeler, G. St. J. Sheffield, G. G. DeWitt, Jr., Joel B. Erhardt, E. E. Fiihs, Edw. Einstein, F. B. Howell, Elihu Root, J. I. Davenport, J. Bell, H. Russell, D. Millaken, Jr., J. H. Bailey, J. O. Morse, Jr., D. G. Rollins, J. D. Lyon, and B. K. Phelps. The nature of the entertainment was of the most jovial, the speeches most felicitous, and the dinner as fine as Delmonico could provide.

MARKSMANSHIP AT CREEDMOOR.

FOUR MATCHES CONTESTED—SHOOTING FOR A PURSE OF GOLD AT LONG RANGE.

The range at Creedmoor presented a livelier appearance yesterday than it has at any time since the Fall prize-meeting, although the weather was of the most disagreeable character. During the early part of the day a heavy snow-storm prevailed, which formed a veil through which the marksmen fired. This was succeeded by a cold, drizzling rain, which lasted the remainder of the day. There were four matches contested—one at long range and the others at mid-range and shorter distances. The long-range match was the first competition, for a prize of $250 in gold, given by the Sharp Rifle Company. The other contests were for military guns, and comprised the fifth competition for the "marksman's" badge, the contest for the second prize in the Inter-State match, and the match for the "Nevada" silver badge. There were seventeen entries in the long-range match. The conditions and scores were as follows:

Open to all comers; any rifles; distances, 800, 900, and 1,000 yards; fifteen shots at each distance; no sighting shots or previous practice allowed on the day of the match, and no "coaching" allowed; the winner to lead all competitors at each distance. In addition to the chief prize offered, one-quarter of the entrance fees to go to the marksman making the highest score, unless he wins the badge, when the maker of the next highest score will be declared the winner.

	800 Yards.	900 Yards.	1,000 Yards.	Total.
C. E. Blydenburgh	65	65	68	198
E. H. Sanford	66	69	63	198
Major H. S. Jewell	64	68	63	195
L. Weber	66	67	62	195
A. V. Canfield, Jr.	72	66	55	193
H. A. Gliensleeve	57	65	63	185
William Hayes	66	66	52	184
C. E. Overbaugh	64	61	55	180
H. G. Baldwin	62	61	55	178
G. L. Morse	52	62	40	154

The heavy weather proved too much for seven of the competitors, who withdrew at the shorter ranges. As no one complied with the conditions by leading the scores at each of the several distances, the prize still remains in the possession of the National Rifle Association, and Mr. Blydenburgh received one-quarter of the entrance fees. The contest for the "Marksman's" badge commenced at 3 P. M. There were eighteen entries, the conditions and scores being as follows:

Open to all comers; distances, 200 and 500 yards; weapons, Remington rifles, State model:

J. L. Price	41	J. R. Willard	28
James Harrison	40	W. Robertson	28
George Waterman	40	C. H. Eagle	26
A. B. Van Heusen	37	J. W. Gardner	25
D. Chauncey, Jr.	36	E. W. Price	23
G. D. Scott	35	W. H. Cocrane, Jr.	20
N. D. Wood	35	H. M. Burdett	19
J. A Gee	33	G. H. Poole	12
L. Cass	32

In the match for the second prize in the Inter-State contest, which was won at the Fall prize-meeting by the team representing this State, and was contested by the individual members of that team yesterday, the trophy was won by Capt. J. L. Price, of the Seventh Regiment, upon the score of 85, out of a possible 100 points. The conditions were ten shots each at 200 and 500 yards distance.

The contest for the "Nevada" badge was not completed until a late hour. The companies contesting were Company A, Seventh Regiment, Capt. Casey, and Company A, Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, Capt. Story. Company A, Forty-eighth Regiment, shot for the trophy on Friday last, making the following score:

L. Miller	43	D. C. Hall	27
R. G. Post	40	A. Fleming	25
F. O. Wright	38	F. Walker	23
L. L. Barnes	38	H. Owlell	23
George White	38	W. Channey	22
I. S. Barton	35	J. McCann	21
A. Carpenter	35	H. A. Sandford	20
J. C. Harding	34	A. Harness	20
J. E. Slaight	33	D. Marshall	20
C. A. Barton	33	J. W. Rowland	19
M. L. Marshall	32	W. Harper	18
A. Cropsey	32	F. Baker	17
H. J. Calkin	32	A. Paice	17

F. Bartraud	28	Lewis Woolson	9
R. T. O'Neal	27	B. F. Peckham	13
T. W. Goodsell	27	W. R. Thompson	6
J. Moffit	27
J. P. Hall	27	Total	1,169
A. J. Booker	27

Company D, Seventy-first Regiment, Capt. W. C. Clark, commanding, will shoot for this trophy to-morrow, after which the result of the match will be duly announced.

THE CHIEF OF THE SECRET SERVICE.

Mr. James J. Brooks, who succeeds Elmer Washburn as Chief of the Secret Service of the Treasury, was for more than ten years attached to the internal revenue service as a detective officer, working in various parts of the country, but more especially in Philadelphia. It was in this latter city that he rendered himself so obnoxious to the Whisky Ring in his persistent pursuit of its members as to incur their vengeance in the shape of a personal assault. He was shot while overhauling the books and accounts of certain illicit whisky dealers, and was so severely injured that his life was despaired of for many weeks. Upon his recovery he succeeded in detecting his assailants and sending them to the Penitentiary. He also wrote a book containing his experiences as an internal revenue detective, and which was published under the title of Whisky Drops. He was afterward transferred to the secret service of the Treasury, occupying a subordinate place at first, but for more than a year past has held the position as assistant chief of that service. He is said to be a general favorite with his subordinates and an officer of ability and integrity.

ATTACHMENT AGAINST ORVILLE GRANT.

An application was made yesterday to Judge Barrett, holding Supreme Court, Chambers, for an attachment against the property in this State of Orville L. Grant, brother of President Grant, on behalf of Elisha L. Cole and David Wood. The plaintiffs, in their affidavits, set forth that they are the holders of two promissory notes for $450 each, made by the defendant, Grant, in July last, at sixty and ninety days respectively, one of which has already been protested, and that he is indebted to them in the sum of $901 in all. It is further alleged that he is not a resident of this State, but resides in Elizabeth, N. J., and that he is possessed of property in this State, consisting of shares in the Eaton Gold and Silver Refining Company. Upon these affidavits Judge Barrett granted the attachment.

BIDS FOR CITY STOCK.

The following is a list of proposals received by Controller Green yesterday for $1,497,500 five per cent. bonds of the City of New-York:

Name.	Amount.	Rate.
Nicholas Cantor	$6,000	100.25
Isabel M. Heiser	600	100.25
F. D. Tappen	110,000	100.21
George K. Sistare, Jr.	367,500	100.10
George K. Sistare, Jr.	400,000	100.09
George K. Sistare, Jr.	300,000	100.08
George K. Sistare, Jr.	200,000	100.07
George K. Sistare, Jr.	230,000	100.06
S. A. Lawrence	2,000	100.05
M. R. Walsh	1,500	100.05
M. Reuben Merchant	1,267,500	100.00
M. Reuben Merchant	230,000	100.00
Louisa M. Van Buren	10,000	100.00
E. C. Forces	2,500	100.00
Total amount of bids	$3,127,600

The award of the stock has been made to the above parties at rates from 100.06 to 100.25.

CRIMINALS SENTENCED.

In the Essex County Court of Sessions, Newark, Jersey, yesterday, at Newark, sentence was pronounced in a number of cases which have excited public attention. Dr. Frederick Kordenat, charged with having produced an abortion upon a ten-year old girl, was fined $100 and costs. License Inspector Bavier, convicted of having altered names in licenses and sold them to persons for whom they were not intended, was sent to the State Prison for two years. John Dunn, a striking workman, who assaulted a laborer who had taken his place in Bannister & Tichenor's factory, was sent to Jail for a month and fined $25. Miles J. Harrington, convicted of having thrown oil upon the dresses of ladies passing through the streets, was sentenced to five months' imprisonment in the County Penitentiary.

CONDEMNATION OF A DISTILLERY.

In the United States Court at Trenton, N. J., yesterday, the case involving the condemnation and forfeiture of a distillery on the Hudson, opposite Yonkers, for being engaged in illicit distillation was disposed of. There was no question as to the liability of the personal property to forfeiture, but it was insisted that the real estate, which belonged to William H. McNeil, of New-York, ought not to be forfeited, for the reason that it was used as a distillery without the knowledge of Mr. McNeil. The jury brought in a verdict condemning both the real and personal property.

TAX-PAYERS PROTECTING THEMSELVES.

The New-Brighton Village Trustees, at their meeting Friday night, expected to issue village bonds to the extent of several thousand dollars, in accordance with a resolution previously adopted and in anticipation of the next year's tax collections, despite the formal protest of many tax-payers that such bonds would be illegal and void. A hastily-organized tax-payers' association presented itself at yesterday's meeting and requested to be heard in opposition, through Mr. S. F. Rawson, their counsel, but all, save Mr. R. B. Whittemore, President of the board, flatly refused to hear them. This effort at moral suasion having failed, the board was served at once with an injunction, issued by Judge Gilbert, at the suit of Mr. J. W. Simonton, acting for the tax-payers, enjoining the board from issuing any evidences of indebtedness or from contracting any obligation in excess of revenue actually on hand or already due and collectible. The Tax-payers' Association, composed of men of means, character, and pluck, declares its determination to break up the petty village Ring if there is law enough in the State to effect its purpose. It is due to Mr. Whittemore to say that he has resolutely fought all the schemes that have been presented to the board.

PARADE OF THE COACHING CLUB.

THE SEMI-ANNUAL "TURNOUT"—SIX COACHES IN THE PROCESSION—A WET AND DISAGREEABLE DAY.

The New-York Coaching Club had its semi-annual parade yesterday afternoon, leaving Madison square at 3 o'clock, and returning at 4:20 o'clock having meanwhile driven through Central Park. Six coaches participated in the parade, each having its full complement of passengers, and there was nothing wanting to make the turnout thoroughly complete. The day was as wet and dreary as an amateur coachman could desire. "It is just the day," said the President of the club, "to show the people our idea of what sport should be. We will show them that when we announce a parade it will surely take place, even if it rained down cats and dogs." The place of rendezvous was the east side of Madison square, and 2:30 o'clock was the time fixed for starting. Four of the coaches were promptly on hand, but Mr. Jerome and Mr. Bennett were tardy—Mr. Jerome was the last to come. The delay was relished exceedingly by the two hundred persons who had congregated to witness the start, for it gave them an opportunity to examine the various turnouts, and to discuss their merits and demerits. The passengers on the coaches, however, were impatient to be off. The men buttoned their coats close up under their chins and ears, and glanced anxiously over their shoulders now and then, in hopes of espying the laggards. The women bore the cold with greater fortitude; principally because they were provided with the snuggest seats and the warmest robes. None of the coaches carried passengers upon the rear seats, the rules of the club providing that these seats should be reserved for the men in livery.

All the coaches having arrived, Col. Jay, President of the club, ordered the customary blast of the coach horn and at once lead off the parade. He drove his regular team of two bay leaders with a chestnut and a brown at the pole. His passengers were Mr. and Mrs. Philip Schuyler, Miss Stevens and Miss Bennington. Following him was Col. Delancey Kane, the accomplished driver of the New-York and New-Rochelle Stage. It was the second holiday which he had taken since the 1st of May, when he opened this route. Upon his left sat Mrs. Kane, who is almost as essential a part of the Pelham coach as her husband. The other passengers were Messrs. Frederick Sherman, John Cadwalader, B. R. Winthrop, and Walter Kane. Col. Kane's turnout was the one most of all admired. The horses were of extraordinary beauty, showing nearly full blood. They were almost alike in size, and just within the rules of English coaching as to height. They traveled perfectly, each horse pulling a taut trace, and showing that he had not been under Col. Kane's training all Summer for nothing. The Colonel himself was in excellent form, well browned by exposure to the weather for six months. He wore his light kersey overcoat, to the button-hole of which was attached a bouquet. The coach, of canary color, looked as fine and bright as when it made its first appearance in front of the Brunswick Hotel. The lettered panels had been displaced by others bearing the family coat-of-arms. Mr. Frederick Bronson came next, driving a handsome team of bays, with which no fault could be found, except a too obvious gradation in size from the pole horses to the leaders. Mr. Bronson's coach was painted blue, with red wheels. It was occupied by Mr. and Mrs. Houlls Hunnewell and Miss Van Rensselaer. After Mr. Bronson came a coach-load of young gentlemen driven by Mr. Frederick Neilson. Leonard Cutting, Ben. Card, and Messrs. Sackett and Johnson made up the load. The coach was dark green in the body, with red wheels. Another "stag" party, consisting of Messrs. Barnard, Van Buren, and Edward Colgate followed upon Mr. Leonard Jerome's coach, which was painted red throughout. Mr. Jerome's team was a cross of iron grays and bays, very stylish but a trifle large. James Gordon Bennett's team of chestnuts, hitched to a dark green coach, striped with red, brought up the rear of the procession, and was greatly admired.

Passing into Fifth avenue, the coaches were soon lost to view among the numerous carriages which thronged that thoroughfare. The sidewalks were crowded with men and women who had gathered to see the parade, and all along the avenue bows were exchanged between the fortunate passengers on the coaches and their envious friends. Col. Jay lead straight to Central Park, entering through the western gate. The unpleasantness of the weather had kept away the majority of the people who had intended to witness the parade in the Park. There were very few carriages along the drives, and the Coaching Club had no intention to delay their return by slow driving. The order in which the coaches started from Madison square was maintained throughout the drive. The rain falling quite heavily as the procession emerged from the Park at the eastern exit, and as a consequence the number of spectators along the avenue was considerably less than during the up-town trip. The coaches were driven directly to Washington square, the objective point being the fountain. About this fountain a grand sweep was taked, and then the coaches drove straight up Fifth avenue, across Twenty-third street, and around Madison square to the side door to the Brunswick Hotel. This concluded the parade, and after chatting together for a few moments the coachmen again took their places in the boxes, and drove away to drop off their loads and stable their teams. Later in the evening the members of the Coaching Club and a few friends met at dinner in the Brunswick Hotel. Some of the members of the club were disappointed at the weather experienced yesterday, and at their suggestion another parade will probably be held sometime in November. The number of coaches at the second parade will be greater than yesterday. Mr. Douglass, who was injured at the Polo grounds a short time ago, promises to be present, and two other gentlemen who were out of town yesterday will also turn out their coaches.

REBEL FEELING IN VIRGINIA.

RICHMOND, Va., Oct. 20, 1876.

Editor of the Daily Times:

Allow me a few lines of space in your widely-circulated paper to reach a few Northern Democrats, that they may vote with a full knowledge of the designs of their Southern allies, if perchance they are successful at the polls in November. On the 6th of the present month a troupe at the theatre, as an introductory performance, sang the national airs of the principal European powers, concluding with the "Star Spangled Banner," at which the curtain was withdrawn, exhibiting the "Goddess of Liberty" wrapped in the Stars and Stripes. Immediately upon the rising of curtain the flag was met with the most vehement storm of hisses you ever heard. This may not seem of itself as of much importance, but if you could have been present and seen the animus of the crowd you could not but have felt that your country was again in danger. Before this occurrence, in the State Convention at which the delegates to the Democratic Convention at St. Louis were elected, ex-Governor Gilbert C. Walker, the Democratic member of Congress, and candidate for re-election, (who by the way is a New-Yorker counting rebel votes,) made a speech in which he said: If we are successful this Fall we will regain by the ballot what we lost by the war." If you, Mr. Editor, could have witnessed the favor with which that declaration was received, you would have seen the danger of trusting the Southern Democracy again. I am well aware how easy it is to deny such statements as I have made, but I hope that the truthful expression of one who has no motive to misstate, and who grieves to know that such things exist, may help to enlighten the honest but deluded Democrats of old Jefferson County. Yours, &c., ALONZO W. WILCOX.

EFFECT OF PULITZER'S SPEECHES.

The speech of Mr. Joseph Pulitzer on Thursday evening last, at College Point, Long Island, is thus characterized by "A Life-long Democrat," who resides there: "If the Democratic Party cannot send a more polite speaker than he, [Mr. Pulitzer,] they had better not send any more. The slang he used was disgusting, and Tilden has lost my vote, besides the votes of thirty or forty other Democrats. The votes are now for Hayes and Wheeler."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

VARIOUS SUBJECTS DISCUSSED.

CAPITAL PUNISHMENT.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

We are upon the eve of the most deeply interesting and important election in the history of the country, with the exception of Lincoln's re-election in 1864, and one fraught with questions of our very existence in the future. I should like, with your permission, to draw the thoughts of the working classes, indeed of all those who in any manner depend for their livelihood upon the employment of capital, to a point which appears to me to have been entirely, or nearly overlooked during the canvass. I allude to the fact that the capitalists of the country, those who have most at stake therein, are mainly of the dominant, the Union, the patriotic party. In other words that, beside representing the feelings of the mass of the North, the Republican Party further represents almost two-thirds of the capital of the nation employed in manufacture, agriculture, or mining enterprises. No one will, I think, require to be told how timid and conservative a thing that same capital is, nor that, in all times of uncertainty, in the presence or possibility of any reactionary movement, like the mercury in the thermometer, which at the approach of the storms and unsettled weather of Winter sinks into itself, but rises as the Summer nears and the earth begins to produce again, it is withdrawn to great extent from operation, and locked up until the times become more settled and business rests upon some firm and stable basis. Lack of confidence in the present and the future is an unvarying attendant of an unsettled state of affairs, and deprivation and suffering are entailed upon those least ready to meet it—those whose earnings are out little more than enough to pay their way from day to day. To no one is the blessing of a settled state of things so much of a necessity as to the working man. At election time he may be confused by misrepresentations, misled by promises, dazed by pyrotechnic displays, and flattered into the sacrifice of his independence, (I speak of the honest workman, not of the purchased loafer,) but, after his vote is cast, he finds himself contemptuously thrust aside, ignored, and despised for his bluntness, and, having misdirected his suffrage, like one of his own tools, which in the hands of a skillful craftsman produces articles of use or ornament, but which may in turn be used to work demolition, or death. In proportion to his means and position he is the chief sufferer. The man or a hundred thousand dollars does not feel the loss of ten thousand, as he who possesses one hundred feels that of ten dollars. I wish therefore, to call their attention and every one's attention, to the inevitable result that Mr. Tilden's election would bring, at least for a considerable period, a Pandora's-box full of woes upon our people. In that it would not only cause a continuance of all the present state of prostration, but would enhance that condition three-fold. I appeal to any man, would you not, if in possession of large means, keep your money and your investments back until you were definitely certain that the efforts of the past were not to be undone, that the "solid South," already a hackneyed phrase, but unfortunately a true one, was not to be rewarded in proportion to its services to the party; that is, three to one, in claims, bills, appointments, representations? I think a very large majority of capitalists would and will do so in such case, and yet the minority be sincere in their confidence and trust in their party. If we even admit that Mr. Tilden be perfectly unselfish, independent, and patriotic, could he stem such a tidal wave of Southern demands from those to whom, if elected, he would entirely owe such election; and stand by those whose most earnest prayer and work is for his defeat and disaster? It seems neither reasonable nor possible that he should. Andrew Jackson might have been able, in the period when he said he regretted not having had Calhoun hanged, but the overwhelming and united numbers of to-day would certainly have borne even him down. The writer had curious indication of the feelings of thoughtful capital and thoughtful labor recently, when, within twenty-four hours of each other, a man of wealth, after request, came to vote and handed me votes for the Republican Electoral and Congressional tickets, considering the State and city tickets not important, except as to obtaining honest men, led me to infer that he intended, should Mr. Tilden be elected, at once to withdraw, or contract his investments in manufacture and property, as far possible, until he saw the result. On the other hand, a very respectable and thoughtful working man, who said he had never, in his life of forty years, voted for a single Republican candidate, told me he considered it a duty to his family to make an exception in the case of Hayes and Wheeler, voting the rest of his ticket for the Democratic nominees. He gave reasons identical with the above, that if Mr. Tilden were elected it would result in the withdrawal and locking up of capital, which was mostly in the hands of Republicans, to the misfortune and great detriment of his class.

The uncertainty of the financial policy of the Democratic Party, radically divided as it is upon this question, cannot fail to affect the sale of our securities abroad, if their candidate should be elected. Mr. Belmont in a letter in this regard, supported by the Herald, says: "The safety and wisdom of investment in the funded debt of the United States do not depend upon the Presidential elections any more than the soundness of the English consols depends on whether the Ministry is Tory or Liberal." This is a very weak reasoning for a gentleman of Mr. Belmont's intelligence, and leads one to think he has deliberately adopted what he knew to be a very superficial comparison. It is not a parallel case in any wise. There is no difference at all on the finances in England; both parties agree fully and completely in carrying out the agreements of the previous Ministry, and it naturally follows that a change does not affect the value of the consols, the same undeviating principles being maintained—those of a nation united on this question. Moreover, it does not require any national repudiation to lower the value of our bonds abroad and impede their negotiation. Any great increase of our public debt, by payment of the Southern claims, increased issue of greenbacks, as demanded by such a powerful section of the party, any reactionary policy, calculated to create disturbance in the country and undue elation in the South, which will not fail to cause oppression to the white and black Republicans and result in stirring up the North. All these things conspire together to cause doubt and distrust among capitalists, both here and abroad, and Mr. Belmont has ignored the chief issues by merely asserting that his party will not actually repudiate the debt—one caused by those who are to-day "solid" for that party's candidates.

Here we stand, then, to-day, the North and the South, in the arena of the world, like the gladiators of Rome in the Coliseum—the North the Secutor, armed with the sword of Union and the shield of resumption; the South, the Retiarius with the entangling financial net and broken trident of secession. What will be the result?

NEW-YORK, Tuesday, Oct. 24, 1876.

THE DEMOCRATS AND THE GRAND ARMY.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The article in the columns of the World, in its edition of the 20th, into which is dragged a number of letters and circulars from members and officers of the Grand Army who are conscientiously standing by the well-established non-partisan principles of their order, is an unwarranted political dodge—from information possibly gleaned from sources where it should have been sacredly and confidentially kept—to throw the entire organization of the Republican soldiery into discredit as ardent supporters of the cause by which alone their successes in the field can be maintained.

The Grand Army has its special mission—fraternity, charity, and loyalty—its ranks are composed of all creeds of political and religious faith; its principles and teachings are broad enough and wide enough to permit its associates to follow whatever political or religious faith they may see fit to pursue outside of its own order. It hampers them not by its prescribed regulations as to their choice between Democracy and Republicanism, Protestantism and Catholicism; they may be Israelite or Gentile. It inculcates, however, severely the principle of loyalty to the flag and country, and with that as a corner-stone of political belief it feels assured that none will be of its ranks who do not hold sacred every star, stripe, and fold of its ensign, and alike sacred the indivisible governmental unity of its every hill-side, mountain, valley, and stream, with no boundary but its oceans, its lakes, the St. Lawrence, and the Gulf. It recognizes alone the soldiers of the over-loyal States. Rebeldom and Confederacy have no foothold there. Non-partisan as it is, composed thus only of the loyal soldiers, it is but reasonably natural that much of its material should be Republican, and that much purposes that its Republicanism should be known and felt—if within their power to make it so—but, however, by parading it as an institution as such, but by doing as they unpremedly please as citizens.

Proportionately well filled as the volunteer Army was in 1861, with those of both parties, the sad ordeal of battle made sad havoc with the Democracy, and of what returned still stay believing now are preeminently identified with the party for vote with it, and most of those who still cling to its misguided principles do so from ancestral intuition, and not from personal convictions. The Grand Army people therefore propose to still exist as such, standing by our own long-established fundamental, non-political law; but we do say, and the New-York World and all other maligning sheets ought to know, that while with it and of it we intend to stand by our Republican faith, and that it and the institution shall and will survive, the first by our election of our candidates in November, and the second so long as the last man of the old Volunteer Army shall exist. COMMANDER.

PRACTICAL ADVICE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

It is useless—indeed, it is mischievous to disguise the fact that the coming election is to be a close one. In view of that fact, it becomes the duty of every true Republican to look about him, and to see if there is not among his acquaintances at least one Democrat, or doubtful, wavering person whom he can influence to cast his vote on the side of right. There are few who cannot influence one vote, and if every Republican who reads these lines will only make the resolve to do so, the election in this State will be secured. There are a large number of Democrats who have never heard the truth fairly and dispassionately stated. They never attended Republican meetings, and never read Republican newspapers. Their reading and hearing has all been one-sided, and it is only necessary for them to hear the truth for them to adopt it. In stating it, let me advise my Republican friends not to get angry themselves nor to make their opponents angry. Let their object be to convince by facts and facts only. Use no untruthful arguments, and admit the truth of truthful arguments advanced by your opponents. Surely we can afford to do this, and still have the weight of the argument in our favor. It is useless for me to give a line of argument, as it must be suited to each particular case; and every intelligent reader knows wherein the two parties and the two candidates differ. The arguments pro and con have all been published in the daily papers. Without denying that there are bad men in the Republican Party, we must see that the majority of that class belong on the opposite side. Without denying that there are good men in the Democratic Party, we know that the majority of that class belong to the Republican Party. To which party, as a rule, do the bar-keepers, the gamblers, the burglars, pickpockets, and highway-men belong? To which party, as a rule, do clergymen belong? Which wards go Democratic? Are they not the down town-wards, where the roughs predominate? Can a man, convicted of crime, more get the City than in the country; and, as a rule, it is the city which goes Democratic, and overwhelms the Republican vote of the country. These are facts which cannot be denied.

Let me, in conclusion, request my Republican friends to look over the registry list and see that there are none registered who ought not to be. Report to the proper authorities all fraudulently registered persons, that their ballots may be challenged when they attempt to vote. Let each and every Republican who reads this resolve firmly to do his duty; to work hard in the few remaining days between this and the election; to convert as many as possible, to bring up to the polls those who from apathy would remain away, and to see that his friends have the proper ballots on the day of election, and are not tricked with fraudulent ones. REPUBLICAN.

BROOKLYN, Tuesday, Oct 24, 1876.

GOV. HAYES AS A GUARDIAN OF ORDER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

During our local campaign preceding our October election, while speaking at Oakley, in this county, the President of the meeting, a wealthy and respectable citizen, related to me the following incident of our eminent candidate for the Presidency, Gov. Hayes, which comes from the best authority and cannot be questioned: During the riots which occurred among the miners at Massillon, in Stark County, in this State, this last Spring, and to quell which Gov. Hayes ordered troops to the scene of the strife, the Sheriff of the county being unable to disperse the rioters and stop the rioting, a couple of gentlemen (Republicans) waited on the Governor at Columbus and entreated him to withdraw the troops and let the miners alone, giving as their reason that a great many of the miners were Republicans, and that the action of Gov. Hayes in sending the troops to quell the rebellion would do a serious injury to the Republican Party by depriving it of a great many votes.

Said Gov. Hayes to these gentlemen "I have the evidence of the existence of a rebellion among these miners from sources of undoubted veracity. I must and shall stop the rebellion among them, even though to do so I have to call out the entire militia of the State of Ohio, and though my doing so destroys the Republican Party." Thereupon the gentlemen left, and the rebellion was stopped.

I send you this for publication in your widely-circulated journal in order to refute the charge that Gov. Hayes has not the courage to carry into force his convictions. M.

This morning THE DAILY TIMES consists of TWELVE PAGES. Every news-dealer is bound to deliver the paper in its complete form, and any failure to do so should be reported at the publication office.

The dispatch from Philadelphia, to be found in another column, which informs us of the arrest of the Treasurer of the Democratic Executive Committee of that city, throws some light on the way in which the Tilden reform canvass is being run in other cities as well as in our own. The prisoner was found coming from the committee-rooms with paper prepared for the issue of 50,000 fraudulent tax receipts, to be used in the consummation of a conspiracy to secure as many illegal votes for the reform candidate as possible. There is nothing in this inconsistent with the general purpose and character of the Democratic campaign this year. It is a campaign intended to elect a notoriously dishonorable man to the Presidency, in order that a great part of his followers may repay themselves out of the United States Treasury for the losses they suffered in rebellion. Why should not such a plan be carried out by means of fraud in New-York, in Philadelphia, in Brooklyn—anywhere that it is likely to succeed? Happily there is such a thing for even the most experienced swindlers as reckoning without one's host. In Philadelphia the host has made his appearance so early that the Democrats must lose all interest in the reckoning. The promptness and energy of the Philadelphia Republicans give an example for other portions of the country.

We hope that those laboring men who believe the demagogic cry of the Tildenites that a Democratic victory will bring good times will read the note from Syracuse, signed "S.," which we print this morning. The writer is a truthful man, who knows what he is talking about. He says that one company, with $100,000 or more capital, will start in that city if HAYES is elected, but will not start if TILDEN is chosen. If the company begins work, it will employ one hundred or one hundred and fifty men. This is a case which is not rare. A similar case was noted last week in Olean, in this State. The reasoning of the men with money to invest is very simple. If HAYES is elected and a Republican Congress, we know very nearly what will happen. There will be a steady improvement. If TILDEN and the Southern Democrats come in, no one can know what the future will be. One event will give confidence. The other cannot do so.

A strong desire is felt in the Eleventh Congressional District that Mr. L. P. MORTON, of the firm of MORTON, BLISS & CO., should be nominated for Congress by the Union Party. No one acquainted with the district can fail to see that he would be, in every sense, an excellent representative. He has extensive interests in the right administration of the Government. His knowledge and experience in finance, the most important branch of Governmental action for some time to come, would enable him to make valuable contributions to Federal legislation, while his high character and unwavering devotion to principle would be particularly desirable. We certainly need more business men in Congress, to supply accurate and reliable information and sound counsel for its guidance in regard to matters in which the business community is interested. It is to be hoped that Mr. MORTON can be induced to accept a nomination.

A correspondent, who was for many years a prominent merchant in this City, but who is now in another State, writes us: "The showing up of TILDEN this (Saturday) morning, coupled with the disgraceful shuffling of Mr. HEWITT, makes me feel that the meeting to hear Mr. EVARTS on Wednesday should be held in Union square, where the great patriotic meeting was held in April, 1861, (which Mr. TILDEN did not favor,) and should be attended by every honest business man in New-York, to protest against the outrage of electing Mr. TILDEN to the Presidency. May Heaven deliver us from a President whose evasion of taxes honestly due should consign him to the company of those only who feel that it is always right to cheat the Government." These are the words of a gentleman who did not consider the payment of taxes to sustain the war to be, in the language of Mr. HEWITT, "simply a matter of statute obligation," and he does not like the idea of a President who took that view of a citizen's duty to his Government in the hour of supreme trial.

In the Twelfth (Westchester) District, Mr. CLARKSON N. POTTER is running for Congress on the Democratic ticket, against Mr. GEORGE A. BRANDRETH. The latter gentleman has served three terms in the State Legislature, and is very popular in the district. He is making a very active contest. Mr. POTTER is a gentleman of wealth and social position, and of some, though not great, ability. In Congress he has often shown himself to be a partisan of most contracted views and most unfair, not to say unscrupulous, modes of thinking and acting. As an ornamental member of Congress he has merit, but as a Representative, the country has received nothing and can expect nothing at his hands more than from those of the ordinary thick-and-thin party man. His extreme State rights theories were so offensive in the last session that they cost him the Democratic nomination for Congress, which he had confidently looked for, and even that supple political acrobat, Mr. S. S. COX, (by the way, what has become of Mr. COX,) could not accommodate himself to them. Since his defeat at Saratoga, Mr. POTTER has been pretty quiet, but he appeared once as the apologist of Mr. TILDEN in a speech at Albany. He was very polite with the Governor and with the Governor's lady relatives, and, whatever may have been his views on perjury or Copperheadism, he assured his audience that the hostesses of the White House, in case of TILDEN's election, would be faultless. If the people of Westchester want a man to really represent their district in Congress, Mr. POTTER is an excellent one to be left at home.

THE TRUE PARTY OF REFORM.

The Republican National Committee, in its address upon the result of the recent elections, truly declared that the candidates of the Republican Party "represent the best spirit of reform, to which they are pledged by every act and utterance of their lives." Not only is this true, but the only hope of any real reform rests with the Republican Party. Almost all of the men known to the country as civil service reformers are Republicans, and the only educated sentiment in favor of civil service reform is found within the Republican Party. Its candidate for President has repeatedly given evidence, both in his acts and utterances, of his devotion to the cause of reform. He is no new convert, making amends for the lateness of his conversion by the loudness of his professions, nor is he a political trimmer who has taken up the cry of reform because he believes it to be popular. His whole professional and political career proves him to be a man of deep convictions, sincere professions, and determined action, who needs only to see his duty clearly in order to do it. No man who had not made a study of the spoils system could dissect it so clearly and forcibly as he has done in his letter of acceptance. Nor is this a new thought with him. More than four years ago he expressed the same opinions in almost the same words. In Congress he supported Mr. JENCKES' careful and well-digested measure, and in his first inaugural Message as Governor of Ohio, in 1869, and again in 1871, he urged that civil service reform be made, by an amendment to the Constitution, a part of the organic law of the State. With such a record as this, there can be no doubt that Gov. HAYES would make a sincere and determined effort to reform the civil service, and that neither the difficulties of the task nor the opposition of interested politicians would swerve him from the path of duty and conviction. We do not attempt to disguise the fact that there will be persistent opposition to his efforts on the part of many of the prominent leaders of the party. All real reforms are difficult of accomplishment. The very fact that there is a demand for reform is a proof that there are deeply-rooted evils. It is not to be expected that a system which has been for nearly half a century tightening its coils about the service can be made to loosen its hold by a mere stroke of the pen. Both open and insidious attempts will be made to thwart his efforts. Importunity, cajolery, flattery, and even intimidation, will be brought to bear to weaken his resolution. Nevertheless, we believe that a large part of the obstacles will disappear before a courageous determination to overthrow the evil system. Committed to the reform, both by his own explicit and voluntary promises, and by the formal declarations of his party, and supported by an earnest and intelligent sentiment within the party, he has won half the battle already.

The record of the Democratic nominee is in striking contrast to that of his opponent. He has been a hack politician all his life, and has never risen above the lowest party methods. The record of his public and private utterances may be searched in vain for one word of sympathy with the true methods of reform, prior to his candidacy for the Presidency. He is forced, by the temper of the times to mention the subject in his letter of acceptance, but his shallow and superficial treatment of it gives no proof of a comprehension of the evils to be uprooted, nor any ground for hope of true reform in the event of his election. He stands upon a platform which demands a complete upsetting of the civil service, which is the very thing that all true reformers deprecate as the worst evil of the present system. But even if he were sincere in his professions, there would be no reason to hope that he would be able to carry them into practice. There is nothing in the history, the constitution, or the leadership of the Democratic Party to justify such a hope. That party is the parent of the spoils system, and it has never shown any disposition to disown its offspring. It has never anywhere, whether in national, State, or municipal administration, given evidence of sympathy with the methods or the objects of civil service reform. A Democratic President who should attempt to reform the methods of appointment would arouse the united opposition of his party. There is no sentiment within the party, as there is in the Republican Party, which would hold up the hands of a reform President; but on the contrary there is a fierce, resistless sentiment which would thwart all his efforts, or failing that, repudiate him. The whole Democratic theory of reform is summed up in the demand for a change, and that a change which will put Democrats in office.

In this fierce demand for a sweeping change in the public officers of all grades lies one of the chief dangers of Democratic success, not because it would turn Republicans out and put Democrats in, but because it would replace many tried and experienced officers with untried and inexperienced appointees. Imperfect as the methods of selection have been, the service has been increasing in efficiency and capacity under Republican rule. All parties in power grow conservative in this respect. They learn by experience that at least in the more difficult and responsible places, training and integrity are indispensable. A gradual process of sifting out takes place, in spite of vicious methods, by which the incompetent and dishonest are got rid of. This has been going on under the sixteen years of Republican rule, until the service has acquired some degree of permanence and character. But if the Democracy should come into power, there would be a clean sweep. Their platform demands it; their leaders are hungry and clamorous for it. Neither experience, nor length of service, nor uprightness of conduct would avert the summary dismissal of every Republican office-holder. The consequences may be easily predicted. The public service would be filled with hungry partisans, unskilled in public business, ignorant of their duties, and untried as to their honesty and responsibility. Such a process could not fail to be attended with demoralization and loss. The tax-payers of the country would reap the harvest in revenues diminished by reason of inefficiency in their collection; in expenditures, increased by incompetent or unskilled service, and in the embezzlement and squandering of the public money by dishonest or irresponsible officers. The tax-payer who proposes to vote for a "change" in the hope of diminishing his burdens, may well pause before he carries his intention into effect.

HAYES AS A SOLDIER.

Gov. HAYES entered the Union Army a Major, and left it a Brevet Major General and a member of Congress. He won his military and civil promotion by genuine service. The work which brought him advancement was done, not in Washington or Cincinnati, but in the Shenandoah Valley. What devotion to duty controlled him, appears from the record that it was his deliberate choice to go into the war if he "knew" he "was to die or be killed in the course of it." With what indignant emphasis he refused to leave the post of greatest danger—to him the post of highest duty—appears from the reply when asked to come home and canvass for Congress: "An officer fit for duty who at this crisis would abandon his post to electioneer for a seat in Congress ought to be scalped. You may feel perfectly sure I shall do no such thing."

War makes and unmakes men. It is the severest and the roughest school of discipline and development. It destroys the physically and morally weak, and strengthens the strong. To live and act for years under the eyes of a thousand or ten thousand soldiers, is the most trying test to which human character can be subjected. Only a solid character can stand such scrutiny, and with the soldiers a good "square" man alone wins his way. How well Gen. HAYES stood this test we should be accused of extravagance if we allowed the concurring testimony of the soldiers of his command to speak. This affection of his men grew out of the fact that he always sought to make the comfort of his soldiers equal to his own. Their food and hardships were his. In an army, personal bravery is one test of merit. The higher the courage, the higher the admiration. HAYES won the hearts of his soldiers by his rare intrepidity in scores of fights.

At South Mountain, where a ball carried away a part of the bone of his left arm, he continued giving orders after he fell, and when carried from the field thus painfully wounded, returned to fight again at the front. At Cloyd Mountain he was in advance of the storming party charging up the mountain in the face of a most deadly fire, and fought with sword in hand to cut off the enemy's retreat. At Opequan he lead the charge, and was first across an almost impassable morass in which his horse was hopelessly mired. At Fisher's Hill he charged upon the enemy's shotted guns at the head of his division, on horseback, being the only officer thus exposed. At Cedar Creek, a heavy volley at close range having killed his horse under him, he obtained another, and, although severely wounded, kept the saddle and shared with SHERIDAN, from whom he received promotion on the field—one of the decisive victories of the war.

But without adding to the number of instances of bravery through which Gen. HAYES found his way to the hearts, not alone of his soldiers, but of his countrymen, it is enough that he was wounded four times in battle, had four horses killed under him, and was on one hundred different days exposed to death under the enemy's fire. If this war record is not good enough, perhaps Mr. TILDEN, Mr. HENDRICKS, or Mr. DORSHEIMER can present one that is better. Gen. HAYES was as brilliant and gallant a brigade and division commander as there was in the Army.

That he did not head a more conspicuous command was not from a lack of military skill, but simply because, while others were in Washington boring the President for promotion, HAYES kept hammering away at the enemy in the field. While officers of higher nominal rank gave much time to winning advancement, he gave all his time to winning victory. A scarred soldier and an unscarred patriot, who has risked his life a hundred times for the Nation's safety, can be trusted to guard the Republic from harm for four years.

SAVINGS BANKS AND SOUTHERN REPUDIATION.

The Democratic World has nothing but sneers for the victims of Southern repudiation. It has no word of rebuke for the Democratic Legislatures which signalized their return to power by robbing the holders of millions upon millions of bonds. All its indignation is reserved for the "impudence" of THE TIMES in suggesting that the South, having repudiated its own debts, cannot safely be trusted to deal with the indebtedness of the National Government. The World hints, indeed, that the Southern States are justified in the robbery, on the ground that the debts were incurred by "Republican carpet-baggers." As a matter of fact, the plea is untenable. We have already shown that the bulk of the debt which Virginia makes no attempt to pay was incurred before the war; and that considerable portions of the debts thrown overboard by Alabama, Arkansas, and North Carolina were created while those States were under the control of the slaveholders. In North Carolina nearly fifteen millions come under this description, and nearly one-half of the total debt of Arkansas is in the same category. It is idle, therefore, to try to make "carpet-baggers" the scapegoat for Southern dishonesty. That has its origin in the determination of the South to cast as many of its burdens as possible upon other shoulders than its own. It has the benefit of the railroads and other public works to which the proceeds of the bonds issued during the reconstruction era were applied, and when it attempts to rid itself of these liabilities, by the use of the sponge, it exhibits the unscrupulous dishonesty of its Democratic rulers.

The consequences of this dishonesty fall upon a class at the North who are not accustomed to identify themselves with financial controversies. Large amounts of the Southern State bonds are included in the assets of savings banks. Of these which have lately gone into liquidation, several were holders of Alabama, North Carolina, and Virginia securities, having either purchased them as available investments, or accepted them as collaterals on account of loans. And of the institutions still in good credit, many hold the bonds in one or the other of these forms. With the prudence of touching them at all we have just now nothing to do. At the time they were taken the bonds stood fairly in the market, and no attempt was made to repudiate them until the Democrats became again the administrators of the local Governments. Their open repudiation of tens of millions of bonds, and their refusal to provide for the payment of interest on the others, rendered them all but valueless. They are unproductive, and they are practically unsalable at any price. As long as the savings banks which possess them retain the confidence of their depositors, the direct injury experienced is confined to the loss of interest. The earning capacity of the assets is by so much diminished. When the institutions are embarrassed, the effect is more serious. The sums sunk in Southern bonds became an almost total loss; and the unfortunate depositors at once realize the operation of Southern bad faith. There are savings banks now in receivers' hands whose depositors will lose a considerable percentage as a result of the repudiation of State debts by the Southern Democracy.

LIFE INSURANCE MANAGEMENT.

The failure of the Continental Life Insurance Company is spoken of as a great surprise. Doubtless it was so to the main body of the public, who know little of the essential conditions of success in life insurance, and who are therefore easily misled by the pretensions of companies. To others, tidings of the failure came almost as a matter of course. The company, with all its display, has long been in an unsatisfactory condition, as indicated by its official returns to the Insurance Department, and by negotiations which have been known to be in progress for amalgamation with another company but one degree better than itself. In truth, the condition of the Continental Company has been such that if the State supervision, of which we are accustomed to boast were aught more than a delusion and a snare, the step just taken toward overhauling and adjusting its affairs would have occurred, under more satisfactory auspices, months ago.

The reason assigned for the acquiescence of the company in the appointment of a Receiver—namely, the depreciation in its real estate and in its mortgages on real estate—is as deceptive as the claims persistently presented by the company in its efforts to acquire business. The building erected and owned for the conduct of the company's business in this City was, like other buildings of the same character, an inexcusable extravagance. The total assets of the company on the 31st of last December were $6,229,484, of which $810,000, or more than one-eighth of the whole, is represented by the company's building. The proportion is obviously beyond what prudent management would have dictated. At the date given, however, the company, instead of acknowledging that depreciation in this item had taken place, asserted that its market value over cost was $133,912. The loans on bond and mortgage amounted to $1,301,377, and no mention is made of their depreciation. That the properties mortgaged have sunk very much in value there can be no doubt, but that the decline could seriously affect this item in the company's assets is possible only on the supposition that the loans were injudiciously made, or that there was gross blundering or worse, in the valuations on which the company acted. Its general mismanagement prepares us to believe either or both of these hypotheses. But it is manifest that had the company been otherwise sound, the shrinkage in real estate values would not have brought it face to face with bankruptcy. We regard the explanation of the company, then, as a pretext invented to divert attention from the mismanagement, which, among the well-informed, has long been considered its chief characteristic.

The company is little more than ten years old, having commenced business in May, 1866. Its accounts, therefore, should have shown a continuous process of large accumulations. With a total income of $2,452,466, it should have added, last year, many hundreds of thousands of dollars to its available assets. As a matter of fact, its expenditures exceeded its income by $172,065. We hold that the appearance of this fact, under any efficient system of State supervision, would have led to immediate and decisive interference. A ten years' old life insurance company, whose expenditures exceed its income, is on the downward road to insolvency.

Another very unfavorable circumstance came to light in the report. Besides losing ground financially, it was clear that the company was fast forfeiting the confidence of its policy-holders. The total number of its policies was given as 31,880. Of these, however, no less than 3,829 were allowed by the holders to lapse, 2,109 were surrendered, and 940 were not taken at all. Thus, apart from legitimate losses by death and expiry, more than twenty per cent. of the gross number of policies reported fell to the ground. In this connection a question arises which, for the credit of life insurance, must be answered explicitly. There are "wreckers" in life insurance as in railroads, managers who use their opportunities to create distrust in order that their own sinister ends may be served. Were there "wreckers" in the Continental Company? The Insurance Superintendent of California, in his latest report, alleges that there were. He distinctly charges that agents of the company were depreciating its policies with the view of inducing holders to surrender them, or to allow them to lapse by non-payment of renewal premiums. Two motives are assignable for this course—one, the furtherance of a disgraceful speculation for the private benefit of the company's officers and agents; the other, the enrichment of the company at the cost of the insured. It is not necessary to travel to the Pacific coast to find evidence of a practice which should subject parties concerned in it to prosecution. How far the Continental Company is thus compromised, the California Superintendent seems in a position to decide.

The premium-note system has probably had more to do with the embarrassments of the company than any depreciation of mortgages. Of its total net assets, considerably more than one-third is represented by premium notes, loans, or liens on policies on force. These may be good enough as a set-off to liabilities on account of policies, but they are not available as assets in the true sense of availability which hard times suggest.

But the great and obvious scandal in the company's accounts is the cost of conducting its business. Its total income during the last year was less than two millions and a half. Its ledger assets were below five millions and a half. And here are some of the year's costs of management:

Commissions to agents	$166,838
Salaries and traveling expenses of managers of agencies, and general, special, and local agents	83,635
Medical examiners' fees	22,089
Salaries and other compensation of officers and other office employes	85,419
Cash paid for commuting commissions	123,257
Advertising	13,135
Counsel fees, $17,191; stationery, $16,317	33,508
Agency and other expenses	75,938
Rent	20,580
Total	$624,449

With these items before us, it is not difficult to understand why or how the current expenditure exceeded the current income. The company paid more for its new business than that business was worth, and its management of business already acquired was on a scale which no solvent banker or merchant would tolerate in his affairs.

One cannot wonder if the results that have naturally flowed from management so improvident as this retards the return of confidence in the insurance world, and shakes the faith of all persons insured, or contemplating insurance, in the efficacy of State supervision. In its present shape that supervision is a mockery. It invites a trust which it does not merit. Unless it be made effectual it will continue to do more harm than good, for its existence presupposes the operation of a vigilant guardianship in the public interest, while failures like this of the Continental prove that the checks it is supposed to put upon bad management are practically worthless.

PROTESTANTISM AND THE POOR.

The weak point of Protestantism has long been its influence on the poorest masses. Last Winter there may be said to have been a revival of the old spirit of the reformed churches in reaching morally the lowest stratum of our population. Messrs. MOODY and SANKEY affected all classes by their ministrations, but they touched even the bottom of our society. As to the result of their efforts among the thoughtful and serious minded, this is not the place naturally to estimate it. The inner changes of character among the already moral and virtuous are not easily catalogued or measured. But every one familiar with the under-classes of the City, or with those especially exposed to temptations, will be able to put his finger on the names of a considerable number of persons who have reformed from the worst ways and now return each day to sober and happy homes, when before wife and children seemed ruined and heart-broken. These are some of the palpable fruit. Many of our most public-spirited citizens had it strongly in mind in some way to perpetuate this influence. The subject of a "free popular church" was much considered last Winter, and certain gentlemen stood ready to contribute largely if some judicious plan could be formed. But nothing as yet has come of it, unless it be the continued services in the "Gospel tent." The difficulty, no doubt, will be to secure a Mr. Moody for such a church. Such men are very rare. It is evident that the Protestant churches, both in their ideas and their mode and spirit, have not utterly lost power over the crowd. Their success depends upon their agent or preacher.

The wealthy churches of this City have certainly missed of success—that is, compared with the Catholic—and this with all the influence and prestige of a wealthy class in their favor. Some of them are led, too, by clergymen of singular devoutness and power. They are weak, however, in this direction, because the current of fashion and luxury has been allowed to sweep them away. When a church is made to cost half a million, and its pews let each for the annual income of a respectable householder, it may be a comfortable and religious club, or a place of worship for the select few, but it ceases to be a Christian church for the poor. It may be urged in reply that such churches have their own missions and schools in the destitute quarters, and thus reach the poor. But the law of "economy of energy" comes in. If the vitality of the people has been used in organizing a first-class fashionable church, or their money spent in building and ornamentation, they have little left of either for moral efforts among the "heathen at home." Then notoriously the church-mission stations soon aim above the lowest masses, and hit their object in a class by no means very destitute or exposed to temptation. They seldom are led by men of power or much moral life. They do good, but in a very humdrum way, and do not touch vast classes of persons.

This is the more lamentable in the Protestant missions, as certain districts in this City inhabited by Germans are especially open to the influences of the reformed sects. But no one who knows such wards, as for instance the Eleventh and the Seventeenth, need be told that the Protestant Church but skims on the surface of the immense population of needy and industrious people who inhabit these districts. What then is the mode in which Protestantism could reach these masses? We answer, by simply directing more of its vitality and means toward these classes. Every wealthy Protestant church ought to economize on its own luxury and comfort, and apply its money to some one central point among the poor. Here it should employ, not some inexperienced theological student, who works on low pay, but a man of power, accustomed to deal with the poor. His chapel should have for adjuncts various secular and moral agencies. He should have connected with it a "model tenement-house," to show landlords what ought to be done in this City, and to prove to tenants that they can live in New-York in a civilized manner. Such a house, carefully conducted, would be no expense to the mission, and should pay a fair income. Associated with this should be a reading-room for young men, (as Bishop POTTER has suggested,) an employment agency, and an industrial school for children. All these things, which the poor know to be blessings, should appear to be, what they are, the fruits of the tree of Christianity. The ignorant and despairing and unfortunate should come to associate with religion, not merely dogmas and sectarian interests, but the most practical spirit of humanity. A mission like this would be a light in a dark place. It would be as useful to the Church as to the poor.

VACANT LOTS AND BUILDING LOANS.

The great decline in City lots, coupled with the decline in labor and building materials, has had the effect of giving new life to the building trade, which for the past three years has been so utterly stagnant. Building has not been very brisk this Summer. There are, however, more new buildings in progress now than at this time last year, though the actual total estimated cost is less, because of the fall of contractors' prices during the last twelve months. A notable feature in building operations is the appearance of an entirely new class of men as buyers of choice lots, at low prices, for cash, in contradistinction to the old-time speculative builder, who always stood ready to pay the most exorbitant prices for land, provided the seller would advance "a building loan." This pernicious system had much to do with the building of up-town lots during those halcyon days when all manner of vacant property passed rapidly from hand to hand at constantly advancing prices. To it can be attributed, in a great measure, the unbroken succession of foreclosure sales we have witnessed during the last three years. These sales still continue. Rows of brown-stone houses were put up, almost entirely on credit, by men who had very little, if anything, to lose. It was done in this wise: The owner of say five lots, worth actually ten thousand dollars apiece, would agree to advance $8,000 on each house to be erected, provided he received $13,000 per lot, asking nearly 33⅓ per cent. more than the market value of his land, in view of the promised loan. Armed with this attractive proposition, brokers canvass industriously, and soon find some needy builder who "buys the lots" without paying a cent cash. In his turn the builder makes arrangements with brown-stone men, plumbers, carpenters, &c., who agree to do the work on the proposed buildings, taking in part payment one of the houses, subject to a mortgage of $21,000—the price of the land, $13,000, and the amount of the advance, $8,000, combined—and a certain amount of cash. The original starter of the enterprise will have probably disposed of two-thirds of his houses in this manner before laying a brick. He depends upon credit to build them, or so much of them as cannot be built with the "loan." He depends on luck to sell them. Only on a constantly rising market can enterprises of this description prove successful. Till 1873 we had such a real estate market in this City. Holders of lots, on hearing of a sale at advanced rates, immediately marked up the price of land to meet the figures realized by their neighbors who sold with building loans.

Real estate speculators stepped in between the land-owner and the speculative builder—bought for cash and sold to builders at a stiff advance, with a loan. Nearly all those connected with it have come to grief during the last three years; fortunes acquired in this manner melted like snow before a June sun, equities of redemption were swept away, and real estate speculators vanished from the scene. We do not wish to see this vicious system again revived. We believe it to be dangerous to the permanent and healthy advance of real property in this City. It militates against the best interests of mechanics, who are only too frequently deliberately swindled by dishonest builders.

With the revival in all branches of business will come revived activity in the building trade. Already, inquiries are on foot by men of ample means and ample credit, with a view to purchasing, at the very lowest rates, choice building lots on the line of improvement between Sixtieth and Eighty-sixth streets, Third and Madison avenues, for immediate improvement. Much building was done during the whole of last Winter. These men are prepared to pay a fair amount of cash down, leaving the balance on mortgage, payable in, or before, eighteen months. They cannot buy at foreclosure sales for two reasons, first, they do not care to pay all cash, as they wish to keep as much money in hand as possible for the erection of their buildings; second, they wish to pick and choose their lots, and it rarely happens that lots can be bought at foreclosure in a particular spot, and in a given quantity, just when wanted.

These men will not pay an exorbitant price for the sake of getting loans. When their buildings are up, they find no difficulty in effecting a loan at reasonable rates with any of our first-class life insurance companies, which are, and from present appearances will for some considerable time continue to be, very flush of money. We submit that it is to the interest of real estate owners to deal with this class of builders—to sell them at low rates for cash, rather than to embark in the hazardous system of selling at fictitious values through the medium of "building loans." Let owners of vacant lots sell their property at such price as will attract builders of means, character, and enterprise. Real estate with us is always the last interest to revive after a period of depression. We believe, from present appearances, that next Spring will open with a much greater degree of activity in the building trade than we have seen in this City at any time during the last three years, and the movement last Spring was by no means despicable. Of the new buildings then started, the Nineteenth Ward had the larger share. A better class of apartment houses has made its appearance in the most central portions of this ward. Of this particular kind of house more are wanted; they combine comfort and elegance with great economy. Those which have been put up in Seventy-second street, between Third and Fourth avenues, have met with notable success. They were filled at remunerative prices as soon as completed. Being off Third avenue and yet on a hundred-foot street, they have an air of elegance, comfort and respectability not to be found in any apartment house which sacrifices its ground floor to store purposes. We hear of projects for other finer and larger apartment houses in the same locality, between Third and Fourth avenues. There is at present values no safer or better investment than the loaning of money on first mortgage on improved property in this City. We can well understand that owners of vacant lots might be willing to make loans to responsible builders to whom they sell land. Transactions of this kind are legitimate, and should be encouraged, where land is sold at its real value, and loans are not made to effect sales at unduly high prices. Real estate speculators and irresponsible and dishonest speculative builders have helped not a little to depreciate choice unimproved property in this City below its actual intrinsic value, estimated at the par of gold.

TILDEN'S LETTER IN VIRGINIA.

DEMOCRATIC POLITICIANS IN TROUBLE—THE SHAM REFORMER'S LATEST FABRICATION—A DILEMMA IN WHICH SOUTHERNERS HAVE BEEN PLACED BY THEIR TRICKY LEADER.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

The leading Democratic politicians of this section have recently had the severest burden of the campaign thrust upon them in the shape of Samuel J. Tilden's letter on the payment of the rebel war claims. It appears to have thrown them into a dilemma from which it is difficult, not to say impossible, to extricate themselves, since, up to the present time, they have not been able to put forth anything like an adequate explanation to this last, and to them most damaging, document. It has been an understood thing from the moment of Mr. Tilden's nomination, that his elevation to the Presidency would be the signal for the adjustment and payment of these claims. It has been asserted here that one of the first measures of a Democratic President would be to so reconstruct the Southern Claims Commission as to render these claims easy of adjustment and prompt in payment; and Mr. Tilden's letter has made it imperative upon the part of the Southern Democratic politicians that they should explain it away, or at least break its force.

An effort to do this is made on the ground that the letter was written solely to effect the war Democrats of the North, the Southern leaders claiming the most sacred pledges from their Northern allies that these claims shall be paid in full, and at the earliest possible date after the accession of the Democratic Party to power. Was there ever anything fabricated in the darkened lace-rooms of Europe so thin as this explanation? I hardly need tell you that it is an unsatisfactory one here, and that the situation grows hourly more embarrassing for the Democratic leaders. I have had some familiarity with these claims. I know that in numerous instances they have been made up upon an entirely fraudulent basis; that in very many cases the claimants are not only disloyal to the Government, but that they did not lose one dollar of the amount claimed. Evidently, they proceed upon the principle that it is no greater wrong to take money illegally from the Treasury of the United States after the war, by means of fraudulent claims, than it was to withhold taxes lawfully due the United States during the war, and in the hour of the nation's greatest peril.

The claim of James O. Harris, No. 18,953, for the sum of $33,100, is one in point. The claimant in this case makes oath that he was loyal to the Union during the war, and that when Gen. Sherman captured Atlanta he [claimant] was possessed of property in the nature of supplies and provisions to the value of $33,100, which was taken by Gen. Sherman for the use of the Union Army. The official investigation of this case develops the fact that the claimant was a regularly appointed purchasing agent for the Confederate Army, with head-quarters at Atlanta, Ga.; that the supplies contained in the store-house occupied by him were purchased by him as such agent, and on account of the rebel authorities; and, further, that on the night preceding the evacuation of the city by the Confederate troops the building was gutted by them, and everything carried away, with the exception of a few dollars' worth of property—among which was a violin belonging to private parties. Instances similar to this can be cited ad libitum, in larger as well as smaller amounts. In some cases it was urged upon claimants by loyal men who knew their falsity, that such claims could never be paid, and the substance of the answers invariably returned was: "No; not under Radical rule; but we mean to break that, and have a Democratic administration, and then we will get every dollar." This is the idea that has been steadily fostered by the Democratic leaders. This is the idea which the rank and file have believed their chosen standard-bearer would carry out, and they cry aloud and piteously for an explanation of this seeming change of base.

Mr. Tilden's letter is a splendid campaign document for Southern circulation in the interest of the Republican Party. The Southern Democrats have been led to place great reliance in the ability of their chief candidate to work himself into the White House by means of trick and device, if not by votes. We are waiting here, curious to learn how the leaders will explain the letter. Thousands of Southern Democrats are waiting, not curiously merely, but anxiously; for unless some reason more satisfactory than any yet advanced can be given for the letter, all other promises made by him will appear to their minds as the shallow pretenses which they now are to thousands of others. The outlook here now is more hopeful for the Republicans than at any time since the opening of the campaign.

THE ETHICS OF "REFORM."

PAPERS IN THE SUIT OF BOODY VERSUS TILDEN.

A CONVINCING STATEMENT OF MR. TILDEN'S SHARE IN THE NORTH-WESTERN POOL OF 1864—HOW HE DREW SIX TIMES THE AMOUNT OF PROFITS HE WAS ENTITLED TO—HIS REFUSAL TO RETURN THE SAME—HIS BREACH OF TRUST IN THE USE OF THE COMPANY'S FUNDS FOR STOCK-JOBBING PURPOSES.

The remarkable developments concerning the "crookedness" of Mr. Tilden's Wall street career are more than borne out by the full text of the papers in the suit of Boody against Tilden, a brief summary of which was published in THE TIMES of Friday. To-day we print in full the affidavit attached to the complaint, and the perusal of which leaves no doubt as to the scandalous nature of Tilden's share in the transactions in question. The inexcusable delays by which he has attempted to evade justice, and at the same time keep the details of his rascality from becoming public, are quite in keeping with all the public have heard from Mr. Tilden, and form an admirable illustration of the shuffling and double-dealing so conspicuous in his canvass.

THE AFFIDAVIT.

SUPERIOR COURT OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK.
Henry H. Boody against Samuel J. Tilden, impleaded with others.—City and County of New-York, ss.—Henry H. Boody being duly sworn deposes and says, that the summons and complaint in this action were served upon the defendant, Samuel J. Tilden, May 6 last. He appeared by his attorney May 20. His time to answer expired May 26. My attorneys gave him three extensions of time to answer, the last expiring on July 15, last. The defendant then applied ex parte to the court on July 12, and obtained from Judge Curtis an order extending his time to answer twenty days from July 13, 1876. On Aug. 1, 1876, he applied again ex parte to the court, and obtained an order from Judge Sanford extending his time to answer twenty (20) days from that date. On Aug. 21, 1876, he applied again ex parte to the court, and obtained from Judge Speir an order extending his time to answer forty (40) days from that date. On Oct. 16, 1876, he applied again ex parte to the court, and obtained from Judge Sanford an order extending his time to answer thirty days from that date.

Defendant Tilden appears by the same attorneys as the other defendants, and the answer of each defendant is substantially the same, namely, the plea of the Statute of Limitations.

The said Tilden's answer was substantially prepared, as I am informed and believe, and put before him for verification two months ago. It could have been served at the same time that his attorneys served the answer of the other defendants, namely, July 15, 1876, had not defendant Tilden some purpose to serve other than the bringing of this litigation to a speedy conclusion. The facts upon which the action is brought are as follows:

THE STORY OF THE POOL.

On the 28th day of March, 1864, defendant Tilden was a Trustee and member of the Executive Committee of the Chicago and North-western Railroad Company. He in connection with the other defendant entered into an agreement with me, called in stock jobbing parlance a pool, to buy up a sufficient number of the shares of the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Company to enable us, with such proxies as I might obtain, to control the then next election of Directors of said road, and then sell out the said road to the Chicago and North-western Railroad Company, of which said Tilden was a Director and member of the Executive Committee, as aforesaid, at a rate that should be profitable to the three individuals concerned in the transaction. In this pool Mr. Tilden agreed to take an interest amounting in round numbers to one-ninth (1-9), myself one-half (½), and the other party the balance; but as it might require nearly three millions of dollars to carry it through, I consulted in the start with Mr. Tilden in regard to the money to be furnished as his share to buy and carry the large amount of stock, which might amount to $300,000.

TILDEN CONTRIBUTES NO CAPITAL.

Mr. Tilden himself contributed no capital whatever to the pool. But the Chicago and North-western Railway Company, of which said Tilden was, as aforesaid, a Director and member of the Executive Committee, had at that time on deposit in the City of New-York to meet liabilities that from time to time accrued here, $459,092 99.

AN INDEFENSIBLE BREACH OF TRUST.

Of this money Mr. Tilden a few days previous, viz., March 9, had obtained for his own use without security or interest, $60,000, imperatively demanding it on the ground that he was a Director and member of the Executive Committee of the road whose money it was, and as such instrumental in having it deposited here. The remainder not used by Mr. Tilden, of the $459,092 99, viz., $399,092 99, he advised and consented should be used in the pool, and it was used.

After I had expended in buying up the stock under this pool arrangement over two and a half million, not a cent of which was furnished by Mr. Tilden, (except advising and consenting, as above set forth,) there came a great panic on the stock market, commencing about the 16th of April, 1864, and continuing several days, and I was suddenly called upon to raise $1,500,000 to carry said pool stock I had purchased of the said Chicago and Galena Union Railway Company, and which stock I had to carry until some time in the Summer of that year, when the sale and consolidation of the said company with the Chicago and North-western Railway Company should be carried out. Mr. Tilden furnished no aid whatever, except advising and consenting as aforesaid, in carrying the said stock through said panic, though strongly and repeatedly urged to do so. I had to shoulder the load and carry it through the panic myself at a cost to me of $71,551 85. In the Summer of 1864, at the election of the Board of Directors we obtained the desired control of the Chicago and Galena Union Railroad Company, and Mr. Tilden and his friends, having control of the Chicago and North-western Railway Company also, a consolidation was effected at a rate which at the time it was believed by us would pay Mr. Tilden and myself and the other party engaged in the operation a net profit of about two hundred and thirty thousand dollars. In August, 1864, after the consolidation had been completed and we had received from the Chicago and North-western Railway Company the proceeds of the transaction, Mr. Tilden drew from me about what was supposed at the time to be his share of the net profit of the pool, namely, $2,000. But the accounts, which were long and complicated, were not at the time written up or balanced, and, through the inadvertance of my book-keeper, credit items to the amount of more than seventy thousand dollars were carried into the accounts on the books which should not have been credited there, as they belonged to other transactions, and debit items amounting to over one hundred thousand dollars were, by an oversight of the book-keeper, not carried into the account at all. These errors and omissions of the book-keeper I did not discover until a year and a half ago. Upon correcting these errors and footing up the accounts, so as to get the true result of the pool, the net profits, instead of being about $23,000 turned out to be only about $35,000, and defendant Tilden's share in the said profits on his agreed interest in the pool, although he did not put into the transaction a cent of capital, except to direct the use of said money of the said Chicago and North-western Railway Company, was not $56,000, which he drew from me, but only about $4,000, making the amount that I overpaid him in August, 1864, on this transaction more than $22,000.

TILDEN REFUSES TO RETURN THE MONEY.

Immediately I discovered and verified this error—this overpayment to him of more than $22,000—I made a statement of the same to Mr. Tilden, and requested him to examine the accounts himself, or to send some one in whom he had confidence to examine and make them up for him, and to repay me the amount that he had overdrawn from me, or at least to submit the matter to arbitration, and this request I several times renewed. He delayed giving any decision until the month of April last, when he refused to do anything about it. I then brought this suit to obtain a settlement with him of said accounts, and the closing up between us of said transactions.

THE GREAT AMERICAN PROCRASTINATOR.

He had 163 days to answer before getting this last extension of thirty days. His only possible defense, I am advised, is the Statute of Limitations. Last June he asked for time on the ground that he was busy getting his nomination. In July it was represented that he could not put in his answer, because he was writing his letter of acceptance. In August it was represented that the reason why his attorneys could not get him to verify the answer was that he was organizing his canvass. In September it was said that he did not wish to be troubled with answering till after the October elections. I waited patiently till those were over, and now am met with a further delay of thirty days by a fourth ex parte extension. H. H. BOODY.

Sworn before me this 23d day of October, 1876.
J. WERDEN GEDNEY,
Notary Public, Kings County.

It is hardly necessary to point out the glaring impropriety of Mr. Tilden's participation in the scheme just described while occupying the three-fold office of counsel, Trustee, and Director of a corporation whose interests he was bound at all hazards to protect. Most men in his place would hesitate long before embarking in operations of the kind in question. Much more would they hesitate before using the funds of their employers without security and without interest for their private stock-jobbing purposes. Mr. Tilden, however, with a serenity peculiarly his own, does both, and then challenges the admiration of his fellow-citizens as the most conspicuous "reformer" of the age,

CONGRESSIONAL NOMINATION.

GEN. ANSON G. M'COOK SELECTED AS THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATE IN THE EIGHTH DISTRICT.

The Republican Convention of the Eighth Congressional District met last night at No. 231 West Sixteenth street, and nominated as candidate for Congress, Gen. Anson G. McCook. A committee was appointed to inform Gen. McCook of his nomination, and to invite him into the hall. After he had been introduced to the Convention he made a short address of acceptance, thanking them for the nomination, and concluding as follows: And now, gentlemen, one word in regard to the campaign. In little over a week you will be called upon to decide the most momentous question that ever has been submitted to the American people. The battle that has been raging in the West has been transferred to this State, and apparently the result will depend upon the way it casts its electoral vote. The election of our candidates for President and Vice-President is paramount to all other considerations, and next to that in importance is the necessity of wresting from the grasp of the Democratic Party the control of the House of Representatives, not forgetting our State and County ticket. So far as I am personally concerned, I believe I have a pretty correct idea of the difficulties in the way of an election. My opponent, Mr. Ward, is a gentleman, a shrewd and experienced politician, and against him I have not one word to say. But this Eighth Congressional District properly belongs to us, and with your generous and cordial assistance, and by hard and continuous work, I believe it can be carried, as other close and doubtful ones have been. In this great City, with its fifty or sixty thousand Republican voters, representing, as they do, certainly one-half the intelligence and property of this community, we have not a single Representative in the popular branch of the Congress of the United States. If it be true, friends, as our Democratic friends say, that change is desirable and reform necessary, here certainly is a splendid opportunity to inaugurate both. Let me thank you again for the honor of the nomination, and I assure you that no proper or legitimate effort will be spared to make it a successful one.

Anson G. McCook was born in Steubenville, Ohio. He is a brother of Gen. Edward M. McCook, and Commander R. S. McCook of the Navy. He was educated in the common schools of Columbiana County, and in 1854 crossed the Plains to California and remained there until 1859, when he returned to Ohio. Upon the call for troops in the Spring of 1861, he raised the first company in Eastern Ohio, and was mustered into the three months' service as Captain in the Second Ohio Infantry. He thus served through the campaign with the first troops in the field from Ohio, and was present at the first battle of Bull Run. When the regiment was reorganized for the three years' service he was commissioned as Major and was promoted successively to Lieutenant-Colonel and Colonel. He served with the Army of the Cumberland, and was engaged always with credit and sometimes with distinction, at Perryville, Stone River, Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Mission Ridge, Resaca, Peach Tree Creek, and in all the other hard fought battles of the Atlanta Campaign. He was mustered out with the regiment Oct. 10, 1864. In March, 1865, the Governor of Ohio tendered him the Colonelcy of the One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Ohio. He accepted the position and moved with the regiment to the Valley of Virginia. In the Summer of 1865 he was made Brevet Brigadier-General for "meritorious services," in the language of the order announcing promotion from March 13, 1865.

Gen. McCook came to New-York about four years ago, to engage in the practice of his profession as a lawyer. He is now interested in the publication of the City Register.

GEN. ARTHUR AND MR. E. B. HART.

A CORRECTION OF CERTAIN STATEMENTS REPORTED TO HAVE BEEN MADE AT THE MEETING OF FRIDAY.

The reports which appeared in the morning papers of yesterday of the meeting of the Anti-Tammany Conference Committee on Friday night, betray the inaccuracies almost inseparable from an attempt to give in detail the proceedings of a secret meeting. In the reports referred to it was set forth that Mr. Emanuel B. Hart had a conference with Gen. Arthur, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Nominations of the Republican Convention, and that the latter gentleman asserted that no coalition could take place between the Republicans and Democrats, unless some other selections than those of Mr. Green for Mayor and Mr. O'Brien for Sheriff were made by the Anti-Tammany Democrats. No such assertion was made by Gen. Arthur, and no conference took place between Gen. Arthur and Mr. Hart. Mr. Hart called on Gen. Arthur on Friday, and was informed that the Republican Convention had not appointed a conference committee. A conversation then ensued between the gentlemen on political matters, during which Gen. Arthur told Mr. Hart that he [Arthur] had no authority whatever from the Republican Convention to confer with the Anti-Tammany organization, and that there had been no committee appointed to confer either with the Anti-Tammanyites or the other organizations at the meetings at the Astor House. When Mr. Hart asked why the Republicans had not appointed a conference committee, Gen. Arthur said it was the prevailing sentiment of the Republican Convention that as a matter of political policy simply it would not be best to indorse Mr. Green, as it might injuriously affect the interests of the party in regard to their national and State tickets. If it were not for that feeling, Gen. Arthur thought that the Republicans would be strongly in favor of indorsing Mr. Green. In reference to the gentleman put forward by the Anti-Tammanyites for the Shrievalty, Gen. Arthur told Mr. Hart that a great many Republicans thought it would be difficult to obtain Republican support for Mr. O'Brien. For these and other reasons, Mr. Hart was informed, no conference committee had been appointed by the Republican Convention. No expression of his own personal opinion was given by Gen. Arthur to Mr. Hart, but only a statement of what seemed to him to be the prevailing sentiment of the Republican Convention in regard to a conference with other bodies, and in no manner intended to be taken by any political organization as a basis for their action. The feeling in the Republican Convention toward Mr. Green as a candidate for Mayor was represented by Gen. Arthur to be very friendly, and were it not for the complications which arise from the fact of the County ticket being on the same ballot with the State ticket, and the danger of making up a County ticket partly Democratic for Republicans to vote at a Presidential election, he had no doubt Mr. Green would receive the indorsement of the Republicans. The matter of Mr. Grady's nomination by the Republicans has not yet been decided on, and it is possible that he may yet be made the Republican nominee.

NOMINATIONS FOR ASSEMBLY.

The Republican Assembly Convention of the Tenth District met last evening and nominated Joseph Hoffman for Assemblyman.

The Independent Republican Association of the Sixteenth Assembly District last evening unanimously nominated for Assembly Frederick Hagemeyer.

The Republicans of the First District, Jersey City, have renominated William A. Lewis for Assembly.

The Tammany Convention of the Seventh Assembly District met last evening and nominated Christopher Flecker for Assemblyman.

THOMAS' SYMPHONY CONCERTS.

Mr. Thomas gave the first of his symphony concerts, this season, at Steinway Hall, yesterday evening. The performance was rather more protracted than usual, for it did not terminate until 11 o'clock, but it was certainly one of the finest ever given. The affair opened with the Eighth Symphony, which was exquisitely played. The second movement, an allegretto scherzando, and the final division, an allegro vivace, have been rendered again and again as separate numbers, but the work, as a whole, is not too frequently executed. Its brightness and vivacity lost nothing through its treatment by Mr. Thomas' forces, last night. The pretty and almost humorous second movement was handled with wonderful feeling, and in point of crispness and sparkle, the delivery of the last allegro could not possibly be improved upon. After the symphony, Mme. Schiller performed Schubert's fantasia in C, opus 15, arranged for piano and orchestra by Liszt. The great virtuoso has, in this instance, subordinated himself to the composer of the original piece with uncommon taste and modesty, and Schubert's delicious though sometimes rather incomplete melodies, are not crushed out of all semblance by the orchestration of the period. In its entirety, the fantasia is not very shapely, but we do not know that symmetry ought to be exacted of a composition bearing that name. It is, however, replete with lovely if fragmentary thoughts, and Liszt, as mentioned above, has almost continuously kept the orchestra within bounds, by assigning to it responses and discreet accompaniments. Mme. Schiller's playing was never heard to greater advantage, in our judgment, than last evening. As a rule, this artist is more delicate than vigorous, and her sentiment is seldom agreeable. Yesterday her execution was quite remarkable in point of feeling, tone, and power; her delivery was uncommonly spirited, her octave-passages were surprisingly clear and strong, and what we may term the embroidery of the themes in the adagio, and the brilliant portions of the finale were brought out with rare cleanness, elasticity and vivacity of touch. An intermission followed the fantasia, and then Mr. Thomas addressed himself to the principal task of the night—one of the most arduous, it can be safely affirmed, he has ever set himself. Hector Berlioz's dramatic symphony of "Romeo and Juliet" is a doubly interesting achievement. It is not only of unquestionable beauty and impressiveness, but it is worthy of study as representative of a composer who was a quarter of a century in advance of his contemporaries. Liszt has surely not added to the resources of the orchestra since Berlioz's epoch, nor has Herr Wagner's talent added considerably to its effects. If "Les Préludes" and "Lohengrin" are still music of the future, "Romeo and Juliet" must be kept in reserve for posterity. This, happily, will not be necessary, in the United States at least, and although it is doubtful if, for many years, works of art requiring thought and repeated public rehearsals for their comprehension will be popular in the most literal sense of the word, it is undeniable that many thousand dilettanti will be found, who by training and habit are prepared to enjoy their recitals. "Romeo and Juliet" is defined by Berlioz as "neither a concert-opera nor a cantata, but a symphony with chorus." The composer then proceeds to make known his intentions and plan as follows:

"It the voices are introduced almost at the outset, it is in order to prepare the mind of the hearer for the dramatic scenes about to be illustrated by the orchestra, as also for the sake of the gradual musical development of the choral masses, whose too abrupt entrance might detract from the unity of the work. Thus, the Prologue, in which, as in Shakespeare's play, the chorus indicates the action, is recited by but fourteen voices. Afterward, we hear (behind the scenes) the chorus of Capulets (men only;) later, in the funeral ceremony, the Capulets, both men and women. At the opening of the Finale we have the two entire choruses of Capulets and Montagues, and Friar Lawrence; at its close, the three choruses combined. This last scene of the reconciliation of the two families belongs strictly in the domain of the opera, or the oratorio. It has never, since Shakespeare's time, been represented on any stage; but it is too beautiful, too musical, and too well adapted to crown a work of this kind for the composer to think of treating it otherwise. If, in the celebrated 'balcony' and 'graveyard' scenes the dialogus of the two lovers, Juliet's 'asides' and Romeo's passionate outbursts, are not sung; if, in fine, the duets of love and despair are given to the orchestra, the reasons for this are numerous and evident. First, that alone would suffice to justify the composer, because it is the case of a symphony, not of an opera. Again, as duets of this kind have been vocally treated a thousand times and by the greatest masters, another kind of setting was attempted, from prudence and as a matter of curiosity. Moreover, the very sublimity of this love rendered its representation so hazardous for the musician that he had to give to his imagination a latitude which the positive sense of the words sung would not have admitted, and to recur to instrumental language, a language which is richer, more varied, less determinate, and, by its very vagueness, incomparably more effective for the present purpose."

The symphony opens with a brief agitato movement, in which the string-passages are interrupted and accented by vigorous unisonal progressions of the trombones. Then comes the prologue, in form of a choral recitative, which is unaccompanied and almost monotonic. A few bars from the harp separate this from a short recitative for contralto, and then the chorus resumes its recitative, the lines referring to Romeo being emphasized by a theme for violoncello, typical of the personage throughout the composition. The contralto's strophes, which succeed this number, are melodious, and a simple harp accompaniment, with occasional breathings of the wood instruments, heightens now and then its delicate color. The tenor solo, descriptive of the dream of Queen Mab, with its choral interruptions, is a less felicitous effort, though its quaintness makes it rather pleasing, but some superb symphonic writing occurs further on, in the pages illustrative of "Romeo, alone," and the chorus of Capulets, heard from without, and gradually dying away in the distance, is prettily impressive. The number which comes next and which suggests the "balcony scene" in the tragedy is, to our mind, the most delicious in the symphony. Its themes are of exquisite beauty, and their treatment endows them with a sensuousness rivalling that of Shakespeare's sensuous poem itself, the Romeo-phrase recurring again and again, until it haunts the ear, and numberless sweet and brief dialogues between the instruments realizing the exchange of lovers' vows. The "Queen Mab scherzo"—the one familiar part of the symphony—follows. The subsequent number, a funeral march in the fugue style, at first instrumental, with occasional entrances of the voices on one and the same tone, and afterward vocal, the monotonic phrases being now allotted to the orchestra, is less happy, in our judgment, and the grand scene, showing Romeo at the tomb of the Capulets, and usually omitted abroad, because of the lack of imaginativeness of general audiences, according to M. Berlioz, though magnificently instrumentated, did not impress us so profoundly. At this stage of proceedings the chorus resumes its labors, and the finale begins, the Capulets and the Montagues discovering the lovers dead in the tomb, and Friar Lawrence, in tuneful numbers, narrating the story of their woes and end. The interpetation of this elaborate work, to which such a notice as can be written after its second performance cannot hope to do justice, left absolutely nothing to be desired. The orchestra surpassed itself, and whether the delicate tracery of the "Queen Mab scherzo" or the dramatic coloring of "Romeo at the tomb" occupied its attention, it was not for an instant wanting in lightness or force of execution or in precision. Mr. Thomas' chorus also did exceedingly well, their enunciation of the words being marvelously distinct, while their singing in the peroration of the symphony, where recitative makes way for dramatic utterances, was excellent. Miss Antonia Henne, Herr Remmertz, and Mr. Werrenrath were the soloists, the lady's performance meriting special commendation. Steinway Hall was filled, as it was fit it should be, to overflowing.

THIS EVENING'S CONCERTS.

Mr. Fryer's fourth Sunday concert at Booth's Theatre, this evening, is likely, from its programme, to be exceedingly attractive. It will reintroduce Signor Mazzoleni and Mme. Ortolani-Brignoli, who have not been heard here for some years, and it will also be the occasion of the début of Master Gianco Mazzoleni, a young pianist, upon whose execution a great deal of praise has already been bestowed. Besides these artists, Mr. M. Arbuckle and Mr. A. E. Stoddard are to take part in the concert, which, it will be seen, is really full of promise.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.

A few more representations only of Mr. Boucicault's freshest work are to occur at Wallack's Theatre. "Forbidden Fruit" will, indeed, be succeeded by the same dramatist's "Shaughraun," but, well-constructed and entertaining a play though it be, it is doubtful if its audiences will depart half as delighted as at the close of the piece now before the public, whose merriment over its scenes is almost continuous. "The Shaughraun," however, must be brought out on Thursday week, and, hence, "Forbidden Fruit" can have but a small number of additional representations. The reader who would pass a hilarious evening ought to bear the fact in mind.

FIFTH AVENUE THEATRE.

"Life" is to be refreshed this week, by the infusion of several new incidents, and by the assignment, to Mr. Lewis, of a few additional and ludicrous duties. "Life" will certainly not bear severe criticism as a work of art, but no claims to special literary excellence have ever been put forth on its behalf. It addresses itself almost wholly to the audiences of strangers who now fill the City theatres, and who, weary of travel and sight-seeing, desire a few hours' diversion. They find the desideratum at Mr. Daly's popular house, and, hence, the "run" of "Life." When the influence of the Exhibition passes away, and a normal condition of affairs is restored, we doubt not that the manager of the Fifth Avenue Theatre will supply the local play-goer with plays and performances meriting more serious consideration. The announcement that "As You Like It" and "The School for Scandal" will be brought out in November, can be accepted as an earnest of Mr. Daly's foresight and judgment.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. Barnum's show continues to flourish at Gilmore's Garden.

The wonders of the Aquarium are constantly increasing in number; the place is open morning, afternoon, and evening.

"Ching Chow Hi," the new operetta by Offenbach, figures upon the programme at Kelly & Leon's Opera-house, this week.

A concert by Slavin's "Original Georgia Jubilee Singers" may be attended at the Grand Opera-house this evening.

The San Francisco Minstrels renew their programme weekly, but its impression—bright and hilarious—suffers no change.

Miss Kate Claxton brought her engagement at the Union Square Theatre to a close, yesterday evening. She goes hence to Toronto, Boston, and Philadelphia.

A liberal variety programme will be interpreted this week at the Olympic Theatre. The drama entitled "Rosina, or the Temptations of City Life," is to be part of its elements.

The Union Square Theatre announces continued performances of "The Two Orphans," and later on, the production of "Miss Multon," the new French version of "East Lynne."

The complete programme for the approaching final rehearsal and first concert of the Philharmonic Society is to include Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, with the first act of "Die Walküre."

The long-promised new ballet which is to vastly heighten, if expectation is realized, the already manifold attractions of "Sardanapalus," will be brought out at Booth's Theatre to-morrow evening.

Mr. George Wood is seeking a site for a theatre in the vicinity of Thirty-fourth street and Broadway. Rumor has it that he intends building an establishment after the fashion of Astley's in London.

A concert is to be given at Chickering Hall, on Friday evening next. It will enlist the services of Messrs. S. B. Mills, Warren, Humphries, Sohst, and Lumbard, and those of Mmes. Salvotti and Anne Bulkley Hills.

"Tom Cobb" will be acted throughout this week at the Park Theatre, but "Sweethearts" will be replaced on the programme on and after to-morrow by "Adam and Eve," a novel work, drawn, we learn, from Gallic sources.

A new burlesque, having for its subject "The Two Orphans," will be brought out at the Eagle Theatre to-morrow evening. Messrs. Walters and McKee and Mr. Dave Reed appear at this house, this week, besides the familiar performers.

No change except such as will be caused by the appearance, to-morrow, of Signora Antonini is to be noted in respect of affairs at Niblo's. "Baba" is still the attraction there, and a sufficiently potent one to make preparations for a modification of programme unnecessary, just now, at all events.

To-morrow evening is set apart at Wood's Museum for the benefit of Mr. James Barnes, stage director of the house. "Escaped from Sing Sing" and "The Adopted Child" will be the attractions in the evening, and, in the afternoon, "Neota, the Avenger," and "Don Cæsar de Bazan" will be represented.

THE WEATHER.

PROBABILITIES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29—1 A. M.—For the Middle States, rising, followed by falling barometer. winds mostly from north-east to south east, generally warmer, cloudy weather, and rain areas.

For New-England, rising or stationary, followed by falling barometer, winds mostly from north to east, warmer, partly cloudy weather, possibly followed by rain areas.

THE MIDLAND (N. J.) ACCIDENT.

Coroners Van Dan, Bylant, and Meyers yesterday held an inquest over the remains of John Duen, the engineer, and Patrick McCuliffe, the fireman, who were killed Friday by the fall of the Midland Railroad train through the bridge at Hawthorne. The jurors rendered the following verdict:

We, the undersigned, jurors in the case of the sudden death of Patrick McCuliffe and John Duen, do find that they came to their death by the falling of the Midland Railroad bridge at Hawthorne, on the 27th day of October, 1876; the falling of which was caused by the jumping off the track of a coal car that (the car) striking the solid west post of the bridge, knocking it off the abutment: an accident on the part of the road altogether unavoidable. We therefore exonerate the officers of the Midland Railroad from all censure.

The survivors of the accident, who are in the hospital, are in a fair way of recovery.

J. S. P.'S REPLY TO F. A. B. R. S.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

I do not see that the note of F. A. B. R. S. in your paper of the 24th, criticising my letter published in THE TIMES of the 15th inst., requires any reply from me. My method of stating my expenses is found fault with, to which the best reply would be to reprint what I wrote on the subject, but I do not think this is necessary. I shall simply request those who think that I am criticised to my own disadvantage to again read my letter and compare it carefully with what F. A. B. R. S. says in reply, for as far as I am concerned the case has gone to the jury. I am satisfied to be judged by what you have already printed.

Let me further say that the criticism in the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth points is to such a great degree personal in its character as to make it better not to reply to it.

N. B.—I must apologize for attempting an occasional jest. The result has been disastrous. Q. E. D. J. S. P.

THE FATE OF THREE CLERGYMEN.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 28.—A special dispatch to the Globe-Democrat, dated Little Rock, Oct. 27, says: "Three Methodist ministers, while riding circuit in Pope County, Ark., were shot from the brush yesterday by two illicit distillers named Hughes and Hale. It is believed they were mistaken for revenue officers coming to arrest them, as warrants are out for their arrest for illicit distilling. One of the ministers was mortally wounded, and died two hours after being shot. The other two are seriously, if not mortally, wounded. There is a large number of illicit distillers in that part of the State, six of whom have been convicted during this week in the United States Circuit Court for this district."

CHICKERING PIANOS AT THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

Messrs. CHICKERING & SONS have been awarded a Medal and Diploma at the Centennial Exhibition, and the report of the judges, verified by the proper authorities of the Centennial Commission, A. F. Goshorn, Director General, Gen. J. R. Hawley, President, and A. R. Boteler, Acting Secretary, is more emphatic and more conclusive in all that relates to the requirements of a first-class Piano than has been accorded to any of their competitors.

Messrs. CHICKERING & SONS have produced a Piano that combines the greatest power consistent with the most delicate, sympathetic and singing quality of tone, a most susceptible, quick and elastic touch, and highly-finished workmanship. During the past fifty-three years they have striven to attain these ends, and now have the pleasure of submitting the following copy of the Official Report, with the assurance that their claims will be as fully sustained by the public as they have been acknowledged by the judges:

OFFICIAL REPORT ON THE CHICKERING PIANOS.

"Their Grand Piano is of a quick, elastic touch, of broad and clear resonance, with the utmost power of utterance that its class affords consistently with securing a pure, delicate, and singing quality of tone.

Their other instruments—specimens of their every-day production, possess the highest qualities in fullness of volume, delicacy of tone, elastic response of touch, with thoroughness of workmanship. These several characteristics, and the acknowledged excellence attained by this firm, entitles them to an award."

H. K. OLIVER,
Chairman of the Jury.

Since the Exhibition in London, in 1851, of their full iron frame Grand Piano, which has been copied by all the makers in this country and Europe, their Pianos have been acknowledged as the Standard Instruments of the World. The great master, Dr. Franz Liszt, speaking of the CHICKERING PIANOS, said: "To be just, I must declare them perfectissimes, (superlatively perfect.")

THE HOUSEHOLD.

HOW TO REDUCE EXPENSES.

Fruits peculiar to Autumn are plentiful in the markets. Good pears are becoming scarce. The best that can be bought come from California. Apples and grapes are abundant, and so are bananas and oranges from Southern groves. Game is at present very appetizing, and there is a large variety in the markets, among which may be enumerated wild ducks—canvas-back from the Chesapeake Bay, and mallard, red-head, and teal from different quarters—partridges, grouse, quail, rabbits, hares, and venison, all of which are arriving in good condition from the South-east and West. Poultry is daily getting to be a more popular article of diet, and the dealers in it are having a foretaste of the golden harvest which they will reap next month. Just now there is a little more of it sent here than is needed, and prices are quite low. In a few weeks there is good reason to believe that it will be as cheap as meat. The last mentioned edible is selling at reasonable rates, and the markets are supplied with as good beef, mutton, lamb, veal, and pork as can be bought in any quarter of the globe. Fish is very plentiful. Milk, butter, and cheese are in excessive supply, and sell cheaply in a wholesale way. The markets are very liberally stocked with vegetables of all kinds in season.

It would be a good thing for families intimately connected to club together and buy what they consider would be sufficient for their use for the Winter in large quantios. There are, it should be remembered, several gradations of prices in the markets, namely the producer's, the commission merchant and wholesale dealer's, the jobber's, and the grocer's. All have to make a profit, and those who deal with the grocer must pay the highest prices that can be obtained. By clubbing together and appointing some individual to act as a special agent, a number of families, with little more inconvenience than they would experience by dealing with the grocer, could buy directly from the producer, or, at least, from second hands, and save money. The trouble of marketing in this way, with market express wagons always at command, would not be very great, and the reduction of household expenses in these hard times would probably be a sufficient compensation.

ANSWERS.

WELSH RAREBIT.—One teacupful of chopped cheese, one teacupful milk, one egg, butter size of butternut; boil milk, butter, and cheese till smooth paste; add egg, well beaten, and turn at once upon half slices of toast well buttered. Serve hot, with mustard to add if desired. A little flour of mustard is added to the mixture while boiling if agreeable to all tastes. Have care about curdling the milk by too hot a fire.

WELSH RAREBITS—II.—Put a little milk in a saucepan and set it on a moderate fire; cut up in slices some new cheese, and put into the saucepan; also stir the whole thoroughly until the cheese is melted and well mixed with the milk. Only a small portion of milk is necessary, say about one-eighth. Have some pieces of toast nicely buttered and on the bottom of a dish. When the cheese is thoroughly melted and mixed, pour it upon the toast and serve while hot. A golden buck requires a poached egg on top.—W. M. F.

SOUFFLE.—A French dish. Take four eggs, beat the whites and yolks separately until an exceedingly thick froth is formed; then mix the two and add one-half a cup of powdered sugar, and one-half a spoonful of extract of vanilla, and stir in quickly; pour this into a deep dish and bake for fifteen or twenty minutes in a moderate oven. This dish should be made and be ready to put in the oven just as dinner commences, in order to serve while hot. It falls when cold.—W. M. F.

LETTUCE SALAD.—The yolk of two hard-boiled and two raw eggs, large tablespoonful of dry mustard; rub together and add gradually fine olive-oil till very stiff; thin with juice of small lemon; add more oil till two-thirds of a large bottle is used; salt to taste, and add small wine-glass of good vinegar. When prepared it should be of the consistance of paste, nearly stiff enough to hold the spoon upright; add capers, if for lobster, and olives also, if for chicken salad; dress just before serving; ten minutes will "flatten" the best dressing ever made if allowed to stand on celery or lettuce. Be sure the oil is perfect.

SHINY BUNS.—It L. C. S. will brush her buns over with white of egg, it will give them a shine.

CRANBERRY JELLY.—To a quart of cranberries put one tea-cup of sugar, a very little water; cook them until very soft, strain, and they are done; do not cook in tin, as it spoils the color; earthen or porcelain is better.

TO MOLD CRANBERRIES.—One cup of water, two cups of sugar, and three cups of cranberries; boil well, pour into molds, and stand in a cool place until perfectly cold.—GILMANTON.

BLANCHING ALMONDS.—Almonds may be blanched by first shelling them, then putting them in a deep dish and pouring boiling water over them. Pour off the water in about one minute; the skins may then be easily removed by the fingers. The idea of blanching is to remove the skin before the almond is shelled, so that the brown skin, which is tough, may not enter the compound for which they are used. The flavor is about the same, but the appearance is much better.

BLANCHED ALMONDS.—II. Take almonds from their shells, as bought at a grocer's, and cover with boiling water; in a few moments the brown skin will readily peel off, and the nuts are white and ready for pounding in a mortar or chopping for use: if not ready to use at once, cover with cold water till required.

TO BLANCH ALMONDS.—III. Remove the shells and throw the nuts in boiling water for a moment; spread on a plate to cool, when it will be found that the skins will peel off readily. This receipt is for almonds as they are bought at the grocers.—MRS. J. H. S.

WINE STAINS ON MARBLE.—Let the slab be placed where it will get as warm as it will bear, cover it with gum arabic dissolved as a paste. I have tried it on marble tables where it has been used, and found that the stains could be removed upon two or three applications.—N. K. G. C.

WINDOW GARDENING.—I have two window boxes which are particularly fine. In them I have begonias, coleus, geraniums, oxalis, pinks, sweet allyssum, mignonette, petunias, fuchsias, German ivy, corn ivy, money-wort, Wandering Jew, &c. Besides these I have baskets and stands and window shelves. First, I pot them in August, the latter part of the month. Plants do not like being disturbed, and usually resent removal or repotting. They will drop their leaves and take a rest a number of weeks before sending out a full leaf again. So by the time I wish to bring them in they are in good condition. Secondly, for soil I take two-thirds mold from under sods out of a vacant lot, and one-third rotted manure, also a little additional sand. Sift them all through a coal-sieve, then pour boiling water over the earth. Be particular to use pots the size of the roots, and not to fill the top of the plant—have them scrubbed well; put stones in the bottom of the pots. I take special care to press the earth firmly just about the stalk, and repeat pressing the earth close up about it as the water washes it down; also when I take a plant from the border to pot it, I am careful to disturb the roots as little as possible, and I dip it for a moment in water before putting it in the pot, holding the root carefully in my hand. From the middle of September I begin to bring them in so as to get them acclimated to the house temperature in a measure; if you wait until fires are lighted to bring plants in from the cold air, the change is too great; they are sure to lose their leaves and look like scare-crows for weeks. I water them always in the morning, just before the sun comes on them, using quite warm water, being careful to give only as much as is needed; I keep water in the saucers of the callas, vines, and moss plant; give this last plant plenty of water and strong manure once in it at the same time. I always sprinkle my boxes, never pour water on them, using my hand as a sprinkler; in extremely cold days I give no water, unless there is danger of their drooping. When the earth looks close and baked I turn it up with an old fork; this keeps the soil fine and soft and the water easily penetrates to the roots. Pick off every leaf that begins to turn yellow; do not water much till it is well watered. On very cold nights put newspapers between the plants and the window. Never open the window directly on them. I do not find this service to harden them, as some suppose. The rush of cold air only chills and blights them, stopping their growth. I have the room carefully ventilated and have the air kept pure, and find that to be all sufficient. At night I leave the room doors all open if it be not of extreme weather. I wash the large leaved plants with a sponge and warm water about once a month—also fill a tub with warm water and dip the plant boldly in it, and gently swash it back and forth, and it will come out of the bath fresh and green, freed from dust and insects. If insects should get on them pulverize them, by means of a bellows, with white hellibore. Once or twice during the Winter I water them with bone-dust dissolved in water, using quantities according to directions obtained with the bone-dust. This can be procured at any large florist's. This treatment is according to no regular rules, but gained by the experience and observation of years.—AUNT ADDIE.

BACHELORS' CURTAINS.—A very pretty and inexpensive curtain for a bachelor's bed-room windows may be made as follows: Get twelve or fourteen yards of fine, even, unbleached muslin, cut it the length from top of window to floor, put on a border at turkey-red about five inches wide, have a narrow gilt cornice, or else take a smooth board about eight inches wide, cover it with a plaited ruffle of the muslin with a narrow border of the red. Three and a half yards of turkey-red will make the border for the two windows; cost altogether, about $3 50.

TO TAKE FOLDS OUT OF VELVET.—First moisten the velvet slightly on the wrong side, then stretch it between the hands and draw the back across a hot iron in order to cause the steam formed through the velvet above. This will raise the nap, and thereby take out the folds and creases.—W. M. F.

TO DRIVE OFF ANTS.—Place a small saucer of ground cloves where they are troublesome and they will quickly disappear.

QUESTIONS.

Will some one give me a receipt for "chicken croquettes," such as they have in restaurants. The inside is soft and creamy while the outside is crisp and tender.—M. C. C.

Will some one inform me how to crystallize grasses? Also, how to preserve Autumn leaves, and how to make violet ink?—CONSTANT READER.

Will some one inform me what will remove indelible ink without injuring the cloth?—I. I.

Will some one tell me how to cook carrots the German way, and as you get them in the New-York restaurants? Also how to make cheese-cakes?—MARION.

I would like to know how to use salt and lime in making chloride of lime.—KIT.

Can some one inform me how the proofs of photographs can be kept from fading?—MAUDE C. G.

Can you oblige a house-keeper with a good receipt for restoring black marble clocks to original lustre?—MRS. M. Z.

Please give me a good receipt for plum pudding.

Will some one please give a tested receipt for almond sponge cake?—AN OLD SUBSCRIBER.

Will you inform me how vinegar for table use should be made from the juice of green wild grapes which has been standing over one year in cellar, and which as yet has not come to vinegar?—PATRON.

Can some reader of THE TIMES give a receipt for canning pumpkins and squashes?—O. W.

Will some one inform me how to curl ostrich tips from which the dampness has taken out the curl?—ONE MORE UNFORTUNATE.

PHIL. KEARNY'S LAST LETTER.

FRANK APOLOGY FOR A HASTY WORD—HIS APPRECIATION OF THE GERMAN SOLDIERS.

From the Cincinnati Commercial, Oct. 23.

It was on the second day of the second battle of Bull Run, in a lull in the battle, that the chivalrous Phil. Kearny, in his saddle, writing on scraps of note paper with a stump of a lead-pencil, dashed off the following to Gen. Von Steinwehr, now of this city. In the course of a conversation with Gen. Von Steinwehr, at the Grand Hotel yesterday, a reporter of the Commercial learned that he had this letter in his possession, and requested of him a copy of it for print. The request was granted. In explanation of it, Gen. Von Steinwehr said:

"Gen. Kearny was a noble, chivalrous man, as well as a dashing saberur. I had taken a liberty with him that stung him to the quick. We were warm personal friends, of years' experience of each other. I was in command of a division in Gen. Sigel's corps. All my batteries were engaged, and Gen. Kearny's were at rest. Seeing where good use could be made of another battery, I had sent Capt. Schultz, of my staff, to order one of Kearny's batteries to a point. When we happened to meet next Gen. Kearny merely bowed, sulky, to me. He had addressed Capt. Schultz, in my presence, according to his idea of what he considered an unwarrantable liberty. But his generous nature relented, as you will see, and at his first opportunity he wrote this note, probably the last thing he ever wrote, which was handed to me by his aide on the field. You will see that he chose to consider the act that of Gen. Sigel, who was in command of the corps:"

BATTLE-FIELD, Aug. 30, 1862.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I learned to me afterward that I must have appeared very unpardonably ungracious in saying that Gen. Sigel had overstepped military bounds (without an excuse) in taking a battery of my division. But the question was decided by Gen. McClellan. You know my friendship and esteem, so sincere for you. What I said in reference to being commanded by an officer of a foreign country in my own land, however happy to serve under them in their own country, (as when I was with the French,) you must not misunderstand. It is individual feats of country, which with me is no doubt as much too strong, as you must have observed it is generally, with many others, much too weak.

I owe you this explanation as an apology. But if I committed myself, believe me that I was (you know my sentiments so well of high admiration for the distinguished German officers with us and of their noble services as military men) not sufficiently on my guard to disguise a something of pique I naturally had toward Gen. Sigel until I had my first interview with him last night, and found him so obliging.

It was that I, at the ontset, insisted that our German brethren should not be as German regiments, but as American regiments. I should suppose that this must have been their own views generally.

Gen. Sigel took the liberty of publishing an extract of a private letter to the Governor of New Jersey, and it struck me as unnecessarily making me, by misconstruing my meaning, unpopular with a most gallant set of men who have seen service and discipline abroad. But perhaps I am in error. Still it prejudiced me. I fancied Gen. Sigel extremely arrogant, instead of being what he seems, most kind and considerate. Therefore, my dear General, do not let me forfeit one particle of your long friendship. And as I owe it to him, do for me at once what I shall do later en personne, make my full apology to the old acquaintance. (Capt. Schultz, and tell him that I should not have criticised his fulfilling the mission of a superior General. He had out to obey.

I have taken this first occasion, in a lull in our fighting, to make you, my dear Baron, this amende honorable.

My loss yesterday was enormously severe—more so than in almost any previous battle.

Most truly yours, P. KEARNY.

To General the Baron VON STEINWEHR, commanding Second Division, —— Corps.

RELICS OF BURGOYNE'S ARMY.

The Charlottesville (Va.) Jeffersonian says: "George Carr, Esq., informed us the other day that one of his farm hands, in plowing a field on the farm, brought to the surface a gold coin, coined more than one hundred years ago. This farm of Mr. Carr is situated seven miles nearly north from Charlottesville, and is the place where the Army surrendered by Gen. Burgoyne in the Revolution were located as prisoners of war, and this coin was undoubtedly lost by one of the prisoners. The foundations of the cabins in which these prisoners lived can be seen at this day, and in the forests are seen the graves of those who died while they were quartered there. We believe the fields retain the names given them at that time, as 'head-quarters,' &c. When the prisoners were removed from the county the place was purchased by the late Garland Garth, Esq., and he said there was not a tree left on the place. The forests in the vicinity had all been cut down and used for fuel. The forests that are now to be found on this farm have grown up since the prisoners left. Quite a number of the prisoners remained and married, and their decendants are among our most industrious citizens. In the list of old men, published two weeks since, are the names of two brothers, one being sixty-three, and the other eighty-one years of age, whose father was one of the Burgoyne prisoners."

A REMINISCENCE OF THE BURDELL MURDER.

The Fishkill Journal says: "The noted J. Snodgrass, who figured prominently in the Burdell-Cunningham case in New-York City in the year 1857, recently turned up in Wappinger's Falls. Dr. Burdell at the time of the murder was forty-five years old. The inmates of the house besides the deceased, to whom it belonged, were Mrs. Emma Augusta Cunningham, a widow; her daughters, Augusta and Helen; John J. Eckell, who was a boarder; a young fellow of eighteen named Snodgrass, a friend of the Cunninghams and attached to the daughter Helen. A few weeks ago Snodgrass applied to P. H. Shaughness, at his oost and shoe establishment, gave his name as George Reed, and requested work. He was employed, and proved himself an apt workman. The other evening, having imbibed pretty freely, he became talkative, and during the conservation a party accused him of being Snodgrass. He confessed, and asked that the matter be kept quiet. Snodgrass, the following day, related the circumstances to Mr. Shaughness, and informed him that he would leave the village. Mr. Shaughness tried to prevail upon him to remain, but he answered, 'Now that I am known, I could not rest contented, as the finger of scorn would be pointed at me.' Snodgrass departed for parts unknown, after thanking Mr. Shaughness for the kindness bestowed upon him."

THE PIPE LINE CHARTER ATTACKED.

The Pittsburg Commercial of Monday contains the following: "Readers are familiar with the scheme for the construction of a pipe line from the oil regions in Butler County to the sea-board at New-York, for the purpose of conveying crude oil, as is now done on a limited scale in the oil districts. Important interests are involved in the project, and the companies owning the various railway lines which have been constructed mainly for the carrying of the oil product are specially concerned. It was not presumed or expected that these corporations would suffer the loss of such an important item of trade without carefully scrutinizing the charter of the competing corporation and the powers which they propose exercising under it. This has already been done, and an application has been made to Hon. George Lear, Attorney General, and Hon. William McCandless, Secretary of Internal Affairs, on behalf of a number of corporations and private citizens of the State, to file a suggestion for a writ of quo warrante against the Pennsylvania Transportation Company for the purpose of forfeiting its charter. The principal allegations are that the corporation has no legal existence; that if it had a legal existence and valid charter it has not the power of eminent domain for the purpose of taking the property of the citizen for laying down a pipe line; that it has no right to exercise the functions of a common carrier, and no authority to lay down and maintain a line of pipe as contemplated, and that it has committed sundry acts unwarranted by its charter, which are sufficient to work a forfeiture thereof. The Attorney-General has fixed Wednesday next at 11 o'clock, at his office as the time and place for hearing the argument. The Secretary of Internal Revenue sits with him, under the provisions of the act of May 11, 1874, defining his duties."

MILITARY GOSSIP.

An election for Lieutenant-Colonel will take place in the Thirteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, on Friday, Nov. 10, at 8 P. M.

Second Lieut. Richard S. Dinsmore, of Company I, Thirteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, has resigned after a service of thirteen years in this command.

The first annual prize-meeting of the Bay View Rifle Association took place at Buffalo on Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday last. The aggregate value of prizes was $425, distributed among three matches.

The annual inspection of the Fifteenth Battalion, Brooklyn, took place last Friday evening, when it mustered five companies with a total of 193 present, out of an enrolled total of 213 men. Last year it mustered 181, out of a total of 212 enrolled.

At the weekly competition for "champions'" medals at Conlin's gallery last Tuesday evening, the winners of prizes and their scores were as follows: C. E. Blydenburgh, 43; J. B. Blydenburgh, 42; T. C. Banks, 41; P. Lorillard, Jr., 40; C. E. De Forrest, 40; A. B. Dodge, 39; Col. J. S. Loomis, 39. B. S. Brown, 39.

At a meeting of the Board of Officers of the Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, last Monday evening, Mr. Alfred C. Barnes, a member of the Veteran Corps of this command, was elected Major, vice Major Partridge, promoted. Private D. C. Pinney, of Company D, won the "Satterlee" medal, a trophy annually competed for by this company, on a score of 36 out of a possible 50 points; distances, 200 and 500 yards.

The Separate Troop Cavalry, Eleventh Brigade, mustered only forty-six men, out of a total enrollment of fifty-six, last Friday evening; a decrease since the last annual inspection, of four in the number enrolled, and an increase of seven in the number present. The Inspector, Major Hayes, found a very low state of discipline in this command, but thinks that with proper drilling, a good troop might be made of it.

The Gatling Battery of Artillery, Brooklyn, was inspected at the plaza in Prospect Park last Wednesday afternoon. The wind was disagreeably keen, but the day was fine, and the men looked handsome in their modest gray uniforms and fine horses and guns. Such a contrast as the latter present, when compared with the heavy, cumbersome old brass 6 and 12-pounders, which disgrace the other batteries in both divisions, and whose only use is to fire salutes on holidays. Major Hayes, the Inspector, received the review, which was a model in its execution. The battery mustered as follows: Present, 13 officers and non-commissioned officers, and 35 privates; absent, 1 officer and 11 privates; total, 39.

The annual inspection and muster of the Twenty-eighth Regiment, Brooklyn, took place last Monday evening. The result of the muster was as follows:

	Present.	Absent.	Total.
F. and S.	16	0	16
Band	20	0	20

E	26	26	52
G	45	18	63
H	45	6	51
I	22	36	58
Total	308	127	435

In 1875 this regiment mustered 360 present out of a roll of 414, showing an increase of 18 enrolled and a loss of 50 in the number present.

The Forty-seventh Regiment of Williamsburg paraded for inspection and muster last Tuesday, and rather astonished its friends by charging an admission fee of fifty cents, which is a questionable proceeding on the occasion of the most important regimental parade during the year. The result of the muster was as follows:

	Present.	Absent.	Total.

In 1875 this command mustered 357 present out of 448 enrolled, showing a loss this year of 26 in the number present, and 7 in the number enrolled. After the inspection was over the Veteran Association badge was presented to Private Backofen.

The London Standard of a recent date publishes a report of the proceedings attending the formal presentation of the Elcho Shield by the winning team to the Lord Mayor of London at Guildhall. After the ceremony there was a banquet at the Mansion House, during which, in response to a toast, Mr. Parsons, Adjutant of the English "eight," made a speech in which the following remarkable paragraph occurs: "With reference to the late matches in America, he felt that they could not be called representative teams of either Ireland or Scotland. In the latter they missed the names of the Rosses, Dunlop, Malcolm, and others, and with regard to the Irish they were obliged to call themselves the Dublin Club Team because one of their members, Mr. Ward, was an Englishman, who had actually been asked by their Captain to shoot for a place in the English Elcho Shield Team, but who said that he could not do that, his sympathies being so strongly with Ireland, but that the more he looked into his antecedents the more English he was. On this occasion, however, he had fired with the Irish, and had made an excellent score. Under these circumstances they could hardly be called representative, and a United Kingdom Team against a United States Team, might perhaps have been more successful."

The Seventh Regiment paraded for inspection, muster, and review, last Tuesday evening, at its armory. The regiment did not parade as strong as its friends had anticipated it would, but nevertheless a gratifying number was present. Col. Emmons Clark was in command, and Brig. Gen. Varian, of the Third Brigade, was present with his staff to receive the review, which was unexceptionably fine. Major D. D. Wylie, Inspector of the brigade, carefully performed the duties of his office. The muster was as follows:

	Present.	Absent.	Total.
F. and S.	18	0	18
Band	47	0	47
First Company	75	3	78
Second Company	104	9	113

Seventh Company	71	14	85
Eighth Company	111	4	115
Ninth Company	109	5	114
Tenth Company	106	23	129
Total	893	88	981

In 1875 the regiment mustered 839 present out of a roll of 971, showing an increase this year of 10 in the number enrolled and 54 in the number present. Among the prominent spectators were Inspector Gen. John B. Woodward, Brig. Gen. Frederick Vilmar, and staff of the Second Brigade.

The members of the National Guard, who have been in the habit of visiting Creedmoor, will probably remember the lively waiter at the Century Hotel, who was known as "Frenchy." His name was Gustave Ballion, and he resides at No. 16 Spruce street, in this City. On Sunday morning, the 15th inst., "Frenchy" assisted a Police officer in the capture of a thief in Bayard street, and in doing so, received several severe wounds in various parts of the body, he was removed to his home, where his wounds were examined by a surgeon, and pronounced of a serious character. For two days he was unconscious, but, under the careful nursing of his wife, he is now in a fair way to recovery. "Frenchy" was a gunsmith by occupation, but for the past year has been unable to obtain any steady employment at his trade, and, as his wife was a sufferer from neuralgia, his odd jobs as waiter have failed to support them, and leave any surplus, consequently the unfortunate couple are very poor. A few charitable people have kindly sent their contributions to this office for the relief of "Frenchy"—in all $12. Application by Mrs. Ballion to the Charity Commissioners for assistance was refused by Mr. Kellock, and if the babitues of Creedmoor do not assist the unfortunate man, he is in a fair way of suffering considerably during the next few weeks. As the man was injured while assisting a policeman in arresting a public enemy, it is only fair that the public should assist the unfortunate man to his feet again.

The separate Troop Cavalry, Major Karl Klein, commanding, has commenced a movement toward obtaining a new armory, or at least an armory more suited to the uses of a cavalry company than the one it now occupies. The principal objection to the building which it occupies at the present time is that no arrangements have ever made for heating the drill-room, and at the only time the troop needs it the weather is usually so cold that it is impossible to drill there. Another objection to the building is its location. The members of the troop are mostly engaged in business in the lower wards, and cannot be brought to go so far up-town as Forty-fifth street, where its armory is located, very often; consequently, while there is plenty of money in the treasury, according from the dues of delinquent members, the effectiveness of the troop as a military organization is much impaired. Major Klein laid these objections to the armory now occupied by his command before the Armory Committee of the Board of Aldermen last Wednesday, and suggested that when the lease of the present armory expires the troop should be assigned to the "Riding School," in West Thirteenth street, the Head-quarters of Gen. Shaler and staff, of the First Division. The location is excellent; the accommodation ample; and, besides, an opportunity will there be afforded the troop for mounted drill. The Aldermanic committee were favorably disposed to the proposition, and it is probable that the troop will be assigned to the "Rendezvous" next Spring, if not before. The regular monthly meeting of this command will take place at its armory next Wednesday evening.

The Thirty-second Regiment, Col. H. E. Roehr, commanding, assembled for annual inspection and muster at its armory last Friday evening. The occasion was also Col. Roehr's final parade with his regiment as Colonel. The ceremonies cannot be said to have been impressive, as the orders were very numerous, and the ignorance in their duties, manifested by the line officers was the most striking feature. Col. Roehr's resignation will undoubtedly be a bad thing for this command, as whatever military knowledge the regiment possesses, it is undoubtedly indebted to that officer for it, and a new Colonel, who may take command, if he aims to raise his regiment to the level of other regiments in the brigade, will have a colossal task before him. The regiment was organized in eight companies of twelve files front, and after review the regiment was mustered. The result was as follows:

In 1875 this command mustered 567 present and 624 enrolled, showing a gain this year of 23 present, and 19 in the number enrolled.

The Thirteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, paraded for inspection last Wednesday evening at its new armory, in Flatbush avenue. A large crowd was assembled to witness the ceremonies. Brig. Gen. Jourdan received the review. Major Syme commanded the regiment during the early part of the evening, and did not display the coolness which is absolutely imperative in handling troops. Whether it was the novelty of commanding a regiment on so important an occasion, or a natural nervousness under the eyes of so large a concourse of people, certainly the Major made a very unsatisfactory commanding officer, and the men appeared thereby to be dull of comprehension and slow to obey orders, whereas they were not to blame at all, as was evident from the manner in which they executed their orders later on, under command of Col. Briggs. There were very few errors in the ceremony of review: There is one thing, however, that many of the line officers have yet to learn—to salute properly when passing in review. Some of the salutes on this occasion were execrable, and there was no uniformity to making them. Col. Briggs should make it a point to drill his line officers in this detail at his earliest opportunity. The muster-roll was as follows:

Capt. George William Smith, late commandant of Company H, Seventh Regiment, died of apoplexy at his residence in this City last Friday morning, in the sixtieth year of his age. Capt. Smith became a member of the fifth company in the old Twenty-seventh Regiment when he was scarcely nineteen years old, on June 11, 1835. He was one of the recruits of Private Edward Shortill, who received a prize "for having recruited the greatest number of men in that company during the year." From the start, Capt. Smith evinced a deep interest in his company, and being naturally of a vivacious disposition, and thoroughly open-hearted and generous, he became a favorite with his comrades, and was soon promoted Corporal, then Sergeant, and two years after the date of his enlisement he was chosen Second Lieutenant; another two years saw him First Lieutenant, and in 1840 he was elected Captain. He commanded the fifth company for four years, when, having conceived a liking for the eighth company, he resigned his Captaincy in 1844, and during the same year accepted the position of First Lieutenant in Company H, generally known as the "eighth company." For twenty years he filled that office, oftentimes being placed in command, and on Jan. 11, 1864, he was promoted Captain, and continued to hold that position until, becoming tired of active service and being desirous of yielding the "right of line" to one of his younger brother officers, he resigned on Sept. 6 last. Capt. Smith was one of the best drilled officers, if not the best, in the National Guard. Having thoroughly studied the tactics in 1840, when he first became a soldier, he mastered the slight modifications and additions found in each system successively adopted, and soon, became the authority in such matters. He never paraded his knowledge ostentatiously, but no officer who sought information from him was repulsed, or left him without being thoroughly satisfied with the knowledge desired. So correct was his judgment in all matters of military detail, that it was a common thing to hear officers in the Seventh Regiment, when disputing some point not clearly laid down in the tactics, exclaim, "Let us consult the oracle." Capt. Smith, after hearing both sides would decide the mooted question in a calm, dignified way, which while favorably impressing his hearers, would leave no doubt in their minds as to his meaning. He was first stricken with the disease which finally caused his death, on Thursday, Oct. 12. On the evening of that day, while at home, he was seized with what appeared to be a violent headache, but which subsequently proved to be a stroke of apoplexy. Since that time he has occasionally felt better, and hopes were entertained of his recovery. Capt. Smith had been sun-struck on one or two occasions, and was seriously affected by the heat in the memorable parade at Philadelphia last July 4. This, in the opinion of some of his friends, conduced to apoplexy. In his social relations Capt. Smith was a man whom to know was to love. Possessed of a bright intellect, his conversation was at once entertaining and a source of profit. He was one of those few men who may be said to die without an enemy, and has left a vacancy in his large circle of friends which will not readily be filled. He leaves a wife, two sons, and a daughter. The funeral services will take place from his late residence, No. 109 West Twenty-third street, to-day, and the remains will be interred in the cemetery at King's Bridge. The members of the Seventh Regiment will assemble at the funeral, but by General request of the family will not parade.

WORKING MEN OF FRANCE.

THE RECENT CONGRESS IN PARIS.

POLITICAL UTTERANCES NOT PERMITTED—HOW A BELGIAN DELEGATE WAS TREATED—THE POSITION OF THE MIDDLE CLASSES—THE CO-OPERATIVE SYSTEM OPPOSED—SOME ACCOUNT OF SOCIETIES IN FRANCE—THE PRINCIPLES OF UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PARIS, Monday, Oct. 9, 1876.

I had scarcely posted my last letter praising the moderation of the Working Men's Congress, when that body trenched upon political ground and became turbulent. Several persons had been waiting patiently for the psychological moment in order to get in their speeches, but only a limited number of them succeeded. One of them had already begun to "spout" socialism in regulation style when he was interrupted by the President, who asked if he was not a Belgian. The advocate of universal brotherhood was nonplussed for a moment, but replied presently that he was a Belgian by birth, but a Frenchman at heart. That admission incapacitated him for taking any other part in the Congress than that of spectator; but seeing that many present were discontented, the President, Citizen Prost, turned the incident off in a manner worthy a Duke of the old régime. He said when one was in the service of humanity his birth-place made little difference—that he could never forget that Anarcharsis Clootz, the advocate of the human race, was a foreigner, but whatever his personal sentiments might be, he had to follow the rules established for the present Congress. Applause stamped this remark with approval. On more than one occasion, notably when he tabooed politics and refused to have a special organ, Citizen Prost, a manual laborer, be it known, has shown the same tact and good sense. Nevertheless, a few men did get in their political speeches, and their attacks upon the French bourgeoisie, which now stands in the position of the old noblesse. It is the scapegoat for everything at this time. Everything that is tyrannical, grasping, avaricious, vile, and mean is now summed up in that one word, and the bourgeois, or middle class, is attacked with as great violence as the nobility was during the first revolution. Yet nearly every member of this class began as a workman or as the son of a workman, and it is the natural tendency of things for the working man who saves his money to become a bourgeois, to join the shop-keeping class, and for the very rich bourgeois to get a title of nobility. His son, having wealth, education, and friends, may become a Minister of State and a Peer. This seems to me a very good arrangement of society, since it offers palpable rewards to the industrious and saving workman; but the latter cannot see things in that light. Instead of being content with leaving a place in the bourgeoisie to his son, who may leave his son in the ranks of the noblesse, he seeks to find some quicker way for obtaining privileges either won by valor or by personal sacrifices for many generations. It has been demonstrated in all parts of France that a district falls into a state of misery when deprived of large, wealthy land proprietors. Those communes which have none have no schools, no hospitals, no churches, and their roads have to be constructed at the expense of the State. The city artisan has to pay for building roads in the Landes, in communes where the property is divided up into small holdings. It is a matter of economy, therefore, to encourage the large land-holders and the nobility, but he has the shop-keeping class at hand upon which he can vent his ill-feelings. How the laborer is going to do without that class is more than I can see, but the working man's remedy is co-operation.

Generation after generation we hear the same talk about co-operation, and only the other day the working men who returned from Philadelphia declared that it was a sovereign remedy for all the complaints of laboring people. I have more than once wondered, if this were capable of demonstration, why no more societies were formed, and never heard the real reason before Saturday. Citizen Finance, a journeyman house painter, made a speech in the Congress which is now attracting attention. He said that he was once a believer in co-operation, but believed in it no longer. The word had been greatly abused. It was a good word upon which to hang wild theories, but there was nothing practical in the system. As can be fancied, this declaration was met by formidable denials, but Citizen Finance went on to show that he had studied the question and knew very well what he was talking about. His statements were instructive as well as curious. At one time Louis Philippe tried to give some encouragement to the system, but just before 1848 only five or six associations remained, and only one of these—that of the gilt jewelry-makers—survived the Revolution. It was founded in 1834, and for a long time was composed of only four members, employing other hands, so that it had, in fact, become a simple business company. The Constituent Assembly of 1848, said Citizen Finance, wishing to obtain pardon from the people for the bloody "Days of June," began to occupy itself with this question. The sum of 3,000,000 francs was voted as subventions to working men's associations. In order to get some of this money, numerous societies were formed, and there were 600 demands in a single month. Upon examining them, only fifty-six were found which had been organized by real working men independent of employers or patrons. Of the twenty-six formed in the provinces, only eleven were really by workmen, and the sum of 1,700,000 francs was distributed among them. At Paris there were twenty-seven societies subventioned, having in all 434 members, and they were allowed 890,500 francs. What have become of all these subventioned societies? During the first six months which followed the reception of the funds there were at Paris alone three failures, and of the 434 members, 74 resigned, 15 were discharged, and there were 11 changes of Directors. In 1854 only nine of these societies remained, and in 1865 the number had been reduced to four.

Of these four I may give the history of the most successful, or the model society of France. After the death of the head of the house, the printers in the employ of Remquet & Co. took the business on the co-operative plan. They had the advantage of an unsullied name, of a good business, and of a sterling reputation throughout all France. Each member of the association agreed to give up one-quarter of his wages, and to leave the entire direction to one man. A clause in the articles forbade any liquidation before the end of ten years. But for this the society would have been wound up long before the expiration of that term, but it did not go a day longer. When the accounts came to be settled, it was found that the profits of the house, after paying back the 80,000 francs granted by the State, were 155,000 francs, or 10,400 francs for each member of the society. When we add up the quarter's salaries given, with interest at only five per cent, we find a sum amounting to 5,660 francs, so that the benefits of each man, in ten years's time, were only 4,740 francs, or about $215 a year. Laborers doing piece-work to soil in the booths in their off hours earn more than double that amount, and hence we may set even the model society down as a very bad failure.

Yet after all this the Socialists kept on talking about co-eneration and Napoleon III., who conscientiously studied the best means for improving the condition of the working classes, determined to give the system another trial. He offered subventions from the civil list, though the previous sums had been paid in only one instance, all the rest having been swallowed up in the failures. Three hundred associations were formed, thirty of them being subventioned. Of the 270 remaining, no trace of them can be found to-day. Four years after that time only twenty remained, and in 1865 the number had been reduced to eleven. In 1869 only six of the co-operative societies were in existence, all the rest having gone into bankruptcy, making away with the funds of the State as well as their own. Yet this experience did not stop men from talking about co-operation, and in 1872 another attempt was made, but with no sort of success. In 1871 there was an outcry about the price of bread, and the journeymen bakers formed an association for the purpose of taking the business from the bourgeois, and of furnishing the city with cheap bread. I was inscribed as one of the patrons of this attempt, and got bread one sou per pound cheaper than the regular rates. At the end of two months the bread became so poor that complaints were made, and at the end of the year the society announced that it had to sell its bread at the usual rates. Notwithstanding the fact that this co-operative bakery got as much as any other for its bread, and was served by interested workmen, who turned in a quarter of their salaries into the business, the enterprise had to be wound up the following year, the net proceeds to divide among the members of the association being twenty-eight francs, or not quite $6, which would make some twenty cents profit for each of the men who had turned in a quarter of his salary for near two years. In connection with this subject I must say that I met a gentleman last Summer at the hotel where I was staying who is now a large proprietor, and is estimated to be worth 5,000,000 francs. He was a simple artisan in 1854, more intelligent than his fellows, perhaps, and was chosen as gérant of one of the co-operative societies receiving State aid. Before 1864 he retired with a fortune, and the societies disappeared. Now he is in the enjoyment of wealth, and boasts of all that he has done for the working classes by aiding them in founding co-operative societies. I will not attempt to draw a moral from these facts, for it is one that every reader will draw for himself. The great trouble in the six hundred and odd attempts here has been to find an honest director, but the directors say that the trouble is a want of confidence in them. In fact, there is so little confidence that the directors are generally changed every fifteen days, thereby throwing everything into a state of disorder. The Citizen Financier warns his fellow-laborers against these co-operative societies, which only enrich a few dishonest men at the expense of the rest, and tells them that they will do much better by remaining on salaries, putting the quarter of their pay into the savings banks, and using the rest of their time either for extra piece-work, or what is better, for the improvement of their minds.

While upon the subject of this congress, I may as well tell you how it treats the principle of universal suffrage. The matter came up upon the article of the programme referring to the representation of the Proletariat in the National Parliament. The following project was presented by the delegates:

ARTICLE I. The system of scrutin de liste by departments is re-established, so that laboring men may be represented.

ART. II. When the electoral committees have made up the lists of candidates, the working men's corporations and syndical chambers, in view of the importance or their numbers, will designate the number of seats to which they are entitled, and will choose their own representatives.

ART. III. The representatives of the Proletariat must be working men, that is, manual laborers, not employing other laborers.

ART. IV. They shall be held to hand in their resignations in blank and without date, as a guarantee of their loyalty in the functions which they accept.

ART. V. They will be regarded as the business men and mouth-piece of their electors; in consequence they cannot vote upon any question without having first consulted—unless there is material impossibility—the Consultative Committee adjoined to their representation by the electors.

ART. VI. All the representatives of the Proletariat must form in the Chambers a separate group, to be always inspired by the purest of democratic and republican principles.

It is singular indeed that such nonsense as this should find favor with men of ordinary common sense, but I am sorry to say that the congress is going to do its utmost to have this made a law of the land. It will be done, probably, when we have the Republique universelle, democratique et fraternelle.

A WOMAN'S HALLUCINATION.

From the London News, Oct. 10.

The newspapers yesterday contained a story of what seems to be a case of self-delusion, not rare indeed in character, but much more elaborate and more complicated in its operation than is ordinarily found under similar conditions. It is the story of what purported to be a confession of murder, but which appears to have been a statement made under the influence of a complete hallucination. On Saturday evening, as the facts are reported, a well-dressed woman, not apparently in a state of disordered intellect, spoke to a Police officer in one of the streets of London, and told him that she had committed a murder. She was taken at once to a Police-station, and there she gave a long and minute account of the murder which she said she had committed. She described herself as a nurse in one of the Metropolitan work-houses, and declared that for a long time she had been filled with feelings of hatred and revenge against one of the matrons, that she had watched for and found an opportunity, knocked the matron down, stunned her, and then killed her by cutting her throat with a razor. After this the self-accusing woman said she wrapped the body in her bedclothes, and hid it under her bed. This done, she got a pass for leave, and she intended to make her escape, but afterward she thought there would be no chance for her safety, and she became stricken by remorse, and accordingly she determined upon giving herself up. The story, grim and ghastly as it was, seemed coherent, and had nothing in it that could be called incredible. The Police accordingly made instant inquiries, and they found at once that in one rather important point it was incorrect. The woman said to be murdered was alive and well. In the room of the alleged murderess there was found, indeed, a long bundle or roll under the bed; but the bundle on being opened was found to contain no human body, only a bolster. The woman who accused herself was examined by a medical man, but he appears to have been unable to give any decided opinion at once as to whether she was sane or insane—that is, as to whether her condition, judged without regard to the story she told, could be considered that of madness. She remains, therefore, for the present in the charge of the Police. Should the report which we have read, and from which, of course, we draw our sole knowledge of the facts, turn out to be accurate, and the woman prove really to have been the victim of a delusion, her story will be a somewhat curious chapter in the strange and painful chronicle of morbid human self-deception. Perhaps not the least curious thing about it is that it has been anticipated far more often in fiction than, so far as our knowledge goes, in real life.

A MAN BLOWN TO ATOMS.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

In the annals of suicide few cases are more remarkable than one which occurred a few days ago at Nitshill, in Scotland, where a miner named Duncan deliberately blew himself up with dynamite. It seems that the unfortunate man, who was about fifty years of age, was much distressed at some remarks made about him by his neighbors. On Monday afternoon he was seen coming out of his house with a parcel in his hand, described as being of about the size of a two pound loaf, and to which was attached two pieces of colliers' "strum," or match. This parcel contained dynamite. Having procured a match from the house of a neighbor, to whom he remarked that "they had said a great deal of him lately, but he would put it past them now." Duncan went out into the street, and, putting the parcel down on the ground, leaned well over it. He then lighted the "strum" with the match. At this moment some boys, attracted by his unusual attitude, came toward him. "Keep back," shouted Duncan, "for the love of God! or you will be blown into eternity!" Thus adjured, the boys did keep back; and it was well for them that they did so, for a moment later there was a loud explosion, which startled the whole village, and Duncan was instantaneously blown to atoms. On the spot where the dynamite had been laid there was left a hole about three feet deep by two and a half wide.

THE BLACK HILLS COUNTRY.

GOLD AND POLITICS IN WYOMING.

THE NEW ELDORADO—REPORTS OF "BIG STRIKES"—DEADWOOD CITY—A PROJECTED RAILROAD—THE CONTEST FOR DELEGATE TO CONGRESS.

From an Occasional Correspondent.

CHEYENNE, Friday, Oct. 20, 1876.

The average Cheyenne "squatters" can be seen gathered in crowds at the street corners a good deal nowadays, talking loud and long over something that seems to have an unusually awakening effect. A close observer who will listen at the different points will be likely to sum up the whole matter into two absorbing questions—first, what's the latest news from the "diggings" up north, and second, who is the best man for Delegate to Congress. It is probable that the largest number of loungers give their time to the sampling of the latest specimens of dust and nuggets from Deadwood and in figuring out how they will manage to get passage to the new Eldorado, and how long it will take them to "strike it rich" after getting there. A place that could keep up and flourish as Cheyenne did for a couple of years on the Custer City bubble, might reasonably be expected to get very lively and confident over the "big strikes," at Deadwood. This place is still the favorite outfitting point, and many of its merchants have branch stores at the diggings. The stages and transportation companies are well patronized, and although more at this time are coming out than going into the mines, yet the permanent settlements in the new country—Deadwood City, Elizabeth, Rapid City, Custar, Golden City and Hill City—must have supplies and communication with some railroad centre all the year round. Cheyenne is without doubt settling down into a steady and permanent growth, many new buildings have been put up during the past season, and among the important projects on foot are gas works and a street railroad. The population of the place is probably 4,500, and there are some 500 lookers-on, coming and going.

There is still a great tendency here to exaggerate the gold discoveries in the Black Hills, but there is considerable being brought in here almost every day. The Leader yesterday contained this item which is essentially correct:

"H. H. Reed and J. E. Wilson, who came in on the Black Hills coach last night, state that they left Deadwood with a party of 100 men, the remainder of whom will arrive in a day or two. Part of them, with ten teams, will arrive here to day. The party bring $100,000 in gold with them."

The express company has shipped a good deal of dust to the East, the banks here buy some, and about ten thousand dollars per month is being received at the Denver Mint. The greater part of the supply comes from the vicinity of Deadwood City, which contains 175 business houses of various kinds and has a population of nearly three thousand; all this since April, when the first house was built. There are still conflicting stories told by parties returning from the Hills. Some claim to have made "big pay," and have the dust to show for it, while the great majority, as has been the case in all mining regions, come out "dead broke." The latter curse the country unstintedly. A private letter, referring to a couple of companions who had gone home disgusted, says: "They are a little too tender for the border and lack the 'sand' necessary to enjoy life in a country like this," but the letter winds up with the charge to "tell the boys to stay at home until Spring." But for those who are determined to go, and can't wait, it may be consoling to know that the Black Hills are not so far out of the world after all. The coaches make the run from Cheyenne to Custer City in two days, and to Deadwood in two and a half. Deadwood is only 126 hours' ride from Denver. It may not be generally known that the Far West people, those who have lived for years on the mining and founded its towns and cities, have an abiding faith in the future of the Black Hills country. They expect to see it dotted with towns and cities, and already look upon Deadwood City as another Denver and the capital of a future State. Capitalists, with all their caution, have great expectations. Already the Cheyenne and Black Hills Telegraph Company has reached Red Cañon, 30 miles north of Fort Laramie, and will be rapidly extended to Deadwood. It is announced that Jay Gould, who has just made a tour through this section stated that he proposed to build a railroad "up North," and would make this place the starting point, beginning work next Spring, and pushing it forward to completion within two years. This is not so great an undertaking after all. The distance is only 348 miles by the present route, or 273 miles by an air line, which is claimed to be practicable. There are no great obstacles to be overcome in the shape of grades and bridges, and a narrow-gauge road would do a good business like the Denver and Rio Grande, which in a short time, and without much noise, has built and equipped 200 miles of road, and is now pushing the iron toward the San Juan mines and into New Mexico. The route of the Black Hills Railroad would lie through a country no more barren than that along the Kansas Pacific for a distance of 300 miles, while at the northern terminus there would be almost the population and prospects that Colorado held out when the Kansas Pacific was projected in Denver. In all the counties and the whole country along the line will settle up faster, there being many fertile valleys, and excellent and extensive stock ranges.

The people of Wyoming claim all the northern country as their own, and are taking comfort in the fact that Prof. Jenney has decided that the Black Hills are wholly within their borders. What he might find Dakota will do to be thus robbed of its glory, it is hard to say; but the Wyoming Legislature has organized the County of Crook, which will probably have Deadwood City for its capital, and this Territory expects to have jurisdiction. Cheyenne has been something of a distributing point for years, and its annual trade reaches from six to eight millions. This year it will exceed ten. Some idea of the character of this trade may be gathered from a look at the freight books of the Union Pacific and Denver Pacific Railways. They show that during last month there were received 353 car loads of merchandise, the largest items being flour, grain, fruit, canned goods, coal, and live stock. During the same time there were forwarded 214 car loads, the principal shipments being fatted cattle for eastern markets, of which there were 156 car loads. The cash receipts of the station for freight and passengers during September were $74,968. The travel to and from this place during the past three months by both railroads, has been very large, and the prospects are that next Spring and Summer, if the Indian question is favorably settled, there will be an immense immigration drifting through here to the northern country.

The contest for Delegate to Congress is a biennial pastime that often creates a furor in Wyoming. The capital towns of the Territory are widely scattered, but not so far apart, nor so rural in their style that their inhabitants fail to get all the fine arts of the politician. A convention to nominate a Delegate is the great event, and it is often a fierce scramble, wherein tricks that would eclipse Tammany are boldly played. The two parties have just held their conventions and put their men forward. The Democrats took up a third termer, Judge Steele, Delegate for the past two sessions; and the Republicans put forward W. W. Corbett, a first class man whom they expect to elect. The Democrats made a platform a column long. It indorses Tilden, declares for "home rule" and the election by the people of county and Territorial officers; wants the Government to "pay such of our citizens as have suffered loss from Indian depredations during the past ten or twelve years;" calls for a military wagon-road from some point on the Union Pacific to the Yellowstone National Park; wants Indian affairs turned over to the War Department; believes Chinese immigration a blight upon the Territory; thanks Gen. Crook for fighting the Sioux; wants the Territory enlarged so as to take in the Black Hills, and demands the removal of the Indians from Central and Northern Wyoming. The present white population of Wyoming is about twelve thousand, not counting the Black Hills region. The voting force is about three thousand. The last two elections have been in favor of the Democrats, but it is believed that the Republicans will win at the coming election.

WHAT CAME FROM THE WELL.

The Salisbury (Del.) Sentinel of the 25th says:

"On Saturday morning, Mr. Samuel J. Turner drew up from his well, in the water-bucket, a most curious reptile. The thing, which looks something like a huge lizard, is about twelve inches long, and is of a dark brown or leaden color, with dull yellow spots over his entire body. It has a head like a frog, is white under the throat, and its breathing-holes are situated on the top of its upper jaw, in the same manner as a porpoise's. It has four legs and a large flat tail, about the same length as the body. With this tail it can propel itself through the water at a very rapid rate. It is by some supposed to be a triton or water-newt, but Dick says that it is a spring-feeder, and that if he is removed from the well, the well will go dry, as his mission is to keep the springs open, and they generally go in pairs."

WORDS OF CHEER.

The Buffalo Commercial Advertiser of Friday evening says: "There is inspiration in the prospect. Once assured that their grand Republican majorities are not going to be swamped by the "solid unbroken Roman Catholic vote" in New-York, combined with that of all the dangerous classes and swollen out of all due proportions by outrageous frauds upon the ballot-box—once assured that the Tilden-Tweed system of disfranchising the legitimate voters of the State will not be permitted to prevail, the faithful Republicans in the rural districts and interior cities will feel every incentive to do their level best for the whole ticket. That assurance we now feel justified in giving. We call upon our Republican contemporaries throughout the State to keep it before the people, that as sure as the sun rises on the morning after election, so sure will it be found recorded that this Union has been delivered, through another glorious Republican victory, from the second greatest peril that has ever threatened its existence, if the Republicans in this State, outside of the metropolis, show themselves in their full strength on the 7th day of November! There is no doubt about it. And now, Republicans of New-York, all good men and friends of the Union, organize, organize, organize, for Hayes and Wheeler, for Morgan and Rogers, and for victory!"

A MISSENT LETTER.

TILDEN LOOKING TO THE CATHOLIC VOTE—WHAT HE HAS DONE FOR THAT CHURCH.

From the Cleveland (Ohio) Herald, Oct. 27.

The following letter was brought to us by the members of a highly respectable business firm in this city, who received it yesterday in the course of regular business. The envelope, which is postmarked "New-York, Oct. 24," together with the original letter, is in our possession. It will be seen by the postscript that the writer had written to Cleveland about shipments. The supposition of the firm receiving the letter is that communication about shipments was placed in the wrong envelope and sent to Wisconsin, while the letter intended for the Wisconsin correspondent came to the Cleveland firm. We make no comment on the document. It speaks for itself:

NEW-YORK, Oct. 23, 1876.

DEAR LEWIS: As promised, I stopped here on my way home from the Centennial to see our friends, to write you briefly, as this is my tenth letter to-night, and it is late.

They promise us aid, but say it must be through the State Committee. Hewitt was so occupied that I had no opportunity to talk to him as I wished. A few minutes with the Governor, however, who happened in the City, did as well. He talks hopefully but is solicitous about Wisconsin, and thinks there is a possibility of its vote determining the election. Among other things which I will tell you, he feels the necessity of a full Catholic vote, and wishes its importance cautiously urged upon the Priests and officers of the Church. The fact should be remembered by them that the school question has been dragged in issue in some States, and that the Democratic Party is their true friend. He wants them reminded that he and the party are constantly assailed for the Gray Nuns act and such favors, and for the Church to be laggard now would be little less than treachery. This matter he wishes to have looked after with the utmost caution and outside of committees, and by none not of our order.

I'll stop at Milwaukee as I go up and look after the matter there. Can you not go over to Madison and do so there. There is no time to be lost. I will also look after the mining regions when I get home, which will be not later than the 28th. I start to-morrow by 3 P. M. via Albany. Business is looking up. Truly yours,

JAMES C. DEVAN.

P. S.—Please answer me at home, on back of this letter. Have written to Cleveland about our shipments.

SECRETARY SEWARD'S NURSE.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

Inclosed please find copy of a communication sent to the New York Sun on the 17th inst., called forth by an article in that paper of the 13th inst., which I also inclose, and would like to have you publish them, as the Sun has failed to make the correction. GEORGE F. ROBINSON.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1876.

[Copy.]

WASHINGTON, Oct. 16, 1876.

To the Editor of the New York Sun:

SIR: My attention was called to an article on the first page of your paper on the 13th inst., headed, "Another Phase of Grantism—Secretary Seward's Nurse Dismissed from Office on Account of her Religion." I take it for granted that you intend to publish facts. But, as you have been led into an error in this case I will give you the facts, and can sustain what I write by the records of the departments and courts, as well as by the testimony of individuals knowing to them.

First—Mrs. Coleman was not Secretary Seward's nurse; second, she was not injured by Payne; third, she did not see Payne, or no her, in or near the Secretary's room, or about the house at the time of the attempted assassination; fourth, Mrs. Coleman has not been dismissed on account of being a Catholic or on any other account, but is now and always has been holding her original appointment of laborer in the Treasury. Facts of which your correspondent was grossly ignorant, or wilfully misrepresented to suit his purposes among people who had no means of knowing the difference between the truth and his mean petty lying.

So far as my personal knowledge extends, (and I have been a close observer,) there have been no favors shown by President Grant or any members of his Cabinet to any one on account of his religion, and I am positive no persecution on account thereof; and any intelligent Catholic who knows anything about the matter will confirm my statement, as some have done to whom I have shown your article.

It is well known that there is a larger percentage of Catholics in office here than of any other Church, and it would be remarkable if, in the sweeping reductions made by the last Congress, no Catholics were discharged.

But I deny most emphatically that any have been removed on account of their religious opinions. Trusting you will give this the same prominence you did the article in question, I remain,

GEORGE F. ROBINSON.

AN UNFORTUNATE STATE OF AFFAIRS.

The London Telegraph perpetrates the following: "'When the bell rings, look out for the locomotive.' Such is the ominous notice painted on sign-posts in the streets of the most populous suburbs of every American town. It means that when a bell is heard jangling, it will be one placed over the middle of the boiler of a steam-engine dragging a long train of cars which have just issued from the depot, and will philosophically pursue their way along the crowded thoroughfare en route for the far West or the far East, as the case may be. The track is neither walled nor fenced in; to carry it by a viaduct over the houses would be too expensive to suit American notions of railway economy; and it is found cheaper to warn all and sundry, that 'when the bell rings,' the locomotive may be expected to come plunging and snorting along. Unfortunately, in American cities, as everywhere else, there are numbers of deaf, purblind, nervous, and stupid people, to say nothing of wildly frolicsome Yankee children; and the consequence is that, hastily as the bell may ring, a considerable proportion of the population, especially the juveniles, do not look out for the locomotive, but get crushed to death or miserably mutilated beneath the monster's pitiless wheels. It is difficult to visit an American infirmary without finding some of the beds occupied by the victims of street-railway accidents."

JUDGE ABBOTT'S REFUSAL.

Following is a copy of the letter of Judge Abbott, declining the Democratic nomination for Congress in the Fourth District of Massachusetts:

NO. 42 COURT STREET, Oct. 21.

Leopold Morse, C. L. Woodbury, J. F. Ball, William T. Brooks, T. J. Ducey, and Joseph Everdean, Esqs., a Committee, &c.:

GENTLEMEN: Permit me through you to express to the Democratic Convention for the Fourth District my hearty thanks for the honor of the nomination as their candidate for Congress, and for the kind and flattering manner in which it was made. I must respectfully decline it. Before the convention held its first meeting I withdrew my name in good faith, because I have no desire or ambition for the place. I have ever since steadily and firmly adhered to that declination, and, as some of you can bear witness, have given to no person any reason to suppose I should change my action. Under such circumstances, I must adhere to my determination, and decline to accept the nomination. I believe the district is Democratic, and I will do all in my power to help elect the candidate nominated by the Democracy. Faithfully your friend,

J. G. ABBOTT.

"THEIR TURN COMING."

A letter from a Southern gentleman says: "The rebel talk here is as bitter as in 1860 and 1861, and we feel more unhappy than in 1861. Then we were looking forward to a change from Democracy to Republicanism. Then the South was divided; now the South is a unit, and endeavoring, by the aid of Northern copperheads, to do what they failed to do with the sword—bring to get possession of the Government. The prospect for all Republicans South is anything but agreeable. One'red tell me a few days since that their turn was coming. That soon the solid South, with the aid of their Northern allies, would dictate terms to the Yankees. That the Yankees would be the rebels. Such is the constant talk here."

THE BATTLE OF MORAVA.

HOW IT WAS FOUGHT AND WON.

THE SERVIANS BRAVE AND DESPERATE, BUT NOT ABLE TO OVERCOME THE TURKS—THE BATTLE ENDED WITH GREAT SLAUGHTER—INCIDENTS OF THE FIELD—SOME OF THE TERRIBLE SORROWS OF WAR.

The London Telegraph's correspondent with the Turkish Army, writing from near Alexinatz, Oct. 4, thus describes the battle of Morava:

"It was emphatically a 'soldier's battle.' Far be it from me to venture upon a plan of what might have been done had we possessed a great General, with efficient subordinates. With such an army as Ahmed Eyoub commanded at this crisis, it is difficult to say what might not have been achieved. There was not a man in that splendid force who did not appear to rejoice at this prospect of a hard fight with the Serbs; not a Turk but longed to descend into the valley and charge the aggressor. But throughout the day—except in some minor details, and in one instance, on the extreme right, as I shall presently relate—no attempt was made at manœuvring the Army. The soldiers met the Serbs in front of their own positions, and decided the fortune of the day by their own personal bravery. We had been watching, as I have already said, the masses of Servian troops on the somewhat distant hills, and some of our guns had actually taken a shot or two at them for some time, when we became suddenly aware that their advanced guard was very considerably nearer to than we had imagined. So rapidly had they, indeed, already engaged and driven in our outposts, that it was clear a very great force was immediately in our front, and that we should have to bear the brunt of the battle. I do not know how every individual Turk felt at this supreme moment, but of this I am certain—that every man I saw looked as though he were ready to spring immediately at his hereditary foe, and would be glad when the order was given. Many of them had not long to wait, for the trumpets sounded, they "fell in," and were soon rushing down the hill, not as though they were in fear of their enemy, and were anxious to gain the cover of their trenches, but as though they longed to get at and grapple with him. It was fraught with danger to the Turks, but it was terribly grand. Many a man was stretched on the turf; many a one returned slowly and painfully to the lines from whence he had come, but on went the companies, one after another, till the bottom of the slope was gained and the enemy confronted. Then opened such a fire as never to be described. It was the meeting of desperate men—of Serbs urged forward by reckless Russian leaders, of Turks longing to strike their enemy. The question was, which could be reinforced the longest and the quickest. Fresh Servian battalions were coming into action every moment and extending the line of attack; fresh Turks were coming down the slope, and manning the shelter-trenches which, as I have before remarked, the Turks, with admirable forethought, had constructed. At first the men could not be persuaded to lie down; they wanted to go forward, and I expected every moment to see them charge with the bayonet. But they were gradually prevailed upon to avail themselves of cover, and hence the great disparity between their loss and that of the Servians. Among these latter we could see that great slaughter was taking place, for their line, although continually fed, did not appear to increase; while, in addition to the rifles of our infantry, our guns were able to throw whole volleys of shell in among the blue-coated soldiers. With what a yell went those terrible missiles on their way! They seemed to break, every one of them, exactly where they burst, and strew the ground with dead and dying every moment. The rifles, quickly seconding them, added to the carnage which took place in that valley. I will not pretend to say whether the Servians actually crossed the bridge over the Morava; by some who were on the spot it is denied, by others admitted. I thought at the time that they did. Moreover, as the fight progressed, our line wavered as the Servians in increasing numbers were hurled against our left flank. But this was only for a while; the men were simply borne back, not disheartened, and fresh troops were hurrying up to succor them. Hafiz Pasha himself being among the foremost in that gallant fight. It was a fearful struggle, truly, and seemed to extend all along the line at this moment; indeed, it is believed that sixty Servian battalions were at that moment engaged. But all to no purpose; the steady courage of the Turks prevailed against the newly-found bravery of the Serbs, and was making itself more and more apparent every moment. The ground was covered with disabled Serbs, and, still that astonishing roll of musketry maintained itself along the Turkish front, the men firing each five or six shots a minute. At length the crisis came. The Servians made one more great effort, there was a tremendous crash, a fearful roll, as if of thunder, and then the enemy began to give ground. With a wild shout, the Turks rise and pour volley after volley into their retreating ranks. Our guns fire shell, which burst over their heads, in front of and behind them, dealing death and destruction all around and among them. The Servians turn and fly; their effort has been in vain; they must seek the shelter of their guns or be killed to a man. Without further delay they rush to their haven of comparative safety, leaving their dead and dying on the ground, and the Turkish forces alone in their well-earned glory. No wonder that next morning Hafiz Pasha and his colleagues, who aided him and was wounded, Lahimedi Pasha, were raised to the grade of Division Generals from that of Commanders of Brigade. They had fought a grandly sustained fight, and had fairly won their admirable success.

* * * * * * *

Next morning I rode over the battle-field, or rather over the greater part of it. I am afraid to say how many dead lay there; they covered the ground as far as the eye can say. But among these heaps of mangled men gone to their last account were seventy-four Russian officers, and, as is usual, the papers which were in their pockets were taken from them prior to their burial. I chanced to look at the heap thus collected. There was a Russian passport on one; another had carried with him a diary, which told all his doings for the past three weeks; another, less diligent even, had noted his expenses in a little note-book, and I am sorry to say that some of his money seemed to have been badly spent. But there were two pieces of paper the memory of which will long remain with me. At first sight they were only letters from home to the dead man on the Servian field; but as I turned them over a few lines through my blood, and my heart stood still. Between widely-ruled pencil lines on the last pages of each note were a dozen sentences written in such large letters that my attention was immediately fixed upon them. It was not that the Russian hieroglyphics were prettily made; on the contrary, the little hand which had traced them had been tediously guided as it passed along the paper. The heart-breaking words were those of a very little boy: 'Loved Papa' was in each message, 'When will you come home again, my own dear papa?' And the little writer went on to tell of how home was dull and the days long, and how the sun would not shine again upon his life till the papa who was absent had come home again. As I looked at the great letters they seemed to run into one. I thought of the little boy and the affectionate wife who had penned these loving pages, and then of the father who lay face downward on Servian soil, ready for burial in Servian ground. What mattered it that a coronet and the letters 'K. C.' in a monogram headed that tender message. That home at Dyvna or Dovna—I could not quite tell the name of the place—will be dark for many a day, for the sunshine of that little boy's life is removed, and the owner of the coronet is no more. He had come to fight for the Servian cause, and it had been the sad lot to die in its defense. There were other documents far less painful. One was a list of 109 Russians who composed a company—evidently a very strong one—in the Servian Army. The Captain was dead, and those of his command were near him. Another paper turned out to be a letter from a brother of the dead officer, whom it was found, telling him that at home they wanted news of Turkish defeats and Servian victories. The wounded man had apparently tried to get at it, and had read the last news from home while dying, for bloody fingermarks were upon it. There was a message from one who was, one might suppose, even nearer and dearer than a brother—a sweetheart—at the end; and perhaps the expiring Russian was trying to look at that kindly word when death dimmed his eye and cut the cord of friendship forever."

SENT TO PRISON FOR CONTEMPT OF COURT.

Patrick Nolan, a builder, was yesterday sent to Raymond Street Jail, Brooklyn, by Justice McCue, for contempt of court, for refusing to surrender certain mortgages in his possession to a Receiver in obedience to the order of the court made last month. He was examined in supplementary bankruptcy proceedings last Winter, at which time he was in possession of real estate valued at $100,000, including a mortgage on some property in Manitoba, held, N. J. A creditor obtained judgment against him for $331 67, and also secured the appointment of a Receiver. The Receiver sold the Plainfield property, receiving for it the sum of $10, when it was ascertained that it was mortgaged nearly up to its full value. It was his refusal to surrender these mortgages which resulted in his being sent to jail.

THE UNITED STATES LIFE.

In the suit of Francis B. O'Connor against the United States Life Insurance Company, of this City, and others, the complaint in which was published in THE TIMES of yesterday, the defendants have not as yet put in any formal answer. They deny, however, the principal averment of the plaintiff, to the effect that there was any intention of transferring the business of the company to the Union Life Insurance Company, of Maine, of which John E. Dewitt, one of the defendants, is President, or any other. A reporter of THE TIMES yesterday learned that the affidavits had been made by Mr. James M. Morrison and Mr. Wilson G. Hunt, both of whom were stockholders of the company, the latter being also a Director until September last. The latter gentleman in his affidavit sets forth that he heard of the proposal to transfer the business of the United States Life Insurance Company to some New-England company, and being of the opinion that although it might be a good enough thing for the policy-holders, it would be an exceedingly bad one for the stockholders, sold his stock, consisting of some two hundred shares, to James Buell, the President of the company, and ceased to be a Director. Mr. Morrison says that the proposition was mentioned to him by Buell, and he deprecated any such action, whereupon the said Buell suggested to him that he dispose of his stock. This was also sold to Buell. Judge Gilbert, who granted the temporary injunction against the defendants, has appointed Mr. Alexander Cameron as Referee to take testimony in the matter. The officers of the company denounce the injunction proceedings as a malicious attempt to extort black-mail and demoralize the business of the company. They will charge this in their answer to the complaint.

The arrests by the Police last week numbered 4,909.

The Post Office deposits for the past week amounted to $57,300.

There were no new developments in the Ellis defalcation case yesterday.

The inspection of the Winter uniforms of the Police will be begun to-morrow at Headquarters.

Six foreign bound steam-ships sailing yesterday took out mails amounting to 47,652 letters, 669 registered letters, and 85 bags of papers.

The Board of Apportionment is still considering the estimates for 1877 in executive session. Their report will probably be ready in a few days.

Martin R. Steiner, a resident of Newton, Sussex County, committed suicide Friday by taking a dose of ladanum. The cause of the suicide is not known.

The Referee in the suit of Dr. O'Meagher against the Sunday Democrat rendered his decision yesterday, deciding that Dr. O'Meagher had no interest in that paper.

Philip Munter, aged forty, residing at No. 5 Orchard street, while insane yesterday, cut his throat with a razor, inflicting a very severe wound. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Michael Gilfoyle, aged fifty-five, who was injured by the falling block of ice, at the foot of West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth street, on Thursday, died yesterday at the Ninety-ninth Street Hospital.

Yesterday was the last day of naturalization in the United States District Court, and to allow of every opportunity of those qualified to be registered, Judge Blatchford held open court until 8 o'clock last evening.

For the first time since the completion of the Post Office Building, at the suggestion of Assistant Custodian, McAfee, the walks are being thoroughly cleansed. It is expected that this work will greatly add to the appearance of the building.

The taxes on real and personal estate collected last week amounted to $5,132,411 42; and the receipts for Croton Rents to $27,272 55. During the same period the Mayor's Marshal granted 215 licenses, for which he received $2,212 25.

The Police were notified yesterday that Mrs. Crowell, aged fifty, left her home, No. 163 West Twenty-first street, on Friday morning, and has failed to return. The missing woman is insane, and it is feared that she has met with an accident.

There were reported, at the Bureau of Vital Statistics, during the week ending at noon yesterday, 424 deaths, 447 births, and 209 marriages, showing a decrease of 43 deaths and 5 births, and an increase of 28 marriages, as compared with the preceding week.

Two little girls, one aged eight years and the other three, whom the Police found wandering in the streets, were sent yesterday to the Catholic Asylum. The elder was named Mary Brennan, and the younger could give no information of herself. They had been lost since Wednesday last.

A meeting of Germans, whom the members of the Central Tilden and Hendricks Club hope to induce to vote the Democratic ticket, was held at Cooper Union last night. The speakers were Judge Stallo, of Ohio, and Joseph Pulitzer, of St. Louis. Mr. Oswald Ottendorfer also made an address.

Nothing of interest transpired yesterday in connection with the Conference of Railroad Managers, referred to in yesterday's TIMES. Mr. Sloan stated that there would be a meeting of the representatives of the Grand Trunk, the Great Western, and the other roads interested, some time this week.

There is as yet nothing new to be reported in connection with the suspension of the Continental Life Insurance Company, which occurred on Thursday last. The Receiver, Mr. John J. Anderson, is busily engaged getting the books of the company into shape, and will as early as possible present his report.

A regular meeting of the Medico-Legal Society will be held on Wednesday evening next at the hall of the Academy of Medicine, No. 12 West Thirty-first street. Prof. F. Hastings Hamilton will deliver an inaugural address, and Dr. G. M. Beard will read a paper on "Somnambulism; its Nature, Symptoms and Medico-Legal Relations."

Judge Barrett, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday issued an order directing Sydney Rosenfeld to show cause, on Tuesday, why he should not be permanently restrained from publishing a paper entitled the Illustrated Figaro, which Messrs. Starr Morrissey and Robert Anderson claim is a colorable imitation of their New-York Figaro.

A company of forty emigrants from Columbia, S. C., Wilmington, N. C., New-Orleans, Philadelphia, and New-York, expect to sail for Liberia, from this port, on Nov. 1. Rev. Bishop Haven, under appointment of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Rev. J. T. Gracey, late of Clifton Springs, and Rev. Mr. Day, of the Muhlenberg Mission, will accompany them.

Mr. Martin Farquahar Tupper will give readings from his own works at Chickering Hall tomorrow evening. The programme, including fifteen selections, is very varied. Among the subjects are "Love," "Marriage," and "Beauty," from his Proverbial Philosophy; "Railway Times," "Cecil's Choice," and a scene from "Washington," the author's new play.

A statement was made yesterday in one of the morning papers that the Workingmen's Central Council was driven from the doors of Tivoli Hall, No. 263 West Seventeenth street, on Friday evening last, by a gang of Republican roughs. Mr. Calvin, the President of the Council, says this is incorrect; the disorderly men were anti-Tammanyites from the Thirteenth Assembly District.

A new feature is to be introduced at the ladies' fair at present in progress at St. Stephen's Catholic Church, in the shape of a ladies' rifle match, in which four teams, the American, Irish, Scotch and Canadian will contest. The match will take place on the evening of November 23, beginning at 8 o'clock. Messrs. Garnier, Daly, Slosson, Rudolphe, Sexton, and the Dion brothers will give a grand billiard exhibition during the coming week.

In the trial of Oschwald and Ryan, charged with the murder of Officer Brock, progressing in Newark, yesterday Oschwald, one of the accused, testified that on the night of Aug. 3 he went home, took off his shoes, ascended to his room. His brother asked him to wind his watch, which he did. He went to bed, and as sep, and the next morning arose at about 6 o'clock, ate breakfast, sat around his house for a time, and then went to his saloon next door. The trial will not be concluded till Wednesday or Thursday next.

An order of arrest was issued yesterday by Judge Barrett, in the Supreme Court, in the case of James B. Ogden against N. G. Miller, and the latter was arrested during the day by Deputy Sheriff McGonigal, and furnished bail in the sum of $13,000. Ogden claims that Miller, who is a wealthy resident of Bridgeport, Conn., induced him to buy shares in the Eagle Lock Company, and then, by starting a nail factory and circulating disparaging reports of the former, reduced the value of the shares he held from $200 to $75 each. Through this conspiracy he lost $17,000, which sum he seeks to recover in this suit.

BROOKLYN.

Five hundred and twelve arrests were made by the Brooklyn Police last week.

The body of a new-born female child was found in the river at the foot of Broadway, Eastern District, yesterday afternoon, and taken to the Eastern District Morgue.

Martin Farquhar Tupper, the English poet, will read selections from his own works, at the Academy of Music, on Tuesday evening next, under the auspices of the American Literary Bureau.

Josie Conner, aged four years, whose parents reside at No. 140 Butler street, was severely injured about the head and body yesterday afternoon by falling out of the third-story window. She was removed to the Long Island College Hospital.

Charles Eisner, a Flushing farmer, was yesterday fined $15 by Justice Walsh for driving on the track in front of a Fulton avenue car all the way from Albany avenue to the City Hall, and stubbornly refusing to clear the track until arrested at that point.

Coroner Simms was yesterday notified to hold an inquest on the body of William Higley, which was found floating in the water at the Atlantic dock. The deceased, who formerly resided at No. 24 Luquer street, has been missing from his home since Oct. 19.

John Williams, a tramp, aged twenty-eight years, yesterday afternoon attempted to commit suicide by jumping off the Catharine ferry-boat Pecono, while on her 2 o'clock trip from New-York to Brooklyn. He was rescued by the deck hands and taken to the City Hospital.

Officer Kitzer, of the Sixth Precinct, yesterday arrested Robert Cox, on a charge of keeping a policy shop at No. 16 Eweo street, Eastern District. Lewis Kincing, of No. 9 Cook street, who was buying slips in the place at the time, was also arrested and held as a witness.

Capt. Daniel Ferry, of the Third Precinct Police, who has been nominated as the Democratic candidate for Justice in the Second District of Brooklyn, yesterday tendered his resignation as a member of the Police force. Sergt. Patrick H. Leavy, the senior Sergeant of the precinct, has been put in command until further notice.

The body of an unknown man was yesterday found floating in the waters of the bay, at the foot of Fifty-third street, South Brooklyn. It was that of a man five feet six inches high, and dressed in dark gray coat and pantaloons, dark vest, blue cotton socks, and gaiter shoes. An iron ontsel, iron punch, pair of sciasors, and seven cents were found in the pockets. The body had the appearance of having been a long time in the water.

The funeral of Charles C. Holmes, the Wall street broker, took place yesterday afternoon from the residence of his father-in-law, Mr. William Porter, at the corner of De Kalb place and Bushwick avenue. It was attended by a large representation of Wall street merchants and brokers, former acquaintances of the deceased. The pall-bearers were Messrs. Mason, Edwards, Benson, Raworth, and Pearson. The remains were interred in Green-Wood Cemetery.

NEW-JERSEY.

Rev. W. H. Marshall has received a call to the pulpit of the Memorial Baptist Church.

The Democrats of the Third District, New-Brunswick, yesterday nominated John Waldron for the Assembly.

Martin R. Shiner, of Newton, N. J., aged thirty-three years, committed suicide Friday night by taking laudanum. He had made two attempts previously to poison himself.

The body of the man who was beheaded by a Pennsylvania Railroad train in Jersey City Friday, was yesterday identified as that of Dwight Johnson, of North Orange, Miss.

Charles Lee, son of Officer Owen C. Lee, shot himself through the side last evening, inflicting injuries upon himself from which he will probably die. He has been insane for some time.

Arthur Paret and Charles Tatem, of West Hoboken, quarreled Thursday, and on Friday Paret set a ferocious dog on Tatem, who was severely bitten on the hands and legs. Paret was arrested.

William Bavier, an Inspector of Licenses during 1875, has been convicted of forging and altering saloon licenses and selling them to outside parties, and was yesterday, at Newark, sentenced to State Prison for two years.

The Pennsylvania Railroad have placed detectives on the watch in the hope of securing the person who expressed the infernal machine which exploded in a car near Metuchen Friday evening. At last accounts the detectives had not succeeded in getting any reliable clue.

During the fire in Busch's old hotel, Hoboken, several weeks ago, Officer Kivlon arrested a Hoboken fireman for climbing a ladder. The firemen demanded Kivlon's dismissal from the force, but the Police Commissioners refused to accede to the demand. Friday night the fire companies threatened to disband unless the Police Board reconsider their action and dismiss the obnoxious officer.

THE OPPOSITION TO TAMMANY HALL.

CANVASSING PROPOSED TICKETS—THE CONFERENCES TO BE RESUMED TO-MORROW.

The sub-committees of the anti-Tammany, Independent Citizens' and German-Americans' Independent organizations resumed their deliberations yesterday morning, at 11 o'clock, at the Astor House, Henry Clausen, Jr., presiding. A delegation from the Greenback Party asked for representation in the meeting, and their application was laid over for future consideration. Early in the afternoon, the Independent Citizens and German-Americans' Independent sub-committees proposed a partial County ticket, as follows:

For Mayor—Andrew H. Green.
For Sheriff—Col. Emmons Clark.
For County Clerk—Prof. Theodore F. Glaubensklee.
Judge Superior Court—Ex-Judge Charles A. Peabody.
Justice Marine Court—Ex-Justice Joseph Koch.
Coroner—William H. Stiner.

No propositions were made for the Surrogateship, two Coronerships, and four Aldermen at Large. The Anti-Tammany Sub-Committee, not having been empowered by its main committee to take definite action as to nominations, a recess was taken until 3 o'clock, to give it an opportunity to report to and consult with its committee. About 3:30 o'clock, the Anti-Tammany Sub-Committee returned to the Astor House, and had a long consultation with Col. Rush C. Hawkins and Louis M. Dorscher, of the Independent Citizens', and Justin Marcus Otterburg and Coroner Moritz Ellenger, of the German Independent organizations, who had been appointed Sub-Committees to act with Anti-Tammany in reference to the preparation of a ticket. The Anti-Tammany Sub-Committee presented the following ticket for consideration, and a long discussion ensued.

For Mayor—Andrew H. Green.
For Sheriff—James O'Brien.
For County Clerk—Charles E. Loew.
Judge Superior Court—Dennis McMahon.
Justice Marine Court—Joseph Koch.
For Surrogate—William C. Traphagen.
For Coroner—William P. Mitchell, Bryan Reilly, Joseph Shannon.
For Aldermen at Large—Nathaniel Turpenny, J. Graham Hyatt, Gerson N. Cohen, George Hencken, Jr.

An animated discussion ensued, and at about 4:30 o'clock a full meeting of the sub-committees was convened to hear and act upon the result of the deliberation. At this meeting all the names proposed were taken up seriatim and passed upon, and at 6 o'clock the ticket finding the most favor was as follows:

For Mayor—Andrew H. Green.
For Sheriff—Col. Emmons Clark.
For County Clerk—Prof. Theodore F. Glaubensklee.
Judge Superior Court—Charles A. Peabody.
Justice Marine Court—Joseph Koch.
Coroners—Each organization to select its own nominee.
Aldermen at Large—J. Graham Hyatt, Herman Uhl, John H. Sherwood, Robert G. Cornell.

A recess was then taken until 7 o'clock. The Anti-Tammany sub-comittee reported to their main committee, and a lively discussion was had. It was agreed that the sub-committees should report to the sub-committees of the Independent Citizens' and the German Independent organizations, at the reassembling at 7 o'clock, that the Anti-Tammany Conference Committee had agreed to reject the name of Col. Emmons Clark for Sheriff and stand by Mr. O'Brien; had rejected the proposition to nominate Ex-Judge Peabody for Judge of the Superior Court, and desired to substitute either the name of Richard O'Gorman, Dennis McMahon, Adolph Sanger, or Ex-District Attorney, Samuel B. Garvin; had selected Alderman Bryan Reilly as their nominee for Coroner; had accepted Herman Uhl as a nominee for Alderman-at-Large, and had recommended that Gerson N. Cohen be substituted in place of either Hyatt Sherwood or Cornell for Alderman-at-Large.

A brief consultation was had, and an adjournment was taken until 11 o'clock on Monday morning, without any conclusion being arrived at.

HOME WORK.

Sixty-two of the legal voters of the Princeton (N. J.) Theological Seminary will vote for Hayes, while only twenty-six will cast their ballots for Tilden.

The Lincoln Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club will hold their third grand Republican meeting on Thursday evening next at No. 106 West Thirtieth street. Mr. Charles E. Abbott and other able speakers are expected to address the members.

Hon. Herman D. Busch, of Hoboken, a leading German Democrat, has declined to support A. A. Hardenbergh, the Democratic nominee for Congress in the Seventh District, and is actively working for Louis J. Stiasny, the Republican candidate.

The Anthony H. Hill Association of the Twenty-first Assembly District held an enthusiastic meeting at Chatterton Hall, on Second avenue, on Friday evening. The organization is in a flourishing condition, and doing much service for the cause of Republicanism.

MARK TWAIN COMPLIMENTS POSTMASTER JAMES.

A letter addressed to Mr. S. L. Clemens, (Mark Twain,) Hartford, Conn., notifying him that he had been elected a member of the New-York Press Club, and inviting him to be present at their Fall reception on Thursday last, was inadvertently dropped into the letter-box without the required stamp. Postmaster James kindly paid the postage and forwarded the letter, which, in the ordinary course, would have gone to the Dead-letter Office. After thanking Mr. James for his courtesy, Mr. Clemens inclosed a copy of the Postmaster's letter to the President of the Press Club, and expressed regret that he could not be present at the reception. He closed with a compliment to Mr. James as follows:

"By the inclosed printed letter of Postmaster James you will perceive that the term "civil" service is not a sarcasm when applied to the New-York Post Office. Had your unpaid letter passed through the average Post Office of the land I should have received my invitation about three months from now through the Dead-letter Department, after much correspondence and ruinous outlay of postage. I would that there were more Postmaster Jameses in the land."

FALL OF A BUILDING.

MANCHESTER, Oct. 28.—The new brick building of Blodgett & Clark, in course of erection at the lower end of Elm street, fell with a tremendous crash this afternoon, injuring four workmen—one of them, Augustus Wilson, very severely. The accident was caused by the placing of forty heavy granite window-caps on the second floor, which gave way under the weight, carrying away a portion of the walls.

THE VITAL QUESTION.

Hon. Anson Wolcott, late Greenback candidate for Governor of Indiana, has written an explanatory card concerning his withdrawal, in which he forcibly says: "At the time of writing the note to the editor of the Sun, I had not fully apprehended the danger to the country that would result from a continuance of the Independent ticket in the field. I did not know how almost entirely Greenback Democrats had abandoned the Independent movement and re-established their former party associations, a fact of which I subsequently became fully convinced. But I did know there had been a dreadful civil war, which had shaken our political structure to its very foundations. I did not know that Mr. Tilden, the Democratic candidate for the Presidency, was, during the war, a peace man; when peace meant national dissolution, to be followed by interminable anarchy and the loss of that rich heritage of government which our ancestors had established by long years of war and by unparalleled labors, sufferings and trials. When I found the cause of financial reform, just and urgent as that cause had become, was being prosecuted under conditions dangerous to the national safety, the critical situation demanded reconsideration. No government can, with possible safety, be intrusted to the management of its enemies. Financial reform is a question under the Government, and however important it may be, it is subordinate to the question of the safe maintenance of the national authority, and no patriotic man, unless careless in the extreme or reckless to desperation, can think otherwise."

FATALLY POISONED BY A SAUSAGE.

The Buffalo Express of Saturday says: "A singular case of poisoning came to light yesterday, the victims being the family of John G. Klein, Deputy Poormaster. He lives on Michigan street, and on the night previous bought a quantity of 'liver sausage' at a butcher shop in the vicinity. It was cooked for supper, and the members of the family partook heartily of it. Shortly afterward they were all seized with a violent sickness. A neighbor was dispatched after Dr. Diehl, who pronounced the case one of poisoning. The mother of Mr. Klein, who had eaten more of the sausage than any of the others, continued to grow worse, and in spite of the remedies administered, died during the night. Two others of the family also became so critically ill that fears were entertained that they would not survive. Dr. Diehl informs our reporter, however, that they are slowly recovering, and that the poison in their case will not result fatally. The Doctor is positive that the poison was in the sausage. He does not think that it was due to the presence of trichinæ spiralis, but is inclined to believe that the liver from which the sausage was made was diseased. Portions of it are to be sent to Prof. Hadley for analysis."

HUMBUG.
There are a great Many ladies of New-York City whom it is as difficult to convince that we can supply their wants to their best advantage as it was to convince mankind several centuries ago that the Earth moved around the Sun. Such ladies have a very VAGUE, INDISTINCT IDEA ABOUT Eighth avenue—believe, no doubt, that it is, as yet, in a half-civilized condition, inhabited, forsooth, by squatters, Chinese laundrymen, and a few remnants of the old Indian tribes. To all ladies who labor under such an impression we say:
First—That our establishment is larger than ANY STORE ON 6TH AVENUE, better lighted, better ventilated, and better fitted for your comfort and convenience.
Second—That the character and quality of goods which we present in our various departments is EQUAL TO THAT OF ANY HOUSE in the City of New-York.
Third, and above all—That we offer goods at a SMALLER PROFIT, and consequently, at a lower price, than any of our numerous and energetic competitors.
Of course, fair reader, the writer knows full well that you may toss your head and say with impatient emphasis—"that's HUMBUG, a sensational advertisement—nothing more"—may be, my lady; but do you, for once, LAY ASIDE YOUR PREJUDICES, read through the remarkable prices quoted below, and resolve that you will this week, by an impartial visit of examination, find out whether there is TRUTH or HUMBUG in the advertisement of

LAST WEEK OF THE CANVASS

A REVIEW OF THE SITUATION.

THE SUCCESS OF THE REPUBLICAN TICKET PLACED BEYOND DOUBT—ONLY A FEW DOUBTFUL STATES—THE VOTE IN NEW-YORK — FLATTERING REPORTS FROM VARIOUS SECTIONS OF THE COUNTRY.

The last week of the canvass opens with excellent prospects for the success of the Republican ticket. Cautious and clear-headed politicians have at no time anticipated that the election would be anything but close, but the reports which have been received during the past week show that it will not be nearly so close as was looked for some time ago. Each day of the canvass improves the prospect for success. The National Committee have been enabled in the past few days to considerably reduce the list of "doubtful" States. Very few are now left in that category, and New-York, happily, is not one of them. Reports have been received from every State in the Union, and as the sum of all it may be said, on the best and most trustworthy information obtainable, that Mr. Tilden will carry only the hopelessly Democratic States and possibly one or two of the unimportant doubtful ones. The Republican States of New-England may be reckoned as sure for handsome majorities for Hayes and Wheeler; Ohio will give 20,000; Wisconsin is reported as in the best possible temper and alive with enthusiasm for the Republican nominees; Michigan is sure of an old-fashioned Republican majority; California will roll up one ranging between eight and twelve thousand; the reports from Oregon and Nevada are of the most encouraging character, making it certain that they are both all right; Pennsylvania may be confidently counted upon as not only sure for a heavy majority for Hayes and Wheeler, but it will show large gains in Congressmen. There will also be some gains in Congressmen in Maryland. In New Jersey the contest continues with the most cheering prospects, the numerous Republican meetings are largely attended, and a full vote will be brought out.

As regards New-York, acknowledged to be the chief battle-ground of the canvass, there has never been any doubt about the State as apart from the City. The only question has been how to hold the Democratic vote within the limits of honesty. The Republican vote of the State would more than overcome anything the City could do on the Democratic side if the frauds were not carried out on the gigantic scale they were when Seymour was given 10,000 majority in 1868. The enormous registration of the first two days naturally excited considerable suspicion, for it was abundantly clear that a large portion of it was fraudulent. But the fears at first excited have been allayed by the falling off in the registration on the last days consequent on the energy and success of the authorities in detecting the would-be repeaters who had already registered. It is now estimated that not more than 20,000, or at the most 25,000, names have been fraudulently placed on the list. The total registration, deducting the two Westchester wards, is 177,386, being an increase of 27,683 over that of 1872. When all the deductions have been made from this which the experience of previous years shows to be necessary, the number of votes which will be cast in this City on election day may be safely reckoned as ranging from one hundred and forty-eight to one hundred and fifty-two thousand. Of this number, we can confidently claim over sixty thousand for Gov. Hayes, as it is admitted on all hands that the Republican registration exceeds by from seven to ten thousand the vote for President Grant in 1872, which was 54,675.

THE OUTLOOK OF THE CAMPAIGN.

CHEERING TONE OF THE INFORMATION RECEIVED AT THE REPUBLICAN HEAD-QUARTERS FROM ALL PARTS OF THE COUNTRY—INDICATIONS OF A THOROUGH AWAKENING AMONG REPUBLICANS EVERYWHERE.

The week which has just passed has greatly improved the prospect of the success of the Republican Party in New-York City, New-York State, and the entire country. Each day the indications of a Republican triumph in November have been more marked than the day before. Another week like the last and Hayes and Wheeler and Morgan and Rogers will be elected. This is the substance of the reports made at the Republican head-quarters at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. Both the National and State Committees confirmed them. The National Committee is in daily correspondence with eminent and trustworthy men in every State in the Union, and upon this correspondence, and upon personal interviews, the opinions are based. From Wisconsin the news comes that the Republicans are aroused to the highest pitch of enthusiasm, and a handsome majority for Hayes and Wheeler is confidently predicted. Gen. Frye, of Maine, who has just returned to this City, after extensive labor in Wisconsin, was at the committee rooms yesterday. He says that the State has never been in better condition to cast a heavy Republican vote. From Michigan, too, a State which the Democrats, with their customary cool presumption, have recently claimed as sure for their candidates, word has been received from several independent sources that the Republicans will certainly be successful. The indications are that the State will give one of its old-fashioned Republican majorities. Secretary Chandler was announced to take the stump in Michigan, but his duties as Chairman of the National Committee require his presence in New-York, and ex-Gov. Noyes, of Ohio, has just been sent to take his place. Other eminent speakers will assist in the remaining canvass. The friends of Gov. Hayes in Ohio send numerous dispatches, in which they predict a Republican majority of not less than 20,000. They also say that if there had been prudent management in Cincinnati, prior to the last election, neither Sayler nor Banning would have been elected to Congress. Several dispatches and letters have been received within a day or two from Gen. Ben Harrison, John C. New, George W. Friedly, and other prominent men in Indiana, all of whom promise that their State will win a decided victory for Hayes and Wheeler. Mr. Murat Halstead was at the Fifth Avenue Hotel yesterday, and confirmed this intelligence. He says that the expectations of those gentlemen are well-founded, inasmuch as many influences which were at work for the election of Williams in October will not count in the Presidential election. The Republicans of New-Jersey are visiting the committee rooms in large numbers. They all agree that New-Jersey will go Republican if the illegal voting in Jersey City and Hoboken can be prevented. Even if Hudson County should give a majority of three or four thousand, the other counties in the State will wipe it out. The Republicans of New-Jersey are making an earnest fight, and were never more thoroughly organized, nor the State better canvassed. Maryland, it is claimed, will show a heavy Republican gain. Several additional Republican members of Congress are promised from this State, and there is a fair prospect of casting the electoral vote for Hayes and Wheeler. In Pennsylvania a gain of seven, and perhaps nine, Congressmen will be made, and the State at large, it is confidently stated, will give an emphatic Republican majority. The best of advices are received from California; a Republican majority of from eight to twelve thousand is promised beyond a doubt. A dispatch was received yesterday from Senator Morton, of Indiana, who is now in California, as a member of the committee appointed to prepare a report on the question of Chinese Immigration. He says: "I have spoken to immense meetings in California, and will cross over to Nevada next week. The Republicans are confident of California." The state of feeling in California is said to prevail also in Oregon and Nevada. Senator Mitchell, of Oregon, telegraphed on Saturday night that the prospects for carrying Oregon were most encouraging. The Republicans believe that Oregon is all right.

As for the New-England States, the committee is thoroughly confident. Maine, New-Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and even Connecticut, the committee say will give their electoral votes for the Republican candidates. The result in Massachusetts will be accompanied by a gain of Republican Congressmen, and New-Hampshire, which now has two Democratic Congressmen, will next Spring elect an entire Republican delegation.

The committee also claim that five of the Southern States, namely Louisiana, Florida, North Carolina, South Carolina, and Mississippi will cast a Republican vote if a fair election is allowed. The chances in these States are largely in favor of the Republicans, and it is further claimed by the committee that Tilden cannot carry either of them, except through violation of the law such as would amount to open rebellion.

The committee has been watching the progress of the campaign in New-York with intense anxiety, but that anxiety has wonderfully lessened within forty-eight hours. Fear has given way to hopefulness and hopefulness rapidly ripening into confidence. A number of gentlemen who have been engaged in stumping the State reported last evening at the State and National Head-quarters. They say that the indications are that an extraordinarily large Republican vote will be polled in every county of the State, and that if the attempts to prevent illegal voting and fraud in this City and in Queens County are successful, the State will stand by Hayes and Wheeler, and will secure their triumph in the country. It is, of course, expected that New-York City and County and Queens County, will give a heavy Democratic majority, but it is the belief of both committees, and of numerous gentlemen who are in consultation with them, that this majority will be not nearly so heavy as the Democrats think it will be, and that it will fall far short of wiping off the Republican majorities in the rest of the State. The committees express themselves highly gratified at the means which have been employed by the United States authorities to guarantee a fair election in this City, and say that unless the Democrats persist in the perpetration of systematic frauds, there will be no fear of the result. The week which begins to-day is the last before the election, and it will be used with the best energy which the committees can command. The efforts in the various doubtful States will be kept up to the last minute. In this State the labor of the canvass will be redoubled, and several important and somewhat extraordinary meetings will be held in New-York City. Requests for additional speakers came in all day yesterday, and the committees have done their best to meet the demands. There are still many applications unanswered, and if the committees had twenty-five eminent speakers more in their command they could easily find appointments for them.

THE VOTE OF THE CITY.

ESTIMATE THAT NOT MORE THAN 160,000 BALLOTS WILL BE CAST AT THE COMING ELECTION—ONLY A SMALL PROPORTION OF FRAUDULENT VOTES POSSIBLE.

The work of printing the lists of those registered on Friday and Saturday was begun yesterday. These lists will be arranged according to the election districts, like those for the first two days of registration. Printed copies of the names and addresses of those registered on the last two days will be ready to-morrow, and then the work of verifying them will begin. It is, therefore, a little too early to estimate definitely the number of votes which will be polled in this City at the coming elections. The probabilities are, however, that not more than 160,000 votes in all will be polled. The percentage of those registered who will not vote is a little larger than usual this year, owing to various causes, the principal among them being the additional precautions now taken to have a fair and honest election. Of these more than 20,000 fraudulent votes, which it was designed to have polled, not more than five thousand will be received, and possibly even less. Of the whole number registered about twelve to fifteen thousand will not vote for various reasons, and the remainder of those registered who will not vote are persons who have committed some fraud, and who will be restrained from voting in consequence. All the "dodges" or plans of the Tammany politicians have been very carefully watched, and it will be something approaching a miracle should any large body of fraudulent votes be cast.

Among those attempting to register illegally on Saturday was a dirty and repulsive looking wretch named John O'Brien, alias "Country," who gave his residence as in the basement of No. 42 Bowery. Stephen Mosher, one of the aids to Mr. Davenport, was present at the place of registration, however, and promptly took O'Brien into custody. It appears that the place from which the latter registered is a well-known resort for the vilest of prostitutes. O'Brien was taken before Commissioner Davenport and held in default of $3,000 bail to await an examination at 3 P. M. to-day.

THE COMPLETE REGISTRATION.

Eighty-one persons registered in the Fourteenth Election District of the Eleventh Assembly District, which did not report until yesterday, making the total number registered in that Assembly District, during Saturday, 1,061. The number registered in the Assembly District, for the four days, is 8,536. The addition of the missing district increases the number registered during Saturday to 23,092, and the grand total, during the four days, to 183,068. The following table contains the registry of Assembly Districts, and a comparison of the total registry of this year with that of the past five years:

HON. WM. M. EVARTS' VIEWS.

NEW-YORK BUSINESS MEN ASK THEM.

HE WILL RESPOND TO THEIR INVITATION ON WEDNESDAY EVENING—A REMARKABLE LIST OF FINANCIAL NAMES APPENDED TO THE REQUEST—QUESTIONS OF THE UTMOST MOMENT.

The following correspondence has passed between a large number of the business men of this City and Hon. William M. Evarts relative to his addressing the citizens of New-York on the present political issues. In accordance therewith Mr. Evarts will speak in the large hall of the Cooper Union on Wednesday evening next. Hon. William E. Dodge will preside.

NEW-YORK, October, 1876.

To Hon. William M. Evarts, &c., &c.:

DEAR SIR: The undersigned respectfully ask the expression of your views, at a public meeting, at the earliest time that may suit your convenience, upon the bearing of the pending election on the debt, the credit, the national faith, the reform of the public service, and the repose of the country, which we fear are being gravely endangered, while the people are beguiled into a sense of security by unfounded representations and promises.

It has been said that "the safety and wisdom of investment in the funded debt of the Government do not depend upon Presidential elections, in the opinion of European capitalists and bankers, any more than the soundness of English consols depends on whether the Ministry is Tory or Liberal."

We do not believe that European capitalists are as indifferent to the lessons taught by our recent history as these words imply; nor that they ignore the fact that the time has passed when the great parties of the Republic were alike devoted to the supremacy of the Constitution and the perpetuity of the Union.

Europe cannot have forgotten that our civil war arose from antagonistic views of the character and powers of the National Government in its relation to the States.

Of that war the world is reminded to-day by the Southern claims already filed in the House of Representatives, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, that threaten seriously to increase the national debt, which, despite its large reduction, weighs heavily on the industry of our land.

These claims are urged partly on the ground which was taken by prominent Democratic leaders, North and South, including their Presidential candidate, that the National Government had no right to protect the integrity of the nation by the coercion of seceding States.

It is also to be feared that the election of Mr. Tilden might be regarded as a reversal of the verdict of the war, under which the Southern people would be incited to claim indemnity for their past losses, and immunity in any further acts of secession.

Such a radical change in the policy of the Government would in our opinion not only impair its credit at home and abroad, and postpone indefinitely the resumption of specie payments, but endanger in the future our peace and prosperity.

Questions of such moment to the American people deserve the greatest consideration on national grounds by the light of history and the National Constitution.

The independency of your political position, your professional and public career, and your wide experience and acquaintanceship both in Europe and America, will give high authority to your views, and make them of the gravest consequence to the country in this hour of peril.

Praying an early and favorable response, we have the hor or to be, Sir, with the highest regard.

Your faithful friends and fellow-citizens,

NEW-YORK, Oct. 28, 1876.

GENTLEMEN: I have had the honor to receive your request for the expression, at a public meeting in this City, of my views on some of the principal questions which enter into the pending canvass for the election of a President and Vice President of the United States.

Although I cannot assent to your kind estimate of the interest or value to the public which the terms of your invitation attribute to my opinions or their expression, yet I fully recognize the obligation of every man to take such part in the public discussions of the election as his fellow-citizens may call upon him to do.

The earliest day which my necessary occupations leave at my command is Wednesday next, and it will then give me great pleasure to offer to the public judgment such considerations as seem to me important and controlling on the topics to which you have invited my attention. I am, with great respect, your obedient servant.

WM. M. EVARTS.

To Jno. J. Astor, John Q. Jones, Robt. L. Stuart, Jno. A. Dix, Wm. E. Dodge, and others.

HON. JAMES G. BLAINE.

APPOINTMENTS IN THIS STATE FOR THIS WEEK.

Senator Blaine will begin the campaign for the week in this State by a speech at Rockport this afternoon, and another at Rochester this evening, to be followed through the remainder of the week by addresses in the following order:

Tuesday afternoon, Corning.
Wednesday afternoon, Ithaca.
Wednesday evening, Auburn.
Thursday afternoon, Poughkeepsie.
Thursday evening, Troy.
Friday evening, Brooklyn.
Saturday afternoon, Bridgeport.

LARGE MEETING IN AUBURN.

A REPUBLICAN RALLY ADDRESSED BY HON. A. W. TENNEY—HIS APPEAL TO THE LABORING CLASSES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

AUBURN, Oct. 29.—By far the largest political meeting held in this city during the present canvass was held by the Republicans at the Opera-house last evening. The meeting was presided over by Gen. J. N. Knapp, who delivered a short and effective speech, and then introduced Hon. A. W. Tenney, of Brooklyn. Mr. Tenney gave an eloquent review of many of the issues of the present canvass, and was repeatedly requested to continue after speaking for two hours. Many of the laboring class were present, and by the frequent applause while he was on the subject of hard times, they gave signs that they were convinced that the true way to better their condition was by voting with the Republican Party. His remarks were eloquent and full of sound reasoning. The general expression of his hearers was that his speech was by far the best of the campaign. The Republicans of this county have made a thorough canvass, and will get out their full vote.

LARGE REPUBLICAN MEETING IN ILION—EX-TREASURER SPINNER IN THE CHAIR.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ILION, Oct. 29.—The Republicans of this place held an enthusiastic meeting on Saturday afternoon in Mahon's Opera-house, which was filled to overflowing. Hon. F. E. Spinner, ex-United States Treasurer, was made Chairman. Gen. Kilpatrick made an eloquent address, full of the wit and good points that always have such a telling effect on his audiences. Herkimer County is alive and active.

OFFICIAL RETURNS FROM COLORADO.

DENVER, Oct. 29.—The vote of Colorado for member of Congress, members of the Legislature, and Judges of the Supreme Court was canvassed yesterday with the following result; For Judges of the Supreme Court, Republican majority, 148; for member of the Forty-fourth Congress, J. Belford, Republican, majority, 1,038; for the Forty-fifth Congress, J. B. Belford, Republican, majority, 939. The Legislature is divided as follows: Senate—Republicans, 19; Democrats, 7. House of Representatives—Republicans, 32; Democrats, 17. Republican majority on joint ballot, 29. Net Republican majority for State Senators, 1,933; for members of the House of Representatives, 2,204. This Legislature will choose three Presidential Electors on Nov. 7, and also canvass the vote for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, Auditor, Treasurer, and Secretary of State.

GOV. HAYES' RETURN TO COLUMBUS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 29.—Gov. Hayes returned from Philadelphia late last night, and will remain here till Saturday next, when he will probably make his usual tri-weekly visit to his home at Fremont.

FIRE IN THE UNION SQUARE HOTEL.

Shortly after 11 o'clock last night, a fire broke out in the kitchen in the basement of the Union Square Hotel, at the corner of Fifteenth street and Fourth avenue. The fire was discovered in the ceiling immediately above the broiler, and is supposed to have originated from sparks lodging between the metal cover over the broiler and the ceiling. A battalion of the Fire Department, under command of Chief Gicquel, was promptly on the spot, and quickly extinguished the fire, using only a stream of water from a chemical engine. The damage is estimated at $100. The hotel is full of Centennial guests, most of whom were asleep at the time. When they were aroused and learned of the fire a scene of considerable excitement ensued. The guests dressed themselves with great haste, and many of them rushed down-stairs dragging their baggage after them. President Perley, of the Fire Department, who lives at the hotel, succeeded in allaying the excitement, and assured the frightened guests that there was no cause for alarm.

OBITUARY.

George Lingard, an actor, well known on the east side of the City, died in this City yesterday. He made his début in his thirty-fifth year, at the New Bowery Theatre, when it was opened by his brother, James W. Lingard, in 1859. He was a good stock performer, had a fine voice and figure, was versatile, and was very popular at the time that his brother and G. L. Fox were reigning stars in the Bowery theatres. The tragic death of his brother greatly affected him and had a permanently depressing influence on his spirits. When the New Bowery Theatre was destroyed by fire he appeared at the Theatre Comique, and has since played in most of the principal cities of the United States.

THE TAX RECEIPT FRAUDS.

THE PLOT AGAINST PENNSYLVANIA.

CHARACTER AND OPERATION OF THE INTENDED DEMOCRATIC ELECTION FRAUDS—FICTITIOUS NAMES INSERTED IN TAX LISTS TO BE VOTED BY REPEATERS AND LOAFERS—THE BLANKS SENT FROM THE TILDEN HEAD-QUARTERS—HOW THE SCHEME WAS DISCOVERED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 29.—The excitement in this city to-day, occasioned by the exposure of the means which the Democracy intended to use to carry out their ideas of reform, has been intense, and was made doubly so when Chief of Police Jones examined the bundles of bogus tax-papers critically, and ascertained that they had been sent here direct from New-York City. At 3 o'clock this morning Detectives Weyland and Royland arrested Samuel Josephs, who took the papers to the Democratic head-quarters, as he was going into his residence at Fifteenth and Jefferson streets. Josephs innocently demanded why he was arrested, and when told made no answer, but requested to be taken to Mayor Stokely's residence, only a couple of blocks distant, where he said the Mayor would discharge him on his own recognizance. His Honor, however, refused to interfere in the matter, and Josephs was taken before a Magistrate and held in $5,000 bail for appearance at court. Harry Daly, a prominent Democratic "ringstore" becoming his surety. The fraud was discovered by Christian Kneass, Esq., Chairman of the Republican City Committee, who received information that the Democrats had asked different paper-makers outside the State to furnish them with the paper necessary for carrying out the scheme. Failing to obtain it, emissaries were sent to the Tilden Head-quaretrs in Liberty street, New-York City, where arrangements were made with a Connecticut paper-maker to furnish the requisite blanks for $1,100. The blanks were sent from the Tilden head-quarters to a person who went by the name of A. M. Walker, and who registered at the Merchants' Hotel on Cortlandt street. He, it is supposed, brought the papers to Philadelphia, where they were taken to the Democratic State Head-quarters, No. 1,014 Walnut street, by Samuel Josephs, and were being removed to the printers when captured by the Detectives. The wrapper inclosing the two bundles contained the following, written in lead pencil: "A. M. Walker, Merchants' Hotel, Cortlandt street," "A. M. Walker, Philadelphia," and scribbled on the side was "5 P. M. train, Oct. 28, 1876." They were tied with a stout string, and bore no express company marks, showing that some person brought them here.

To show the monstrous character of the fraud, had it been carried out successfully, it is necessary to explain the Election laws of the State, and show how the Democracy have been paving the way here, under the instructions of Tilden, in the "still hunt" scheme, to make it successful. The law requires all voters to be registered at least sixty days before the election, and the voter must have paid his State and county tax within two years, and at least thirty days before an election. A proviso in the Constitution states that no voter shall be deprived of his vote who fails to get on the registry list, and who produces his receipt for paid State and county taxes, which is termed "personal tax." Armed with this document, he can demand that his vote be received, and if his name be found on the Assessor's list it is a penal offense for election officers to refuse the vote. It will be seen at once, therefore, that, had the Tildenites carried their scheme into execution and had the bogus receipts printed, it would have been an easy matter to distribute the 50,000 throughout the city and State, upon which many fraudulent votes would be cast in the interest of "reform," There is no doubt that Pennsylvania would have cast her electoral vote for Tilden had this infamous plot not been nipped in the bud. The bogus receipts would be placed in the hands of repeaters and bummers who had never paid for them and never could, and thus the Democratic majority would be swelled to enormous figures.

To further the scheme in the Democratic wards of the city, notably along the river front and in Sam Randall's district, the names of dead men, fictitious personages, names on tombstones, and those of aliens in sailor boarding-houses have been placed on the registry and Assessors' lists. Armed with the tax receipts, they would have voted, and the result would have been disastrous. It is calculated that at least fifteen thousand votes would have been polled in this manner in the city alone. The receipts can be used in any part of the State, and it is believed to have been the intention of the Democrats to have flooded the mining regions of Schuylkill, Carbon, and Luzerne Counties with the bogus papers, and to roll up immense majorities there for Tilden. With the great Democratic majorities thus secured in the State, they might have overbalanced the Republican majority of Philadelphia—which has saved the State more than once—and thus their victory would have been complete.

To-morrow Chairman Kneass will go into court and ask that 1,200 fraudulent names which have been placed on the registry in Squire McMullen's stronghold, the Fourth Ward, be stricken from the roll. He will follow this up in the other Democratic wards until ten thousand names, at least, are canceled. In short, this is the most stupendous attempt at fraud which has ever been unearthed; but it has recoiled so disastrously upon the Tilden Party of Reform that the lukewarm persons who would have voted the Democratic ticket have been won over to the Republican side.

A warrant was issued to-day for the arrest of George McGowan, Chairman of the Democratic City Committee, on the charge of being concerned with Marcus and Josephs in the bogus tax receipt business. It is alleged that he was in the carriage with Marcus when the detectives captured it, and that he jumped through the window and disappeared by an alley. The officers have searched for him all day, but he was not found at midnight. His forced and sudden absence leaves the Democracy in the city without a head. The prisoners will have further hearing to-morrow afternoon before Magistrate Carpenter at the Police Head-quarters.

WHO IS A. M. WALKER?—HIS MOVEMENTS IN NEW-YORK.

Mr. A. M. Walker arrived at the Merchants' Hotel, in Cortland street, on Saturday morning, and left during the afternoon. He did not enter his name in the hotel register in the usual manner. He had some baggage with him, but the hotel clerk on duty did not pay particular attention to it, and could not remember what the nature of it was. He was described as being of ruddy complexion, with a brown mustache. Where Walker hailed from, or what his destination, was not known to the clerk.

Inspector Speight, who was on duty at the Police Head-quarters in this City yesterday, informed a TIMES reporter last evening that the Police authorities of this City had taken no steps in the matter, not having been officially notified by the Philadelphia Police that their assistance was required. A dispatch had been received by him last evening, from Chief of Police Jones, of Philadelphia, announcing that he had secured the papers intended for the fraudulent tax receipts.

TRICKERY IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

THE MEETING OF SO-CALLED NORTHERN-BORN RESIDENTS—REPUBLICANS NOT ALLOWED TO PARTICIPATE—DENIALS WHICH AMOUNT TO NOTHING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—A private dispatch received from Charleston, S. C., says that at the instigation of the Democratic managers, a meeting of so-called Northern-born residents, without distinction of party, was held in that city Friday night, at which an address to the Northern people was prepared and issued, setting forth about the same statements as were contained in the address issued last week, signed by Bishop Lynch and others. The fifty-two who sign the address are straight-out Democrats, some of them having been residents of the South prior to the rebellion, and having served in the rebel army. A number of northern-born Republicans, residents, were present, but were not allowed to participate in the meeting. These have signified their purpose to issue a separate address. Proclamations of this kind from residents of Charleston, declaring to the country that peace and order everywhere prevails in South Carolina, is notaing new. In 1861 an address filled with declarations that South Carolina was peaceful and orderly, and did not propose to rebel against the National Government, was issued from Charleston, and prominent among the signers was Bishop Lynch and many of those who join him in the address of last week. At the time the Bishop signed the address, in 1861, batteries were preparing to reduce Fort Sumter, and Bishop Lynch must have known of those treasonable preparations. In view of the reports recently made by army officers on the condition of affairs in South Carolina, the denials contained in these soothing addresses will not be regarded by those to whom they are addressed.

DEMOCRATIC HUMBUG IN OHIO.

PRETENSES OF LARGE GAINS TO BE MADE—A CONCENTRATED HULLABALOO PROMISED—HOW THEY HOPE TO SECURE THE PETER COOPER VOTE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Oct. 29.—It has come to the knowledge of the Republican State Committee that the Democratic press of this State has been instructed from the Tilden head-quarters to raise a concentrated hullabaloo the present week over pretended Democratic gains and fictitious assurances of a Democratic victory. This is to be done for effect, and will be of no more political consequence than so much sheet-iron thunder. All pretenses of Democratic gains in Ohio are pure humbug, and have no foundation whatever in fact. On the contrary, there are unmistakable evidences of large Republican gains over the October vote, and of a majority at least three or four times that cast for any candidate in the State ticket. Not only will the full Republican vote be polled, but a large body of Democrats who voted with their party in October will in November either not vote at all, or vote outright for Hayes and Wheeler, or compromise on Cooper and Cary. These Democrats attribute the defeat of Allen last year to Tilden's intrigues, and they received his nomination with unconcealed disgust, which the heat of the campaign has quieted, but has not removed. Great effort has been made by the Democratic State Committee to reconcile this body of malcontents, and one of the plans adopted is that of providing them with Cooper and Cary tickets bearing the names of the Tilden Electors. Possibly some of the dissatisfied may be swindled by this dodge into voting for Tilden, but the majority of them understand the effect of the trick, and are not likely to be caught by it.

THE BRITISH ARCTIC EXPEDITION.

A NARRATIVE OF THE VOYAGE—AN INCESSANT STRUGGLE TO REACH THE NORTH POLE—HONORS TO A BRAVE AMERICAN—FRIGHTFUL SUFFERINGS EXPERIENCED.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—A narrative of the Arctic Expedition is published. It relates that after first encountering ice the expedition was detained several days in Port Payer. It started thence on Aug. 8, but before reaching the shore of Grinnell Land, the vessels were caught in an ice-pack. After this their progress northward was an incessant struggle through chance openings made in the ice by wind and current, the channel through which the ships moved constantly closing behind them. The Discovery wintered in a well-sheltered harbor on the west side of Hall's Basin, a few miles north of Polaris Bay. The Alert pushed forward and rounded the north-east point of Grant's Land, but instead of finding, as expected, a continuous coast a hundred miles toward the nor.h, she found herself on the border of an extensive sea with impenetrable ice on every side and no harbor. The ship wintered behind a barrier of grounded ice close to land. The floating masses of them, for I understood their contents. I presume they were the same circulars.

This testimony discloses that Mr. Tilden had knowledge before the election that such circulars, with his name attached, had been prepared and issued, and that some were then in the committee-room intended for circulation; that he understood their contents, and, therefore, though he saw that his name was signed to them, he did not read them. Understanding, as he says he did, the contents of these circulars, he of course knew their purpose, and unless his stupidity was greater than that of ordinary men, he also knew unless this should be frustrated by honest effort, or a stupendous fraud would be perpetrated for the benefit of his party. He made no such effort, and hence the purpose was accomplished.

Lawyers well understand the distinction between promises for future conduct unfulfilled and false statements as to past or existing transactions. The latter may be criminal, the violated promise is never so. The promise is worthless, however, if he who makes it has failed to perform the more solemn duty of truthfully relating past transactions in which he participated, especially if they tend to degrade him.

We are, however, able to invoke Mr. Tilden's opinion as to the value and binding force of pledges made for partizan purposes and to secure a prize so great as that of the Presidency. In his letter of acceptance, written with care, and after long reflection, he occasionally expressed himself so clearly as to be perfectly understood—an example of which is found in his declaration that "It might encourage delusive expectations if I withheld here the expression of my conviction that no reform of the civil service in this country will be complete and permanent until its Chief Magistrate is constitutionally disqualified for re-election, experience having repeatedly exposed the futility of self-imposed restrictions by candidates or incumbents."

I agree entirely with Mr. Tilden that his self-imposed restriction against approving any bill which a Democratic Congress may pass for the purpose of paying Southern claims "might encourage delusive expectations," but for that knowledge of his political character and achievements, which most of our people now possess, combined with the aid derivable from that charming candor which distinguishes the extract I have ventured to quote, in the light of these, however, his true inwardness is so plainly exposed that "delusive expectations" will not but gently if at all upon the average voter. Indeed, they will doubtless regard Mr. Tilden's pledge with that jocular favor once extended toward a person quite inexperienced in military matters, who in consequence of some service he had rendered in raising troops was by President Lincoln commissioned a Brigadier General. He was as conscious of his unfitness for the place as is Mr. Tilden of the worthlessness of self-imposed restriction upon candidates for office; but he, nevertheless, with a natural desire for knowledge not unmingled with apprehension that it might not gratify his pride, asked a friend what the people said of his appointment. "They say nothing," was the reply. "They only laugh."

A CONTRADICTORY POSITION.

Not only does Mr. Tilden regard self-imposed restrictions upon candidates futile, but he considers them so weak and worthless that it may become the duty of such candidate when elected utterly to disregard them. Thus, in his letter to Judge Kent, in October, 1860, he declares: "Elect Lincoln, and we invite those perils which we cannot measure; we attempt in vain to conquer the South to an impracticable and intolerable policy; our only hope must be that as President he will abandon the creed, the principles, and pledges on which he will have been elected."

This, however, was but the forlorn hope of a person utterly unable to comprehend a man so pure and truthful, so filled with nobleness and patriotism, as was Abraham Lincoln. He was incapable of encouraging "delusive expectations" by making pledges only to break them, and had he gratified the hope of Mr. Tilden by violating those made to his countrymen in 1860, we should at this day be a divided people—a nation broken perhaps into many fragments, with no destiny, no flag, no history—a by-word and reproach among the kingdoms of the earth; and Mr. Tilden instead of aspiring, as now, to become the chief magistrate of a mighty people, would doubtless be engaged in the more appropriate employment of reorganizing railway companies, that their connecting lines might meet in harmony upon the border between North and South, stipulating always, however, that cars running from the great slave confederacy into the free North should at all times be subject to delay and search, for fugitive slaves, at the pleasure of the slaveholder. Mr. Tilden's letter was on Friday last supplemented by a communication, published in the World, addressed to the people of the United States, purporting to be signed, among other officials of the State of Kentucky, by its Senators and members of Congress, in which they declared that the Southern people have no hope or expectation that the advent of the Democratic Party to power will enure to their pecuniary benefit, in securing to them payment for loss or damage to property suffered by them during the war; and they further declare that losses incurred in support of the war, and caused by emancipation, are barred from payment by the fourteenth amendment; and that compensation for all other injuries to property caused by the war is prohibited by the law of nations and the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The first suggestion which naturally occurs on reading this communication is, how does it happen that Senators and members of Congress from Kentucky—a State which remained in the Union, the inhabitants of which are not much interested in war claims—are put forward to speak for the entire Southern people? It would be far more satisfactory if members of Congress and Senators from States which went into rebellion should speak for themselves and their constituents than to receive assurances from those who have thus undertaken to interpret the purposes of the inhabitants of the late rebellious States and the designs of their representatives. A presumption arises, from the silence of the latter, that they will decline to commit themselves or their people on this subject, but have left that duty to distant volunteers, whose pledges they can at pleasure repudiate. And especially should this presumption be adopted, in view of the numerous bills already introduced into the House of Representatives from those States—the members of Congress from which, of course, acted in so doing in pursuance of the wishes of their constituents. But not only are the Senators and Representatives of Kentucky disqualified to speak of the purposes of the Southern people of other States, for the reason suggested, but another cause operates very seriously to impair the value, if not the sincerity, of the opinions of at least some of those gentlemen: The communication is signed by nine members of Congress, including Mr. Watterson, who took his seat in the House just prior to its adjournment. Six of the remaining eight have themselves there introduced private bills for the purpose of authorizing payment of $230,374 72, mainly, if not entirely, as compensation for the very claims which in the communication made by them are denounced as prohibited by the law of nations and the decision of the Supreme Court. If I am mistaken in this, it is a mistake easily corrected, for I will proceed to state the names of these six members, and the number of bills introduced by each, with their amounts.

Milton J. Durham, four bills, for	$44,422 00
Charles W. Milliken, nine bills, for	93,568 72
J. C. S. Blackburn, two bills, for	59,927 00
Andrew J. Boone, two bills, for	15,197 86
J. Proctor Knott, two bills, for	11,650 00
Thomas L. Jones, one bill, for	5,610 00
Total	$230,373 58

Communications like this—pledges like that made by Mr. Tilden, designed to create and encourage "delusive expectations," and carefully circulated in the State of New York a few days before an election which the vote of that State may determine, are not creditable to the sagacity of their authors or complimentary to the intelligence of its citizens. Most of them understand that no reliance whatever can be placed upon such assurances, and that should the end for which they are manufactured be attained, the man who could hope that Lincoln would prove false to his pledges, to his duty, and to his country, would but smile at the credulity which upon such promises had based "delusive expectations." POLITICAL NOTES.

New-Hampshire promises at least 3,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler.

An Illinois telegram reports that the Greenbackers are concluding that Tilden is their "best hold."

Tilden called the Union soldiers trespassers. What does he now mean when he talks about "rebels!"

McClellan and Doolittle are to speak for Tilden from the same platform in Elmira. Such birds will flock together.

The Boston Transcript notes that barrels figure largely in the Tilden canvass—money-barrels in the North and rifle-barrels in the South.

Hon. Matt H. Carpenter has hurried back to Wisconsin from Washington, and is again on the stump, doing good work for Hayes and Wheeler.

Tersely the Knoxville (Tenn.) Chronicle says that the Democracy has always had an instinctive abhorence of every measure calculated to protect the ballot-box.

"There must be no loose talk beforehand," said the confidential Democratic circular sent South. Ben. Hill says he will be unmuzzled when Congress meets again.

Hon. T. F. Bayard, of Delaware, has declined an invitation to go to North Carolina to speak for Vance and Tilden, but takes occasion to sneer at the white men who have accepted nominations on the Republican ticket there.

Mr. C. Irving Ditty has procured the arrest of Charles E. Keys, Register of voters in Baltimore, on the charge of deliberately and willfully misspelling names in the books of registration, putting voters in the wrong precincts, &c., and boasting about his performances in this direction.

Ex-Senator Brownlow says that a secret confidential circular has recently been sent to the leaders of the Democratic Party in the Southern States, demanding that even South Carolina and Florida "shall be carried at all hazards," so as to present a united South for Tilden and Hendricks.

The Charleston (S. C.) Republican of Oct. 26 says: "As far as the contest for our State offices is concerned the Democrats have given up all hope, and they only now serve as canvassers for the success of the National ticket, and for the misrepresentation of the condition of public affairs which exists in South Carolina."

The Norwich (Conn.) Bulletin makes mention of one of the participants in a Democratic parade there Saturday night, who was going home about 7 o'clock Sunday morning, and met a friend. "Be jabers, Patrick," he said, "did ye see us last night? Over seven hundred strong we was, and divil a nagur or a Yankee among us."

Hon. P. R. Adams has declined the Prohibition nomination for Congress in the Second District of Michigan. He says he is an earnest temperance man, but the welfare of the country, the interest of every loyal citizen, the prosperity of the whole people, the honor, credit, and glory of the nation now imperatively demand the success of the Republican Party.

Gen. L. F. Ross, who was the independent candidate for Congress in the Ninth District of Illinois two years ago, has written a letter declaring himself in favor of the election of Hayes, the pure-minded and enlightened statesman, in preference to Tilden, the mere politician. Tilden's election, he says, would carry us back twenty years, to the times of James Buchanan.

The Boston Commonwealth relates this incident: "We came up in the cars from Essex County the other morning, and there got in at Ipswich an old copperhead, who, on the morning when Lincoln's assassination was published, remarked he was 'glad to hear it,' with a prefatory expletive. Now he stopped and chatted with his brother Democrats, and boasted that they would soon fix things!"

The Port Jervis Gazette, late a Tilden organ, through business difficulties has passed into the unwilling ownership of Hon. Charles St. John, and will hereafter be independent in politics, the publisher saying that, in his opinion, the election of Samuel J. Tilden would prove disastrous, in fact ruinous, to the best interests of the country, and a severe blow to the cause of human progress throughout the civilized world.

The Lowville (Lewis County) Journal refuses, without thanks, any further contributions from Mr. Tilden's "ninecompoops." It says it prefers to make its own "extracts," and that they "are neither puffs of Mr. Tilden, nor weak attempts to cover up his fraudulent income returns; neither are they indorsements of his preposterous claims of reducing the State debt. Having been in the Legislature ourselves, we are quite familiar with all of Mr. Tilden's claims about paying the State debt, and know that they are barefaced fraude."

ANOTHER DEMOCRAT FOR HAYES.

A PROMINENT ORLEANS COUNTY DEMOCRAT FOR HAYES.

From The Rochester Democrat, Oct. 28.

A large assemblage of representative men of both parties gathered at the Court-house in Albion last evening to hear Edwin Porter, of that place, discuss the issues of the present canvass. For many years Mr. Porter has been an ardent Democrat and Chairman of the Democratic County Central Committee. He has been a recognized leader of his party, but has now renounced it and enrolled himself in the army of men under the great leaders Hayes and Wheeler. The Democrats are greatly chagrined over their loss. Of Mr. Porter's remarks last evening we give a brief synopsis, received by telegraph. He said: "We are now in the midst of an exciting political campaign, and I thought to remain a silent spectator to its close; but I believe it to be the duty of every citizen to express his honest conviction and to exert his full influence in times like these. I have been a Democrat for a long period of time, and have worked and voted against the Republican Party; but the Democrats have placed in nomination Gov. Tilden, and they now ask the Party to give him their enthusiastic support. Let us review these claims. I charge upon Gov. Tilden an attempt to break up the Democratic Party and to establish upon its ruins a personal party, with himself as its leader. Does not every intelligent man in this country know that the Democratic Party has been sacrificed by the personal ambition of Gov. Tilden? He called to his support a kind of 'kitchen cabinet;' he ignored the great leaders of the Democratic Party and placed in the front Dorsheimer, a man who can travel more miles than any American traveler on record. Mr. Tilden is Uriah Heep of the Democratic Party. My friends say, support Tilden because he is a reformer. The speaker viewed Tilden's record as a reformer, and showed up his false claims as a reducer of taxes. Said he, "If I am a Democrat I don't propose to stultify my conscience and do violence to my manhood. My friends say all this may be true; he may destroy the party and ignore its leaders, but go for him because of the present condition of the South. I don't like what is known as the 'solid South.' I don't want the rebels to get control of this Government and we be obliged to pay the rebel claims. My Democratic friends say that Tilden will veto them. Is not the power behind the throne greater than the throne itself? What is that power if Tilden is elected? Will he rise above the power that put him in the Presidential chair? No. I desired to support the candidate nominated by the Democratic Party, but I cannot. In what I have stated it has been my purpose to state a simple truth, the honest conviction of my heart."

THE SOUTHERN CLAIMS.

TERSE LETTER FROM MR. HALSTEAD.

THE WORTHLESSNESS OF GOV. TILDEN'S RECENT PLEDGE—DEMANDS BEYOND MR. TILDEN'S CONTROL—A SINGLE SAMPLE IN MISSOURI OF WHAT THE SOUTH ARE DETERMINED TO HAVE WITH DEMOCRATIC VICTORY—TILDEN'S DEFEAT THE ONLY SAFEGUARD.

To the Editor of the World:

In a spirit of reciprocity for your "memorandum" of this morning, I desire to place at your service a few items that will be found of interest to the tax-payers who have had their attention called, by Gov. Tilden's letter and other documents, to the Southern raid upon the National Treasury with Confederate war claims.

I was glad to see Gov. Tilden's letter, and the disclaimers from Southern men of a purpose to press those claims are all welcome; for those who have studied the question with the greatest attention have the gravest apprehension of its magnitude. Gov. Tilden's letter is proof of the existence of the "public peril" that I attempted to describe in the address that was sufficiently "delivered" to serve my purposes in preparing it. He certainly did go further than his partisan friends have been accustomed to do, in admitting that there might be Southern claims not covered by the fourteenth amendment. If I have not heretofore done justice to that admission, I propose now to do work meet for repentance of the sin of omission.

You quote Gov. Tilden as saying:

"No claim for any loss or damage incurred by disloyal persons arising from the late war, whether covered by the fourteenth amendment or not, will be recognized or paid."

The amount of this is that Gov. Tilden offers us his personal pledge as security against the payment of the claims outside the fourteenth amendment. Without questioning his sincerity—as might be done under the circumstances without extraordinary bitterness of antagonism—I must pronounce the security insufficient. It is well to have it, but it is poor collateral to put up with the amendment. Indeed, I am of opinion that if the Democratic Party takes possession of the Government, neither the Constitution nor the President could stand against the solid South and resist the war claims of that section for two years. The fourteenth amendment is not the child of the Democratic Party, and the Democratic President who could withstand the master of his party—the solid South—as a claimant for damages during the war by trespasses on the sacred soil, has not been invented and certainly has not appeared in Gov. Tilden.

The passage from Gov. Tilden's letter is given above as the World italicized it. I desire to emphasize the words "disloyal persons." The theory upon which the solid South presses its claims is that there are no such persons. Mr. Cabell, of Virginia, reports from the Committee on War Claims, in a bill granting relief in a tobacco case, that legally, a pardoned rebel never was a rebel at all. That, I suppose, must be the Democratic law. Mr. Riddle, of Tennessee, says, "we are all loyal now," a phrase that covers the Democratic sentiment. Why, then, does Gov. Tilden use the expression "disloyal persons" in a letter calling for legal exactness as well as a strictly defined expression of the feeling and judgment of his party?

If there are any persons not according to law loyal under the interpretation that Mr. Cahill makes of pardons, it is the Democratic policy that their loyalty shall be recognized and established. This would leave Mr. Tilden's pledge without application, with the exception of the part allotted to "scrutiny," which is to be done with "jealous care"—words which are not of much value within a fortnight of a Presidential election.

I do not believe Gov. Tilden and his lieutenants in labor in this City have understood the full extent of the solicitude there is in the Solid South about war claims, or the dangerous aspirations that have been enkindled with the hopes of Democratic victory: and the demand that I understand to have been made from the Tilden head-quarters for assurances by telegraph from the party leaders in the Southern States that they are not expecting, with the advent of the Democratic Party to power, to secure payment for loss or damage suffered by them during the late war, is as cruel as it is "futile."

I do not notice that Missouri has been heard from in this connection. She has taken action to press, with the sovereign force inherent in a State, the war claims of her citizens. Gov. Woodson, in his annual Message to the General Assembly, Jan. 6, 1875, says:

"There were presented to the Board of Commissioners 11,961 claims, amounting in the aggregate to $4,644,362 29. Seven thousand five hundred and fifty-four of those claims were allowed during the time in which the board had the right to sit, and certificates have been issued therefor aggregating the sum of $2,382,132 67. At the expiration of the time fixed by law for the adjustment of the claims pending before them there were a great many claims unacted upon, it proving a physical impossibility for the Commissioners to examine and pass upon all the claims filed within the time prescribed by the act."

One of the certificates issued has been negotiated, and has fallen into the hands of the Republican National Executive Committee. It is hereby marked for identification and filed as evidence:

No. 52. $55 80.

It is hereby certified that the State of Missouri is indebted to Woodford M. Paris in the sum of fifty-five and 80-100 dollars on account of supplies furnished. This certificate is not payable by the State until after the claim of said Woodford M. Paris has been presented to the United States Government, and the amount allowed and paid to the State, and then only for the actual amount received from the United States Government.

CITY OF JEFFERSON, Mo., Sept. 8, 1874.

SILAS WOODSON, Governor of Missouri.
J. V. CRAFTON, Acting Quartermaster General.

The printed indorsement on the certificate is: "Issued in accordance with the provisions of an act of the General Assembly of the State of Missouri, approved March 19, 1874."

Please to notice Gov. Woodson's pathetic statement that it was physically impossible to examine all the claims presented, and, therefore, as the time in which the commission had a right to sit was unfortunately limited, only 7,554 of them could be "scrutinized with jealous care," as it were, and passed upon, that certificates might be issued. So the first crop of these claims in one State, before a commission restricted to a few months' work, and embarrassed by the necessity of assuming to pay some regard to the loyalty of the claimants, amounted to more than seven thousand five hundred certificates to be paid through the State Treasury when "presented to the United States Government and the amount allowed." This does not seem to be a small matter.

Now, if the Statute of Limitations is repealed; if the Supreme Court of the United States has defined the Trusteeship of the Government, as the World says it has; and if it has also declared, as I understand the World to say, that the issue of a special pardon to a rebel proves innocence and not guilt—proves not that the pardoned person was a disloyalist, but that he always was loyal—it must be admitted that there is a very broad road leading into the Treasury of the United States from the South. If we add Mr. Wilshire's scheme to "facilitate" claims by authorizing suits to be instituted in the United States Courts, and have a trial "by juries of the vicinage," and if we accept also Mr. Riddle's resolution that the testimony of "any reputable citizen" shall be sufficient to "effectually establish" a claim, we have certainly facilitated the work of "adjusting" the money out of the Treasury in a remarkable degree, without calling upon Gov. Tilden to veto the Riddle bill or to perform any other act equally distressing to his Southern supporters.

It is said that when Gov. Tilden's friends gathered around him and congratulated him upon his nomination at St. Louis, he said: "The people want reform—that's me;" or words to that effect. This may not be authentic, but it resembles the theory of the letter of last week, admitting the existence of a danger, but answering for the candidate himself: "Here am I. The country is safe with me. I will veto."

Too much depends here upon the one man power. Even if we might trust Gov. Tilden as far as he goes, we cannot afford to trust his party. It is the character of the party and not the will of the man that is important. I thought it pertinent in a former letter, to refer to Gov. Tilden's contempt, no longer ago than August last, for the self-imposed restraints upon candidates. He saw their futility then, though he asserts their sufficiency now. The people are likely to accept Gov. Tilden's cooler judgment as to the futility of such restraints; at any rate so far as he is himself concerned, and to restrain him from a position in which he at least could not prevent infinite mischief. The best and only complete security against Confederate war claims, is to put it out of the power of the Confederates, in the capacity of United States authorities for another term of four years, to pass upon them and pay them out of the National Treasury, or to bankrupt the country by war issues in time of peace of legal-tender paper to pay the claims in question and make money plenty. Mr. Riddle was telling the people of the Fourth Tennessee District, until he was visited by a phonographer, that Democratic victory meant the payment of the Southern war claims, and then there would be plenty of money and good times. Perhaps the people of New-York are not prepared to approve that programme. If they are not they have but one safe course, and that is to stop the Southern raid upon the Treasury where it is by defeating the Democratic Party.

As to the sense of safety that the country should feel under the promises of personal protection that Gov. Tilden has given, I quote from his Kent letter, dated Oct. 26, 1860, the following passage, which I think may be pronounced pertinent and instructive:

"What will Mr. Lincoln do? Can he be expected, as President, to understand the state of things in any other sense than that of his own partisan policy? Can he avoid the attempt to maintain the power of his party by the same means which will have acquired it? Can he emancipate himself from the dominion of the ideas, associations, and influences which will have accompanied him in his rise to power? Can he be expected to act in any new direction with sufficient breadth of view and firmness of purpose?"

The question, "What will Mr. Tilden do?" is not to be disregarded; but it is not the question of the day, and we should not permit it to become so. His veto might save the country, but we would prefer leaning upon a more certain support. In his Kent letter he said, after showing the peril of relying upon the possible policy of one man, "I cannot for one assent to the creation of such a state of things." We cannot do better than to apply this doctrine to the case before us; and I say of him, as he said of Lincoln, in concluding the letter from which we have been quoting, "defeat him and all our great interests and hopes are unquestionably safe." M. HALSTEAD.

TILDEN'S REBEL CLAIMS LETTER.

The Louisville (Ky.) Jeffersonian Democrat, regards Gov. Tilden's rebel claims letter as ill-timed. It approves the letter, but says: "The agitation of payment of what the Radicals are pleased to term the 'Southern claims' has had the effect of drawing forth a letter from Gov. Tilden upon the subject. He certainly writes directly to the point and enunciates his position without equivocation. It may gain him some votes in the Northern States, and has already met with the approval of his own party journals and also the approbation of a large number of independent papers, yet we can not help considering its appearance unfortunate. We cannot safely allow any such license to candidates for the Presidency. The practice of long expositional letters of acceptance is a gross innovation and encroachment upon party discipline, but for a candidate, within a few days of an election, to rush into print, to define the position of himself or party upon a collateral or any other issue raised after the two parties have entered the canvass, is something so extraordinary, that it never occured before in the history of our politics.

BROWNLOW ON THE SOLID SOUTH.

In a recent issue of the Knoxville (Tenn.) Chronicle ex-Senator Brownlow says: "The Democratic leaders, in spite of their hypocritical pretensions in platform and resolutions and letters of acceptance, have succeeded in making this a sectional contest again. The cloven foot will show itself, and their clamor for a united South has alarmed the conservative and independent elements of the North, who, however anxious to be rid of Republican rule under the present Administration, are unwilling to trust the Government of the Union in the hands of its foes. They begin to realize that Ben. Hill, of Georgia; ex-Gov. Perry, of South Carolina, and Congressman Goode, of Virginia, are true exponents of the spirit of the Democratic Party, and of what sort of administration may be expected of it, than any platform adopted to deceive. Hon. John Goode, of Virginia, in a recent speech, asked, 'Can you cast your vote for the man (meaning his Republican opponent) who sat in Congress in 1861 and voted men and money to aid in preserving the Union?' These men have grown desperate again. They do not love, but hate the Union with intense and undying hatred, and should they get possession of the Government they will throttle it. They will use all of its augmented powers to strengthen themselves in the South and compel the people of the North to reimburse them for their losses. They will reorganize the Supreme Court and have it declare the amendments unconstitutional, and will then demand compensation for their slaves. Failing in so decided a vote as will elect their Presidential candidate without a doubt, they intend to have a contest over the count of the electoral votes in Congress, and make the fight so hot as to kick up another civil war. Their hand was not more completely shown in the contest of 1860 than in that of 1876. It is written in the Book of Fate that the friends of the Union have got to whip these secessionists once more."

WHAT TILDEN WOULD GIVE US.

Gen. L. F. Ross, of Illinois, writes: "If we are to judge from the State action of the House of Representatives at Washington, we may expect if Tilden is elected to see the old tried and true officials of the Government dismissed from the service—the one-armed soldier, the maimed veteran who has been gaining a scant subsistence in some subordinate civil position, will be ordered to the rear. Rebels of the most offensive character will come to the front. Yes! Tilden would give us a change. We should get rid of the bad and corrupt men now in office, but with them would go all the good, and faithful and true men now in place or power, and in their stead get men without experience, without skill, mere partisan politicians. Between the two men, Gov. Hayes and Gov. Tilden, there is, to my mind, no comparison. One would give us a reformed public service, an administration in harmony and accord with the enlightened spirit of 1876. The other, a change without improvement, and an administration in unison with and conformity to the spirit of the gloomy past."

GOOD CHEER FROM COLORADO.

San Francisco papers print the following:

DENVER, Col., Oct. 9, 1876.

M. D. Boruck, Secretary Republican State Central Committee, San Francisco, Cal.:

SIR: Yours of the 29th ult. is at hand. I thank you for the notice at your hands of the Young Centennial State. "We are a chicken," but we crowed on the 10th of October. The Legislature, which chooses the three Electoral votes, is elected by 2,500 majority. Our State ticket and member of Congress (the fight) is elected by over 1,000, and two United States Senators—glory "enough for one day!" Greeting to the Golden State, and may she keep her word good on the 7th of November for Hayes and Wheeler. Yours, for the right,

J. C. WILSON, Chairman.

THE CONTEST IN NEW-YORK.

THE OUTLOOK IN ONEIDA COUNTY.

VIGOROUS WORK LAID OUT FOR THE REST OF THE CAMPAIGN—THE CANAL BOARD PUTTING MEN TO VOTE—BRIEF SUMMARY OF THE CANVASS IN CHENANGO, OTSEGO, AND DELAWARE COUNTIES.

From Our Special Correspondent.

UTICA, Saturday, Oct. 28, 1876.

Oneida County is one of the old Republican strongholds that has been gradually undergoing political demoralization for the last three or four years, from causes which it is not necessary to inquire into at present, until now there are Democrats here who have the assurance to claim it as a Democratic county. There is no more ground for such a claim, however, than there would be for Republicans to claim New-York as a Republican city, because they sometimes elect a candidate there through the quarrels of their opponents. The fact is, there has been no means of ascertaining what the political sentiment of the county is at present, for the reason that there has not been a full vote polled within eleven and twelve hundred, during the last four years. The last time that anything like a full vote of the county was brought out, [1872] it gave a Republican majority of over three thousand. There have been some changes in the character of the population in several localities since that time, which tend to increase the Democratic strength, but there is good reason to believe that the Republican majority in the county, even now, is not less, on a square vote, than 2,000. The quarrels among Republicans have affected the majorities of that party on local candidates a great deal more than they have changed the sentiments of the people on the national issues that divide the two parties. If every vote was brought out, therefore, on the 7th of November the majority for Hayes and Wheeler would hardly be less than the figure above named. Very little has been done thus far, however, to bring out a full vote on the Republican side, and it is on this fact mainly that the Democrats base whatever hope they have. There is no county in the State where there appears to be so little activity on the Republican side, and so great activity on the Democratic, as Oneida. Senator Conkling's silence during the campaign has led many people outside of the county to attribute the fault to him, and it is certainly true that most of the office-holders in and around Utica, who are supposed to owe their appointments to him, are doing little, if anything, in this campaign, and have refused to subscribe any money to help carry it on. But so far as Senator Conkling is personally concerned, it is equally true that his silence is not of his own choosing, but is imperatively enforced by the condition of his health. The single speech he has made in this canvass, was made against the advice of his physicians, and he said last night that he certainly would not be able to make any more. His eyes are badly inflamed, his face is swollen, and he is compelled to spend much of his time in a darkened room, and to refrain from reading even the current news of the day. But in spite of the physical indisposition of the Senator, and the mental indisposition of his office-holding friends, the Republican canvass in this county is not wholly neglected, and, during the coming week, it promises to be very active. A movement is on foot to enlist the business men of the county in the campaign for Hayes and Wheeler, and it promises to be a success. They are becoming around here, as elsewhere, to the danger that threatens the peace and tranquility of the country, no less than the stability of its finances, from the success of the Democratic Party, and during the balance of the campaign they will make their influence felt. Several mass-meetings are to be held next week, with distinguished speakers from abroad, and the Republicans of Oneida are determined to make up by hard work from now till election day what they have lacked in the earlier part of the campaign. There is one Republican in the county, and he is ranked among the "Conkling men," who has worked hard from the start and deserves credit from Republicans everywhere. This man is Mr. Henry J. Cogeshall, of Sangerfield, who formerly represented the Southern District of Oneida in the Assembly. He is an eloquent and effective speaker, and has stumped the county nightly for the last month at his own expense. He ignores all talk about Conkling and Anti-Conkling, or any other feuds or divisions in the party, past or present, but keeps on working night and day for the cause of Republicanism. He has done pretty much all that has been done in this county, so far, to arouse the Republicans and revive something of the old-time enthusiasm among them. If all the Republicans were to follow his example they might hope for an old time majority. Hitherto the Democrats have had things so much their own way in the canvass here that they had come to resent it as an impertinence on the part of the Republicans to hold a public meeting. Hence the riot in Rome on Monday night last, when the Democratic rabble, in imitation of their Southern allies, undertook to break up a Republican meeting and to prevent the Boys in Blue from parading the streets. But they mistook the latitude for such a demonstration. New-York is not South Carolina, and even Democrats of the better class do not countenance the mob law and the interference with free speech in this State, which too many of them excuse in the South. The Rome riot will probably cost the Democratic Party 500 votes in this county. The Romans, however, are to be allowed one more chance to redeem themselves. The Republicans are to have a repetition of the meeting and the parade next Monday night, and the same speaker (District Attorney Tenney, of Brooklyn,) has consented to be present. The Boys in Blue are determined that free speech shall be maintained in Oneida County, and if the corner-loafers and scalawags of Rome interfere with them next Monday night, it will be at their peril.

The Democrats are making desperate efforts to carry Oneida County, or at least to keep down the Republican majority to the figures of the last three years, and they are receiving all the aid that Tilden and his "reform" Canal Board can give them. Upward of three hundred men have recently been put to work, (or rather they have been put to vote, for there is no work for them to do,) on the line of the Erie Canal in this county. They make a pretense of putting sods here and there on the banks of the canal in anticipation of a "break," and occasionally dig a ditch on some Democrat's land that is liable to be overflowed; but they really do nothing of any account, and the residents on the line of the canal all agree that there is no occasion whatever for their employment at this time, except it be to increase the vote for "Tilden and Reform." Every one understands that this is their mission, both here and on the Oswego Canal, and that it is simply a device to take money out of the State Treasury to buy votes for the Democratic ticket. The Democracy are making special efforts to elect their County Clerk and Sheriff in this county, and are understood to be willing to trade off votes for the Republican member of Congress in return for votes for their candidates for these offices. They are not particularly anxious to return Scott Lord to Congress, and could not do it if they were. Judge Bacon will be elected beyond question, and there is no occasion, therefore, for Republicans to trade votes to secure that result. The Republicans will also elect three out of the four Assemblymen from this county, which will be a gain of two over last year. R. N. Sherman, the Liberal, who carried the first district last year, did not get a renomination from the Democrats, very much to his chagrin. He professed not to be a candidate, after the manner of Seymour, and the Democrats, to his surprise, took him at his word, and nominated another man. James Corbett is the Republican candidate, and will be elected. In the Second District, the Republicans have nominated Everett Case, who will also be elected. The Third District is regarded as doubtful. The Republican candidate is Spencer J. Upson, an excellent man, who will give his Democratic opponent a hard race. In the Fourth District, the Republican candidate is J. Robert Moore, whose election is regarded as certain.

On the national and State tickets, the majorities of this county will depend largely on how the campaign is conducted between now and election. At present, the lowest estimate of Mr. Paddon, Chairman of the Republican County Committee, and other leading Republicans, is 1,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler, and the highest estimate 1,500. With a full vote out and an active energetic canvass during the next week, many believe that the majority might be increased to 2,000. The Democrats brag that they will get 700 majority in this county, which is, of course, the sheerest bosh.

CHENANGO COUNTY.

The Chairman of the Chenango County Committee, G. W. Glover, is confident that this county will do as well, if not better, than it did in 1872, when Gen. Grant's majority was nearly thirteen hundred. Last year the Republican majority was only 600, but, as in most other Republican counties, the vote was over one thousand five hundred less than in 1872. There has not been so active a campaign in many years in this county as the Republicans are making now, and the result will necessarily be a large increase in their majority. The candidate for Congress in this district, comprising Chenango, Otsego, and Delaware Counties, is Solomon Bundy, a lawyer of Oxford, Chenango County, and a very popular man. His election by a good majority is certain. The Republican nominee for Assembly in this county is J. F. Skillman, a worthy candidate, whose election is also assured.

OTSEGO COUNTY.

This county has for years been Democratic by majorities ranging from 40 in 1872 on the Presidential ticket, to 427 last year on the ticket for Secretary of State. This year the Republicans generally concede the county to Tilden by 300 to 400 majority, and the Democrats may possibly elect both of their Assemblymen, as they did last year, though that is by no means certain. The Republicans have put two good men in nomination—John K. Tyler in the First District, and Simeon Barnes in the Second—and there is a fair chance that one or both may be elected.

DELAWARE COUNTY.

Well informed Republicans in this County say they will carry it for Hayes and Wheeler, and Morgan and Rogers, by 800 majority, and perhaps more. Last year the majority for Seward, Secretary of State, was 329, but there were nearly a thousand less votes cast than in 1872, when the majority for Gen. Grant was 1,013. The Republicans will elect their candidate for Assembly in the First District William G. Welch, and probably in the Second District, where James Oliver is the candidate. Last year the Democrats carried the Second District. The Republican candidates in both districts are new men, and said to be in every respect worthy of support.

GEN. HUSTED IN HERKIMER.

A MEMORABLE DEMONSTRATION—THE REPUBLICANS THOROUGHLY AWAKE AND CONFIDENT.

HERKIMER, Saturday, Oct. 28, 1876.

There was a large meeting of Republicans here last evening to hear Gen. James W. Husted. It followed closely upon an immense torch-light procession, and it was nearly 10 o'clock before Gen. Husted was introduced. He hurriedly reviewed a few of the important points of the campaign. He showed the danger of trusting to a party, with the record which the Democratic has given the world. Its latest candidate was in thorough sympathy with the worst spirit and purposes of the party. Mr. Tilden's claims of having reduced the debt of Herkimer and other counties were basely false. He had never saved one cent to any county in the State, and the reduction of taxes was solely due to the fact that Republican legislation had wiped out the bounty debt. It was nothing to Tilden's credit that this debt was finally extinguished during the first year of his administration. He had nothing to do with it. The Republican Party, not the Democratic, had always been the party of patriotism, honor, honesty, economy, and reform. The two parties were fully represented by their candidates. Gov. Hayes, the patriot, soldier, and statesman. Gov. Tilden, devoid of patriotism, a schemer in politics, and a man who has made his wealth by ruining his fellow-men. Gen. Husted then referred to the local issues and candidates, eulogising Hon. Myron A. Tucker, Member of Assembly from Herkimer, and asking the voters to return him.

Judge Yates, of Schenectady, then spoke, and the Glee Club gave some stirring campaign music. The demonstration was a notable one. It proved the people to be thoroughly awake to the importance of the coming election.

A WIDE-AWAKE ADDRESS.

CLOSING WORK OF THE CANVASS—WHAT SHOULD BE DONE ON ELECTION DAY AND THE WEEK PRECEDING.

The following excellent circular has been sent out by the Republican Committee of Essex County. The directions for the closing work of the canvass are terse and sensible:

SIR: We are now so near the day of election, it becomes necessary to look about us with reference to any campaign work that has not yet been done. We have had meetings and processions and speaking of the highest order. All have been enjoyable in the highest degree. Now for the closing labors of the campaign.

Your own common sense and sense of duty, sharpened by the perils of the hour, will suggest the necessary work and watchfulness, but the following points are submitted to your consideration as among those entitled to your highest regards:

1. There must be a carefully-prepared canvass in every election district in the county.

2. Every doubtful voter must be labored with.

3. A dozen active young men should be selected to visit every Republican voter during the week preceding the election, and urge upon him the importance of voting early.

4. Wagons should be provided to bring up the voters living at a distance from the polls. One active man in each school district with a little labor could so arrange it that no Republican voter need remain at home.

5. Fearless challengers should be stationed at every poll to challenge every doubtful vote.

6. Do not keep all your workers in a clump near the polls, but one or more stationed at every point of approach.

7. Every Republican elector in the county should resolve to vote before 12 o'clock. A good send-off is wonderfully exhilarating.

8. Every Republican who has not voted before 1 o'clock should be sent for. To render this work effective, it will be necessary to have a check list at every poll, and a dozen zealous Republicans on hand to go after the delinquents. One vote saved in this way in each election district in the State will make a difference of many thousands.

9. Keep your eye on your ballot until you see it deposited in the box.

☞ The Town Committee should invite an early meeting of a few active Republicans, to consider the means and adopt the necessary measures to get every Republican voter to the polls and to secure every doubtful vote.

If these things are attended to, Essex County will give a Republican majority of 1,300.

THE GREAT EXHIBITION.

THE CLOSE OF THE CENTENNIAL.

THE GERMAN-AMERICAN DAY—PROGRAMME OF THE CLOSING EXERCISES—A MUSEUM AND SCHOOL OF INDUSTRIAL ART—A PERMANENT EXHIBITION.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 29.—The arrangements for the celebration of the German-American day on Thursday contemplate a very full representation of the interior counties of the States. The Mayors of Lancaster, Harrisburg, Allentown, Reading, and Lebanon, have been requested to serve as members of the General Committee of Reception. A large committee is being organized for New-York City, of which Hon. Oswald Ottendorfer has been requested to act as Chairman. A committee of cooperation for Philadelphia has also been constituted, and the invitation to participate is addressed to all citizens and others of German descent, and all German organizations throughout the United States. The programme of the closing exercises on Friday, Nov. 10, is still in the hands of the special committee of

BATTLE OF WHITE PLAINS.

HOW THE CENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY WAS OBSERVED.

THE FOUNDATION-STONE OF A MONUMENT TO COMMEMORATE THE EVENT LAID—THE STORY OF THE BATTLE RE TOLD—CIVIC AND MILITARY EXERCISES.

In this year of Centennial observances, it seemed eminently proper that the Battle of White Plains should be duly commemorated. As a battle it was not of great account, but it had a special value in the fact that it illustrated forcibly the growing steadiness, discipline, and self-reliance of the American Army. Like the Battle of Harlem Plains, it was a check to the British pretensions, and went far to undo the demoralizing effects of the disastrous engagement on Long Island. The American troops engaged did not much exceed one thousand, exclusive of the Militia, whose service was not especially valuable, but they checked the British advance successfully, and fell back to the North Castle hills in good order. The British Army numbered thirteen complete regiments, the right wing being under the command of Sir Henry Clinton, and the left in charge of the Hessian, Gen. De Heister. The result was quite satisfactory, for although a portion of the Continental troops did not come up at the emergent requirement of the hour, others fought gallantly; and, better still, abundant confidence grew out of this spirited resistance to the foes of the young confederation.

g Saturday's celebration of this fight was characterised by much public spirit and patriotism. Party differences were entirely laid aside, and people who just now stand in strong antagonism met on common ground and agreed to forget their present issues, so that they might the better do justice to these century-old memories. The Westchester Historical Society had charge of the celebration, and conducted it admirably. The inclement weather interfered to some extent with the order of procedure, but no serious harm was done, and the enthusiasm of the people was not to be allayed by the drizzling rain which fell during the greater part of the day. It was on Chatterton Hill, which overlooks the pretty little village of White Plains, that the battle was most hotly waged, and here it was supposed that the commemoration would be most fitly held. A platform had been accordingly erected on the summit of the hill, and it was intended that the orator of the day, Mr. Clarkson N. Potter, should here deliver his address. But it rained so persistently that it would have been inexcusable to keep the people in front of the stand to listen to eloquence, no matter how fervid it might be or how laden with great memories, and so it was decided that the oratory should be bounded by the walls of the Court-house, a judicious resolve under the circumstances. There was accordingly some resemblance to the King of France's 40,000 men, who marched up the hill and then marched down again. But on the way down in this case an important ceremony was performed in the matter of laying the corner-stone of a commemorative monument. This was done by Major Gen. Husted, with full Masonic rites and observances.

White Plains was quite astir over the celebration. Its bunting out its flags freely, and business was for the season merged in pageantry and patriotism. The wet weather did not daunt anyone, and if some gay uniforms were a little bedraggled, nobody grudged the defilement of a little gold fringe or the soaking of some hundreds of blue jackets. About 1 o'clock a procession was organized in the Broadway of White Plains, and passing through Railroad avenue, it reached Chatterton Hill. Its aspect was chiefly military, but it had interesting civic features as well. The Eagle Troop of Cavalry of the National Guard of the State of New-York led the van, but militia cavalry is not usually imposing, and it wasn't so in this case. The infantry, consisting of a portion of the Twenty-seventh Regiment, under Col. Underhill, and a battalion of the Sixteenth Regiment, commanded by Lieut. Col. Cooley, showed to better advantage. The military was in the leading division. The reviewing officer was Major Gen. Husted, who was attended by his staff. Col. Bodine was there, erect and stately as of old, and riding like a Centaur. The representatives of the Masonic Order followed in the next division, marshaled by Capt. George Vanderbilt, and then came the third division, which was altogether of a civic character. In this division was the orator of the day and invited guests, escorted by a body of men dressed in the uniform of the continental army. The county officers, Board of Supervisors, Westchester County Medical Society, Committee on Entertainment, Lyceum Club, Westchester County Historical Society, and citizens from town and county, halped to swell this division. The procession moved to the sounds of military music, and in a little while Chatterton Hill was reached. Here the scene was animated and spirited. Between processionists and spectators there were at least five thousand people taking part in the celebration. The proceedings here were, in the nature of a review, and at its conclusion the procession moved back over the same ground.

About half-way on the hill side is the site of the monument, the corner stone of which was yesterday laid in accordance with Masonic usages. The site is at the corner of Battle and Washington avenues. The base of the monument is a solid mass. The lower portion of the pedestal will be twelve feet square and will have a cannon on each corner. Three pieces were donated by Congress during its last session. The front of the monument will bear the inscription: "Battle of White Plains, October 28, 1776," and the rear of it will be inscribed as follows: "Erected by People of Westchester County, October 28, 1876." Upon this structure will be placed a lesser one, eight feet square, with bronze eagles at the corners, and from this there will be a shaft thirty feet high, with the Goddess of Liberty at the top. The entire height of the monument will be fifty feet. It will be built of granite which was found on the spot where the left wing of Washington's army was stationed. The Masonic ceremony of laying the corner-stone was in the usual form, and Gen. Husted supplemented it by some brief remarks proper to the occasion. Then the procession took its way to the Court-house, where the exercises of the day were brought to a conclusion. Hon. Edward F. Delancey presided. First, prayer was offered up by Rev. Dr. Stephen H. Tyng, Jr., who is Chaplain of the Grand Lodge of Masons, and the Chairman introduced the orator of the day as

Mr. Clarkson N. Potter commenced by reminding his hearers that they stood upon historic ground. Near that very spot, one hundred years ago, was waged the strife of battle. Close by were laid the bones of their fathers and of those who stood in conflict against them. He then gave a historic account of the battle which was fought on one hundred years ago, described the movements of the opposing armies after the battle of Long Island, and showed the progress which had been made by the American troops in all those soldierly qualities which crowned their efforts with ultimate success. He gave in brief the history of the Revolutionary War, describing the advances made by the people from complaint to resistance, from resistance to rebellion, from rebellion to revolution, and from revolution to national Government. Day by day, he said, the courage and determination of the Army rose with the crisis. They did well to recall those days. Independence was indeed a desperate venture. The country contained about three millions of people, scattered along the Atlantic sea-board. Behind them was a wilderness, unexplored and unknown. Canada, unfriendly, was on the north, and on the south was Spain, if not unfriendly, at least cold. The colonies were even divided among themselves, and sympathy with Britain was outspoken. In those days, when so much was heard of corruption, it was interesting, said Mr. Potter, to know how much people were then suspected of venality, and in this connection he quoted the utterances of Mr. Adams on the subject. And yet, he said, notwithstanding the disadvantages under which they labored, the people were all determined on resistance. There was no time for trifling, and there was no trifling. Through all their privations and disadvantages, they would listen to no terms from Gen. Howe short of independence. Mr. Potter next drew a picture of the contrast existing between the America of the present and of those days. The dangers which menaced their fathers came, he said, from without; those which threatened them came from within—the lust of wealth, the pride of power, the enervation of luxury. In conclusion, Mr. Potter pointed out the grave duties and responsibilities which belonged to so great a country as theirs. The world, he said, had a right to speak from a land so favored, the noblest influence and the most lofty example.

Hon. Chauncey N. Depew, in a brief but very bright and telling speech, moved a vote of thanks to the orator of the day. He laid especial emphasis on the fact that they met on common ground and shared common memories, and that on such occasions all party antagonisms and enmities were buried. He then formally moved a resolution to the effect that the thanks of the Westchester Historical Society be tendered to Mr. Potter, and that a copy of his address be requested, to be deposited in the archives of the society and for publication.

The resolution was carried by acclamation. Rev. Dr. Tyng then offered prayer and pronounced the benediction. This closed the exercises of the day.

THE PERIL IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

The Troy Times prints the following extract from a private letter written by a member of the Legislature of South Carolina to a relative in Troy:

"Oh, ——, your people at the North have no idea of the trouble we have gone through—I mean the colored people here. I tell you, if you were here and saw the preparation the white people are making, you would think of war at times. They have made an open declaration to kill all the leaders of our party here, and I tell you, a fellow in my fix about now don't know how long he has to live in this world. The times here are as if one was living on the frontier. I propose, God being my helper, to stand until there is nothing to stand to. We hope to carry our State. We can carry it if our people have a protection to vote. We look to the North to elect Hayes and Wheeler. I wish I was with you, if only for an hour, to tell you of the sufferings of our people. I suppose you have heard of the killing of several colored men on Saturday last. Oh, pray for us that God may deliver us from those who so meanly use us. Ask the prayers of God's people in our behalf every where. A man was killed yesterday who was a member of the Legislature with me."

MONDAY, Oct. 30—A. M.

The statement of the Associated Banks, issued from the Clearing-house on Saturday last, was more favorable than generally anticipated, the surplus reserve showing a decrease of only $68,800. The changes in the statement are an increase of $121,800 in the legal-tender average, and of $254,400 in circulation, and a decrease of $5,915,200 in deposits, $2,127,900 in loans, and $1,669,400 in specie. The banks now hold $10,983,450 in excess of legal requirements.

The following shows the condition of the New-York City banks this week as compared with last:

	Oct. 21.	Oct. 28.	Oct. 30, '75.
Loans	$260,968,700	$259,840,800	$275,914,900

Circulation	14,836,700	15,091,100	17,997,700

The following shows the relations between the total reserve and the total liabilities:

	Oct. 21.	Oct. 28.	Differences.
Specie	$17,616,600	$15,947,200	Dec. $1,669,400

The money market worked smoothly throughout, with the majority of call loans at 2½@3½ ₱ cent., though there were some transactions as low as 2, and some as high as 4 ₱ cent. In the discount market the prevailing rates were 5@6½ ₱ cent.

The foreign advices reported an improved tone in both British consols and American securities, growing out of the prospect of a pacific solution of the Eastern question. Consols closed at 95⅜@95¾ for both money and the account, old 1865s at 103¼, 1867s at 108¾@108⅞, 10-40s at 108⅜, and new 5s at 106⅜. Erie was weak, especially the preferred, which closed at 17, against 18 last week. French rentes were higher, and closed at 105f. 32½c. The Bank of England lost £216,000 on balance during the week, while the Bank of France gained 16,508,000 francs, and the Bank of Germany 2,785,000 marks.

The peaceful character of the European dispatches had a tendency to weaken the gold market, and the price declined from 110 to 109⅝, with a subsequent partial recovery. Cash gold, after loaning as high as 1-64 ₱ cent. ₱ diem, became easy, and loaned at "flat" to 2 ₱ cent.

The foreign exchange market was quiet and lower on a very limited demand. At the close actual business was done at $4 81¾@$4 82, and at $4 83½@$4 83¾ for prime bankers' 60-day and demand bills, respectively.

Government bonds during the week were in fair demand, and the dealings were caaracterized by a firm undertone. Prices closed at an advance of ¼@½ ₱ cent. over the final quotations of the previous Saturday. Railroad bonds were firm and in moderately good request. State bonds were steady.

Speculation on the Stock Exchange was irregular, and operators seemed to be not a little puzzled in their efforts to determine the probable future course of values. Early in the week the confident hopes entertained that the railroad war was about to be settled tended to impart strength to the shares of the trunk lines. But, later, when appearances indicated that the amicable adjustment of differences so earnestly desired by stockholders was as distant as ever, and reports were current that some of the companies had made time bargains with shippers, which rendered it impossible for them to recede from their present attitude, a feeling of disappointment and despondency ensued, under the influence of which the early advance in prices was practically lost. The weakest stock on the list was St. Paul, which declined from 30 to 24¾ for the common, and from 61½ to 55¼ for the preferred, with closing sales at a trivial recovery. The decline in this stock was based on the serious falling off in earnings, and the failure of the wheat crop in the region traversed by the road. In sympathy with St. Paul, Northwestern was weak. The coal shares were also weak and lower. Western Union fluctuated between 71¾ and 74⅜, and closed at 73⅜. Hannibal and St. Joseph made a sharp advance, but closed at a reaction of about 1 ₱ cent. from the highest point. In the final dealings the general market was weak in tone.

Included in the sales have been 3,250 bbls. shipping Extras, mostly of which the brands are not stated, 1,000 bbls. Minnesota straight Extras, 1,150 bbls. do. patent do.; 1,100 bbls. Winter Wheat Extras, (for shipment; these mainly at $5 75@$6 25,) 400 bbls. Superfine, 600 bbls. No. 2 at quoted prices.... Southern Flour dull and about as last quoted.... Sales, 900 bbls.... Of Rye Flour, 425 bbls. sold, in lots, at $4 70@$5 10 for good to very choice superfine State and Pennsylvania.... Of Corn-meal, 675 bbls., including Yellow Western, in lots, at $2 85@$3; Brandywine, in lots, at $3 40.... Corn-meal, in bags, in fair demand at $1@$1 35 ₱ 100 lb.... Of the sales were 1,950 bags coarse, mostly on the basis of $1 09 for City Mills. Buckwheat Flour in request at from $3 50@$3 90 for good to very choice State and Pennsylvania.

GRAIN—In the Wheat line, business was quite limited to-day, with prices however quoted somewhat steadier on the better qualities, the inferior of which were very moderate. Most of the trade of the day was in Spring grades, for export account.... Sales have been reported at 84,000 bushels, including New White State, about 2,000 bushels at $1 35; good to prime new No. 2 Chicago Spring at $1 26@$1 27; New-York No. 2 Spring at $1 25; do. TO THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The undersigned merchants, bankers, and business men of New-York, respectfully submit the following statements for the information of all parties interested therein:

In 1865, Aug. 31, the National Debt reached its maximum amount.....	$2,756,431,591 43
Reduced June 30, 1876, to..	2,099,439,344 99
A reduction, during this period of eleven years since the war of.....	$656,992,246 44
The annual interest charge for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1866, was.....	133,067,741 69
For the past year, ending June 30, 1876.....	100,243,271 23
A reduction in the annual interest charge since 1866 of.....	32,824,470 46
The annual expenditures of the Government in 1876, as compared with 1866, show a reduction of.....	262,349,619 66
And in Federal taxation more than.....	$300,000,000 00

Other great results of this financial policy have been that, despite an indebtedness of more than two thousand millions, and while diminishing taxation, the credit of the country has been raised to the unprecedented point, that its four and a half per cent. bonds, issued in redemption of the six per cents, have been selling rapidly, at home and abroad, above par in gold; and the Government has been enabled every year since 1866, not only to keep within its income, but to apply an average annual sum of $56,742,284 20 toward the payment of its indebtedness.

A careful consideration of these results of judicious management of the National Treasury during Republican administration of the Government, induces the undersigned to express their confident belief that a continuation of the same general policy which has so well sustained our commercial honor, and aided so powerfully in the preservation of the Union itself, would be best promoted by the election of Gen. RUTHERFORD B. HAYES and WILLIAM A. WHEELER to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States.

The Democratic plan to carry this City—and with it the State—by fraud, is not likely to succeed. Its authors have already lost confidence in it, and have shown much hesitation in pushing it to completion. The last day's registration, on Saturday, fell short of the figures which the Democratic leaders had fixed upon by at least 16,000. The measures taken by the proper authorities to prevent the casting of the fraudulent vote which has been arranged for in the registration are very complete, and it will be dangerous for any man to offer a vote in this City who is not entitled to one. The fellows who had undertaken the voting begin to see this, and are, in the slang of their own class, "weakening." The State, outside of New-York and Kings, has given a Republican majority of over 50,000 three times within eight years. In the last Presidential year it gave us 80,000. If it will do its best to reach that figure this year, we shall carry the State by a handsome majority. Let us have the full vote of the interior, and the City Democrats shall not overcome it.

Further developments of the infamous plot of the Pennsylvania Democrats show that the New-York party managers participated in it. To print fifty thousand fraudulent tax receipts, it was necessary to secure a peculiar water-marked paper. This was finally manufactured in Connecticut, and the desired article is said to have been produced by the assistance of the Democratic "Literary Bureau" in Liberty street. The package was taken from a hotel in Cortlandt street New-York, and was seized when in the hands of two members of the Democratic Executive Committee of Philadelphia, one of the rascals being Treasurer of that concern. This conspiracy was designed to carry Pennsylvania for SAMUEL J. TILDEN, the "Reform" candidate of the Democracy. The evidence of intended fraud is so clear, complete, and conclusive that the question of guilt admits of no debate. The only missing links are those which connect the several culprits together. Two Democratic committeemen are caught with the forged papers in their possession. They have accessories, and to find and punish them as they deserve is the next duty of the authorities. An enormous crime has been prevented. The consequences of this discovery must fall upon the plotters.

Mr. GEORGE BLISS, United States Attorney for the Southern District, in a second letter to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, calls attention to a significant weakness in Mr. TILDEN'S explanation of his income tax. Mr. TILDEN, through SINNOTT, undertook to tell the public why he had not made any returns for certain years. He had "good and honorable reasons." There were "difficulties incident to attempting a specific statement." He preferred to be "exempted from adjudicating on the facts and the law. * * * The law was unsettled." "It was not agreeable to make a return on a doubtful or disputed theory or in contradiction of even unmeritorious claims made in behalf of the Government." With such an array of reasons, Mr. TILDEN could not bring his sensitive mind to make any return for 1864, nor for 1865, nor for 1866, nor for 1867. But in 1868 he suddenly overcame all his "difficulties," concluded to "adjudicate on the facts and the law," and found it entirely "agreeable" to make a return. He declared that his taxable income was $14,364. Then he again succumbed to his scruples, and allowed the Assessor to tax him as he would, and paid the penalty without wincing. For the explanation of this eccentricity it is vain to go to Mr. TILDEN or Judge SINNOTT. It is supplied, however, by Mr. BLISS, who points out that in 1868 there was a change in the Assistant Assessor's office, and Mr. TILDEN was obliged to show the new man about how much he ought to be assessed at.

The "Bureau" is busy circulating reports of what is thought of the situation in New-York by various prominent Republicans. Whenever any of our friends hear that any well-known Republican "gives up New-York," it may be set down as coming from the Bureau, and as false. The Republicans of the interior have only to get out their full vote and New-York is as safe as Vermont.

The efforts of the proper authorities to ferret out cases of illegal naturalization and registration have frightened the repeaters, but they have fired the editorial heart. As a rule, no mention of the supposed politics of the supposed offenders has been made. It is simply said that these frauds are going on, and that similar frauds are intended. The Democrats take alarm at once, as though they knew that the bogus voters were all prepared in the Democratic interest. An attempt to defend the ballot-box is called "terrorism," and the publication of lists of names and residences of men of straw is denounced as an "attempt to terrify voters." It is notoriously impossible in this Democratic City to deprive any Democrat of his vote so long as he has a shadow of a right to cast it. But the preparations made to prevent fraudulent voting will, it is hoped, be effectual in every case where men attempt to cast a ballot without a legal right. Hence, the frantic howls of the Democrats. It is a great pity that the mild-mannered and timid youth of Mackerelville and Cow Bay, and the curled darlings who have just come in from the poultry-yards and hay-stacks of the rural districts should be so easily scared by the announcement that we intend to have a fair election. But this is just the sort of "terrorism" that makes fraudulent voting difficult.

Minister WASHBURNE has promptly called the attention of the French Government to the monstrous and improbable falsehood published in the Paris Figaro as statements from M. DU SOMMERARD, Chief Commissioner of France to the Centennial Exposition. These allegations would have been bad enough to bear if they had been made by a private visitor from abroad. But they are printed in a letter which professes to have been written by M. DU SOMMERARD himself to a friend in Germany. Speaking by authority, the writer declares that the Americans have tried to burn the French exhibits; that the Centennial policemen are chosen from the worst elements of our population; that there is a combination of judges to shield those who rob the exhibitors, and that American society is generally corrupt and debauched. This is a tolerably heavy indictment. It is too obviously calumnious to accomplish any evil purpose. Nevertheless, the writer, who is an official under the control of the French Government, should be recalled or severely censured. It is barely possible that the letter is a forgery. Certainly it is difficult to understand how a person of M. DU SOMMERARD'S standing could have penned such atrocious slanders.

In the matter of challenging votes on election day, it has been said that Republicans lack that "staying" quality which is so requisite to complete success. It is not an agreeable duty. The gentry usually intrusted by the Democrats with looking after the interests of the party at the polls are not apt to be as civil and polished in demeanor as—the editor of the World, let us say. And it is not surprising that the honest men put on guard grow weary of the blackguardism and vulgarity which they are often compelled to encounter at the voting-places. If they become discouraged, and drop out of the line of defense before night, the enemy have gained their object, and the crime against the ballot becomes easy. This year the preparations for fraudulent voting by the Democrats have been so open and conspicuous that especial patience and persistence, as well as vigilance, on the part of Republican challengers is needed.

We call the especial attention of our readers to Mr. STOUGHTON'S admirable letter, in another column, on Mr. TILDEN'S rash and frightened announcement regarding Southern claims. Mr. STOUGHTON shows why MR. TILDEN could not carry out his promises if he would, and why his promises are to be distrusted, even if he were able to carry them out. His letter is very clear and convincing.

THE GREAT ISSUES.

Little time now remains for argument. Nearly all that has been heard from the beginning of the canvass has been on one side. The Democrats set out with a declaration of their purpose to wage an aggressive campaign. They have had no leisure for the fulfillment of their promise. Throughout, they have been on the defensive. The political, professional, and private record of their Presidential candidate has kept in constant exercise their apologetic skill, and they have had neither heart nor opportunity for going much beyond it. All else they have contrived to do has been to stimulate a vague desire for change, by methods which have only alienated from them still further the respect and confidence of the community. They have insulted its intelligence by attributing to partisan causes financial and business difficulties that are universal in their operation; and they have utterly failed to meet the allegations which have been preferred against the character of their candidate, and the principles, tendencies, and tactics of their own party. Leave out of the account the demand for change, which the Democrats have fostered, and what have they contributed to the canvass of which the thoughtful citizen can take cognizance? Even this demand has reacted prejudicially to themselves. It has called the conservative, reasoning forces of the country into play; and these are enlisted on the side of the Republican party.

The changes involved in Democratic success would be tantamount to revolution. They are not reforms; they are a reversal of the policy deliberately sanctioned by the loyal people of the Union, a restoration to power of classes and interests diametrically opposed to the established results of the war; a reopening of questions which the stern logic of the war closed, and a general unsettling of affairs on whose quiet development depends the return of peace and prosperity. The scope and danger of these tendencies were at first imperfectly realized. As they gradually became apparent, the issues of the contest assumed specific form, and to-day are clear and well understood. They may be classified as sectional, financial, and commercial. They have a direct bearing on the national credit, the debt, the currency, the taxation, the administration of the Government. Indirectly, they foreshadow fresh strife between North and South, a renewal of business alarm and disaster, a disturbance of values, and a destruction of confidence, the consequences of which it would be difficult to exaggerate.

The choice is not simply between one party and another. It is a choice between the principles which assailed the Union and the principles which saved it; between men who were rebels and men who were loyal and true; between the policy that regards reconstruction as an accomplished fact and the policy that would undo reconstruction and invest its enemies with power; between repudiation and good faith; between rag money and resumption of specie payments; between the payment of rebel claims and the expansion of the subsidy system for the benefit of the South and steady resistance to these attacks upon the Treasury; between panic and returning business and industrial activity; between peace endangered and peace made sure. The alternatives are too well defined to be mistaken. The considerations they open out extend far beyond the ordinary partisan range. They appeal to multitudes not usually concerned in party conflicts, and invest the struggle with an importance not possessed by any election since the suppression of the rebellion.

Of the appreciation of this fact there could be no more striking evidence than the array of names attached to the document addressed to Mr. EVARTS, which we print in another column. Not for years has there been a more significant combination of wealth and financial knowledge, of mercantile character and enterprise, of the various elements which make New-York the great City it is, than has been called forth by the perils of the present crisis. It is only necessary to glance at the list to discover how profound is the apprehension awakened by the mere probability of Democratic victory, and how intimate is the alliance between the conservative forces of finance and commerce and the essential elements of Republican strength.

Not less expressive are the terms in which the address is couched. It tells of the fear that "the repose of the country," its good name, and the fundamental conditions of its prosperity "are being gravely endangered, while the people are beguiled into a sense of security, by unfounded representations, and promises" on the part of the Democrats. Mr. AUGUST BELMONT'S delusive assurances are set aside as at variance with undoubted facts. Eighteen bank Presidents, the leading mercantile firms of the city, and capitalists with Mr. JOHN JACOB ASTOR at their head, all agree in declaring in effect, that the Democratic Party as now constituted is inimical to the public credit and dangerous to the public peace. Before this declaration of opinion Mr. BELMONT as a financial authority, sinks into obscurity. The experience, the wealth, and the character of the City are against him, and against Mr. TILDEN, on the financial issue—the paramount issue in this contest. And the reasons assigned are beyond dispute. The Democratic Party is identified with the rebellion and the principles which gave it life. The advent of that party to power would be the precursor of Southern claims for compensation to an extent that would jeopardize the solvency of the National Treasury and entail upon the tax-payers burdens that could not be borne. The radical change in the policy of the Government which the election of Mr. TILDEN would imply would, in the judgment of our most distinguished citizens, not only impair the credit of the Government at home and abroad, and postpone indefinitely the resumption of specie payments, but would also "endanger in the future our peace and prosperity." To this testimony there can be no answer. It is a protest against Mr. TILDEN and his false pretenses which every solvent man in the land will know how to value

Even more remarkable than this address to Mr. EVARTS is the statement we print in a preceding column. We refer to the exhibit of what has been accomplished by the Republican Party in regard to the reduction of debt, the reduction in the interest charge, and in Federal taxation during the period which has elapsed since the war. To these evidences of the wise management of the Treasury under Republican administration is added, as still further proof, the progress made in the funding of the debt at rates of interest which only implicit faith in the Republican policy could make possible. On this basis the election of the Republican candidates is urged. And urged by whom? By JAMES LENOX, who, never until now, affixed his name to a political appeal; by JOHN JACOB ASTOR, and by MOSES TAYLOR, who until now have voted with the Democratic Party; by WILLIAM E. DODGE, and others, who, like him, have held independent positions; by merchants, bankers, and business men of the same high standing in the community, who, with them, realize the momentous nature of the issues involved in this contest for the Presidency.

BENEFITS OF REAL REFORM.

We have of late devoted considerable space to the discussion of civil service reform, in the belief that it is a question in which all thoughtful and patriotic men feel a deep interest, and that it will be one of the cardinal features of the policy of the Administration of President HAYES. It may be worth while to sum up its principal advantages, which are more numerous and far-reaching than those who have but superficially studied the subject suppose.

Its first and most palpable effect would, of course, be the improvement of the personnel of the service. However great the differences of opinion may be as to the utility and efficiency of examinations as tests of the relative merit of applicants, there can be no question that an impartial system of examination would produce better results than the present hap-hazard method of selection. Even if the examinations should not weigh all of the qualifications of the candidates, they would certainly furnish some guarantee of fitness, whereas the present system furnishes none at all. The usefulness, past or prospective, of the applicant to the politician who recommends him, not his ability to perform the duties of the place, is now the controlling consideration in appointments. Examinations would at least test the ability of the candidate to do some of the essential things required of the employes of the Government—to write a decent letter or add a column of figures correctly, for example—whether they proved other qualifications or not. Grant that they are not a perfect method of selection, that they sometimes give superficial glibness an advantage over solid but modest merit, they would at least secure some good qualities. They are not to be compared with an ideally perfect system such as never has and never can be secured, but with the notoriously vicious system which has so long prevailed. Their adoption would not stand in the way of a better system, should one ever be devised. When given a practical turn and supplemented with probationary trial at the desk, as they were under the rules devised by the late commission, they secure, as experience proved, an immeasurably higher order of capacity and intelligence than had ever before been brought into the service. Whether or not they secured the highest order of talent that the salaries would command may be discovered when administrative agencies anywhere reach ideal perfection, not before.

But even if such a system did not provide better capacity at the outset, it would secure better service in the long run by giving permanency and stability to the positions in the civil service, and so gathering the benefits of training and experience. One of the greatest curses of the system of purely political appointments is that it keeps the service in a continual turmoil of change. Every incoming Congressman of the party in power demands his share of the patronage to reward his followers or gratify his own thirst for power. If he is influential or importunate enough, his demand is complied with, and the rolls are scrutinized time and again to spy out the names of those whose influence has grown stale, or whose political fealty is doubted, in order that they may be thrust out to make places for his adherents. When, in the mutations of politics, he falls from power, his appointees are exposed to the same fate, and so the service is kept in a state of perpetual change, uncertainty, and apprehension.

But in our opinion, the improvement of the civil service would not be the only, or even the chief, benefit springing from civil service reform. So far as such an improvement should directly affect the people, it would be in the saving of expense resulting from increased efficiency in the public servants. The only direct effect of the employment of one competent clerk to do the work of three incompetents would be the saving of the salaries of two of the displaced clerks. But it would be a very inadequate and superficial view of the matter which should consider this to be the sole advantage of the change in the methods of appointment. The indirect benefits would be vastly greater. The chief of these would be the destruction of the power of politicians to use the public service for their own selfish ends. The most dangerous effect of the spoils system is that it enables the men who have obtained control of the patronage to surround themselves with political mercenaries devoted to their personal fortunes, and skilled in managing primaries and conventions. By the adroit use of these agents, unscrupulous men are enabled to secure their own continuance in power against the real wishes of the people. Having secured the nomination by these means, they feel assured that the people, in obedience to party discipline, will meekly cast their ballots for them. This is the true reason of the frequent election of men who are not the first choice of one in ten of the voters, and of their continuance in power long after the real sentiment of the people has turned against them. It is the strongest possible argument in favor of civil service reform that it would break up this corrupt and undemocratic system, and restore the management of the machinery of nomination to the hands of disinterested citizens, having no other interest in the result than that candidates should be chosen who would truly represent the people.

One other great benefit would spring from civil service reform. It would restore the independence of the Legislative and Executive branches of the Government. Congress has virtually usurped the power of appointment which the Constitution vests in the Executive, but it has been compelled to surrender a part of its own independence in exchange. Congressmen who are under obligations to executive officers for favors in the way of appointments are expected to return the favor when the pet measures of those officers come up for legislative action. The practice revolves in a vicious circle. Cabinet officers make improper appointments for Congressmen, to save their measures from slaughter, and Congressmen vote for measures that their unbiased judgment would not approve, lest the fountains of patronage should be stopped up. The benefits of civil service reform, it appears, would affect not merely the service itself, but would penetrate to the very centre of our political system.

THE ANXIOUS CANDIDATE.

No more truthful and thoroughly courteous description of TILDEN'S greed of office, has ever been made than that used by ex-President WOOLSEY at New Haven, the other night. He said that "Mr. TILDEN has sought the office with uncommon anxiety." It is very true, though it is no less an unobjectionable expression. Even Mr. TILDEN, worried as he is with the cares of this campaign, and up to his ears in intrigue, must faintly smile when he sees this light touch of the master hand. Never before, so far as men can remember, has so high an office been sought with so much anxiety and with so much scheming. It is not a case of the office seeking the man. It is not even true that the man stands waiting to see if the office is coming his way. But he is out, early and late, hunting for the Presidency, begging for it, scheming for it, laying wires, and placing traps. He figured for the nomination in the same way that a small village politician figures to capture a cross-roads primary convention. JOHN KELLY declared that he could not carry his own State. The Express ridiculed him as a candidate who could not be elected if he were nominated; and the World sneered at him as "a railroad lawyer," without the qualifications which were required in a Presidential candidate. But, in spite of all these discouragements, the sharp lawyer kept on writing, writing, and sending out agents, posters, circulars, advertisements, and all sorts of documents just as if he were in the patent medicine trade.

Nobody denies that there were able Democrats presented to the St. Louis Convention. There were at least four possible candidates who were recognized as blameless, dignified, and every way worthy to be standard-bearers of the party. But they had not manufactured that sort of public opinion which is secured by means of advertising agencies. They had not sent out "drummers," as commercial houses sometimes do, to drum up support in distant States. They had not put down wires and traded on official influence months before the convention was called. TILDEN had done all this; and while the nominating convention was hurrahing over the success which he had worked so hard for, the crafty railroad lawyer was rubbing his hands with glee behind the scenes. Is it any wonder that some of the more sober Democratic politicians sullenly said, "You have nominated yourself; now go ahead and elect yourself?"

And Mr. TILDEN has been carrying on this business ever since. He is trying to elect himself. He is the most anxious candidate ever seen in this free country. He is managing the canvass now just as he did before the nomination, except that he has been obliged to spread himself over more territory. He is not an honest dealer seeking to exploit the virtues of his own wares, but a quack who claims credit for wisdom and skill which he does not possess. Every public utterance of his since his nomination has been evasive, cunning, wordy. There is nothing warm and manly about anything he has said or done. The administration of Gov. DIX replenished the State Treasury, which had been emptied by the previous Democratic administration; and when this had been done and TILDEN succeeded to a restored State credit, he dishonestly advertised himself as the man who had reduced taxation. Although it was a Republican Governor and Legislature that practically reduced the rate of taxation, TILDEN is to-day placarding himself on the fences of the country as the author of that reduction—just as though he were a side-show to a circus, or a patent liniment. It was shown that he had paid a paltry income-tax when he was known to be making much money. He printed a pettifogging rejoinder, in which he made many words about non-essential points, and wholly evaded the main issue. It was urged that his election would open the way to the payment of enormous claims against the Government. He rushed out with a letter in which he said much about the impossibility of assuming the rebel debt, or paying for slaves, but entirely ignored the graver proposition that one hundred and twenty millions of dollars in private claims were entirely outside of any constitutional prohibition, and not likely to be subject to his veto. He is the nominee of a party which is largely in favor of inflation and practical repudiation. Since his dearly-bought nomination he has not dared to make one clear decided, and unmistakable declaration upon this all-important subject.

This is the sort of man who is "working like a beaver" to elect himself to the Presidency. If he should succeed it may be said truthfully that the office will have been brought down lower than it ever was before. During almost all his long life, Mr. TILDEN has been a sharp, crafty lawyer, chiefly engaged in that sort of litigation which requires shrewdness and cunning, rather than eminent intellectual abilities. He has brought into the canvass precisely these lighter qualities. He has played for the high office of the Presidency like a gamester. No art was too small, no trick too low, for him to use. His figure in the canvass is petty and undignified. His money, his Gubernatorial influence, the cheap clap-trap of his "reforms," and his wide advertising, are expected to elect him. It does not seem possible that such tactics can win in a country like ours, where manliness and dignity have not quite gone out of politics. Rather, it appears now as if, when the final goal is reached, this anxious candidate will come in breathless, perspiring, covered with grime and dust, but behind-hand.

THE ARCTIC MYSTERY.

The British Arctic expedition, under the command of Capt. NARES, which sailed less than two years ago, in search of the North Pole, has at last been heard from. The expedition has penetrated as far as Valentia Bay, on the coast of Iceland, where Capt. NARES has temporarily left his vessel, in order to undertake a steam-sledge journey toward London.

The record of recent Arctic exploration is exceedingly monotonous. The expeditions of KANE, HAYES, HALL, and NARES, successively started with well-equipped vessels, ostensibly to reach the North Pole. They stopped at Upernavik, in Greenland, long enough to send word home that they were in excellent spirits, and confident of success, and then proceeded up Smith's Sound, in order to go into Winter quarters in the neighborhood of the eightieth degree of latitude. As to how the explorers passed their time while in Winter quarters, we have, of course, only their own testimony, but we all know that not one of them ever reached the Pole. On the contrary, the expeditions have uniformly returned at unexpected periods, with the report that on reaching eighty-two degrees of latitude, be the same more or less, they found further progress impossible, and so returned home to mention the fact. Capt. NARES claims to have reached latitude 83° 20′, which is a trifle more latitude than any previous explorer has claimed. Still he did not approach anywhere near the Pole, and the results achieved by the expedition under his command are in no respect more satisfactory than those achieved by his predecessors.

It is impossible that this sort of thing should go on indefinitely without invoking the suspicions of the long-suffering and credulous public. The time has come when people will insist upon knowing what is the attraction which makes most officers so anxious to go into Winter quarters in Smith's Sound. Their pretense of wanting to go to the North Pole is altogether too transparent, and their excuses for returning home without having achieved their professed object are suspiciously contradictory. KANE and HAYES asserted that they found an open polar sea, which they could not cross because they were unfortunately unprovided with the proper boats. HALL said that instead of an open polar sea there was a nice overland road to the Pole, over which he promised to travel in sledges; but as he died before he was quite ready to return home, he avoided the task of explaining why his promised sledge journey was not undertaken. As for Capt. NARES, he informs us that he did not go to the Pole because in so doing he would have been obliged to cross a frozen sea, where the ice was only 160 feet in thickness. What his precise weight is we are not told, but even if he weighs four hundred pounds, the ice was thick enough to bear him. The English people may not be very familiar with ice, but they cannot help knowing that ice 160 feet thick can be crossed, with reasonable care, by even the heaviest naval officer in the service, and if Capt. NARES tries to make them believe that the only reason why he did not pursue his journey was that he was doubtful as to the strength of ice of less than 175 feet in thickness, he will meet with incredulity, and possibly scorn. When four successive expeditions spend a Winter in Smith's Sound, and return with the report that they could not reach the Pole because there was too much ice or too little ice, or because there was an open polar sea or because there was not an open polar sea, intelligent people cannot avoid the conclusion that there is something in this business which is kept from them, and will demand to know the true reason why explorers are so anxious to spend a Winter in Smith's Sound.

It will be remembered that some years since a party of scientific persons spent a Winter on the summit of Mount Washington, in order, as they alleged, to make meteorological observations. They were careful not to take their wives with them, and the fact that the summit of the mountain is inaccessible in Winter rendered them secure from the incursions of visitors. When it was subsequently found out that these same scientific persons passed their time in flying kites, under the shallow pretext of observing the force of the wind, and in sliding down hill, for the alleged purpose of ascertaining the velocity of moving bodies, the public perfectly understood the motive which led them to Mount Washington. They wanted to amuse themselves in ways which would have excited the derision of the small boy had he been present; and therefore they sought the secluded mountain top, and gave themselves up to the wild joys of kite-flying and mumble-the-peg. The results of these games were entered under the head of "Scientific Observations," in their several journals, and are now deposited in the Smithsonian Institute, where they are regarded as monuments of scientific learning, but are believed to be too abstruse to be fully comprehended by ordinary scientific persons.

May not this incident throw light upon the real object of the expeditions which start with the alleged purpose of going to the Pole, but which never proceed beyond the upper part of Smith's Sound? They always spend the Winter in the same locality; a locality where whaling vessels and missionaries are never found, but where bears, Esquimaux, and other Arctic fauna are abundant. Is it a desire for a cool climate, or a love of hunting, or of poker, or a thirst to study the Esquimaux language, that leads men to Smith's Sound? It is all very well for the explorers to compromise the matter with their wives by bringing them vast quantities of valuable Arctic furs, but the press cannot be bribed to silence in any such way. We must have the testimony of hardy Esquimaux as to the way in which Capt. NARES and his predecessors have passed their Arctic Winters, and we must ascertain from the members of the crew whether there is any truth in the theory that, when an Arctic expedition reaches Smith's Sound, it goes into Winter quarters, with the intention of remaining there until one man shall have won all the money of the entire fleet. The explorer who goes often to the Arctic seas will ultimately be found out, and it is reasonably certain that before any more expeditions are sent in search of the Pole the public will insist upon knowing the nature of the mysterious attractions of a Winter in Smith's Sound.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

The whole official life of Gov. Hayes has been a standing illustration of a pure and high-toned civil service and a perpetual protest against venality and corruption. He has shown what the civil service ought to be by example. He has illustrated his often-repeated pledges by his often-repeated performances, his faith by his works.

The Southern war claims already filed in Washington amount to more than the whole national debt. Under a Democratic President they would probably increase four-fold, and then President Tilden could apply his "great financial wisdom" to the business of "consolidating" the claims with the debt, in the style he consolidates a bankrupt railroad with a solvent one.

Brady's Bend is a Pennsylvania manufacturing village, on which Mr. Tilden exercised his "great financial wisdom" so effectually that what was once a prosperous and thriving little community is now a ruined and deserted hamlet. He applied his wisdom to taking about half a million out of the place in one haul, and his discretion in getting out of the way when the crash followed.

The only public office which Mr. Tilden held before he became governor of New York was that of Assemblyman. He served one term, and so consistently neglected his duties that his name only appears on the records as answering once in every twelve roll calls. In this same session some of the most important questions of reform in the State and City administration were under discussion, but Mr. Tilden was conspicuously absent throughout.

Mr. Tilden is sometimes spoken of by injudicious friends as a great lawyer, whose learning and experience in the law eminently fit him for the Presidency. Will any of these friends point out a single instance of Mr. Tilden's having argued a constitutional question in the United States Supreme Court, in the courts of his own State, or those of any other? Is it not rather as a stock speculator than as a lawyer, that he has gained his wealth?

The main question to be decided by the election near at hand is whether the United States or the Confederate States shall be under or on top. The late Confederate States are almost, if not altogether, solid for Tilden. The States which remained united, or the North, are nearly solid for Hayes. The Federal and Confederate forces as squarely confront each other as they did at Gettysburg or Shiloh. The National forces are led by a gallant Union General, the Confederate forces by a Peace Democrat who tried to surrender in 1864, but could not.

What services did Gov. Tilden render the nation when it most needed assistance? None that any one has been able to discover. He took a leading part in a movement "for the diffusion of correct political information," which proved to be nothing but a treasonable conspiracy; concocted the plank in the Democratic platform which declared the war was a failure, and swore that his income was not one-eighth of its real figure in order to evade paying taxes upon it. On these heavy sacrifices for the public good he asks the suffrages of his fellow-citizens to make him Chief Magistrate of the nation.

Every one who has taken any interest in the cause of reform in this City knows how long and arduous was the struggle in 1873 to get the bill passed reorganizing our Police courts, and making the office of Justice appointive instead of elective. The bill was passed at last, and the hang-dog scoundrels who disgraced our courts and stole the fines collected there were unceremoniously kicked out. Did Mr. Tilden assist the few able and public-spirited gentlemen who prepared and carried that bill through? He did not. He did nothing but join in requesting Senator Kernan, after the bill was passed, to make an argument before Gov. Dix to have it vetoed.

The argument used by the supporters of Tilden in South Carolina is the rifle; in Massachusetts, reform. To convince the voter in Ohio the Democracy use documents; in Mississippi, derringers. In Indiana the cry is for Hendricks and more money; in North Carolina, for Vance and more shot guns. In Illinois doubtful supporters are sent newspapers. In Louisiana if a colored man does not vote for Tilden they shoot him. In Georgia, if a poor man does not agree to vote as the chivalrous rebels want him, they starve him to death. Help on the work for Tilden, Assassination, and Reform!

When the Resumption bill was passed by Congress, the Legislature passed a bill declaring that all contracts made in this State, and all taxes levied, after Jan. 1, 1879, should be paid in gold. Gov. Tilden signed the bill, and it is now a State law. In obedience to party demands, Gov. Tilden has since declared that the Resumption act ought to be immediately repealed. Mr. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., who believes, or did believe, in Tilden could not stand such miserable trickery as this, and thus refers to it in his article in the last number of the North American Review: "A more humiliating spectacle for a Presidential candidate would not have been easy to imagine. Not only did Gov. Tilden have to renounce his record before he began his campaign, but he did it awkwardly."

Gov. Tilden is constantly lauded by his adherents as a "life-long reformer," but no one has ventured to claim that he did any reform work before 1871, when he was nearly sixty years old. He claims to have done three things as a reformer, viz.: Brought Tweed and his Ring to justice, reformed the canal abuses, and reduced the State taxation. From 1866 to the middle of 1871, while the Tammany Ring was piling up the villainies which at last crushed it, Mr. Tilden and Tweed were political co-workers and personal associates, and when the fight with Tweed was opening, Mr. Tilden refused to take any part in it. He did come out when the victory was nearly won. While Mr. Tilden was a member of the State Legislature he neither by vote nor speech protested against the passage of what he has since denounced as corrupt jobs. The amendments to the Constitution, which put a stop to similar jobbery in the future, he neither suggested nor aided in securing their adoption. They were the work of Republicans. The claim that Gov. Tilden has reduced the State taxation is an impudent fraud. The bounty debt became extinct by the operation of laws passed many years ago; and, with the extinction of the debt, the taxation was reduced by the amount which those laws had required should be annually raised to pay it off. Whatever other real economies have been made were due mainly to the work of the Legislatures during Gov. Dix's term in supplying the deficiencies in the sinking fund.

ANOTHER SHAM EXPOSED.

TILDEN'S HIGH PRINCIPLES.

THE ELABORATE EXCUSE FOR NOT MAKING AN INCOME RETURN AFTER 1863 A FRAUD, LIKE EVERYTHING ELSE HE HAS SAID AND DONE—SECOND LETTER OF DISTRICT ATTORNEY BLISS TO THE INTERNAL REVENUE COMMISSIONER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 29.—The following letter, in reference to the income tax of Samuel J. Tilden, disposes of an important point in the "authoritative statement," which was made the basis for the assumption of the most sensitive consistency by Mr. Tilden through his authorized spokesman:

OCTOBER 28, 1876.

Hon. Greene B. Raum, Commissioner of Internal Revenue:

SIR: In my letter of the 25th instant, with reference to Mr. S. J. Tilden's alleged failure to pay the proper tax upon income, I forgot to call your attention to one fact, which seems to me of pregnant importance. Mr. Tilden made a return, under oath, of his income for the years 1862 and 1863. Though the contrary has been more than once stated, it has been generally supposed that from that time until the income tax ceased, in 1872, he made no return, but permitted himself to be assessed by the Assessor at a sum which, with penalty, amounted to about what he returned in 1863, viz., $15,000. This evasion on his part has been excused upon only one ground. Mr. James P. Sinnott, Mr. Tilden's former clerk, in what is regarded as the authoritative statement, says: "The statute gave the taxpayer the option to take that course, and good and honorable reasons existed why a scrupulous man should accept that option. Mr. Tilden received no favors from the Government officers, and sought none. He did nothing but pay all they imposed on him. * * * He preferred in that way to be exempted from the difficulties incident to attempting a specific statement of the affairs in which he was interested and of the corporations and business in which he was an investor, and also to be exempted from adjudicating on the facts and the law applicable to uncertain and fluctuating elements during rapid and violent changes of fictitious values. The law was unsettled; questions of real difficulty existed. Constructions were set up by officials which were often conflicting, unintelligible, or incapable of a just or safe application, and it was not agreeable to make a return on a doubtful or disputed theory or in contradiction to even unmeritorious claims made in behalf of the Government."

You will perceive that the excuse here set up is, in brief, that the interpretation of the law was difficult, that the questions which arose were unsettled, and that Mr. Tilden made no return from 1863 to 1872, because he did not choose to become himself the interpreter of the law, and was unwilling to appear even to oppose the claims of the Government.

There is, however, one fact which was apparently unknown to Mr. Sinnott, and which, it seems to me, disposes fully of this excuse. That fact is, that Mr. Tilden made a return for the year 1868. In other words, if Mr. Sinnott's argument is correct, Mr. Tilden, having made returns for 1862 and 1863, made none for the years 1864, 1865, 1866, and 1867, because of the doubt and confusion surrounding the subject. But with reference to the year 1868 all doubt and obscurity passed away, and he made a return stating his taxable income at $14,364. This single return once made, the fogs of doubt and obscurity settled down again over the law or Mr. Tilden's mind, and he made no returns for 1869, 1870, or 1871, with which latter year the tax ceased.

I am not aware of anything in the statutory or political history of the income tax which, for the year 1868, suddenly removed all difficulties and doubts as to the meaning of the law or its application. Nor does anything in public history occur to me which restored, as to the income of 1869 and subsequent years, the obscurities which were so happily dispelled as to that of 1868. I should rather seek the reason of this isolated return of the income of 1868 in the fact that during that year a change occurred in the incumbent of the Assessor's office, and with him the Assistant Assessor who had charge of the division in which Mr. Tilden resided was changed, and that his successor was not supposed to have learned what was the amount of tax Mr. Tilden was willing to pay. In saying this, I must not be understood as intimating that the officers of the Government were corrupt, for I do not believe it. I believe that they were "easy-going," and were easily imposed upon.

You will notice that $4,000 of the bill to the Pacific Railroad Company, including the $2,500 receipted for by Mr. Sinnott, belongs to the year 1868.

In looking over my memoranda, I find that I have conclusive evidence that Mr. Tilden received from the Milwaukee and Prairie du Chien Railway, and the Milwaukee and St. Paul Railway Company, $5,000 for services rendered mostly in this same year 1868. The receipt was given by Mr. Sinnott, in Mr. Tilden's name.

I have brought these facts to your attention because they seem to me to concur with all the other evidence in showing that Mr. Tilden is indebted to the Government in a large amount.

Your obedient servant,

GEORGE BLISS, United States Attorney.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE CONCERT AT BOOTH'S

The operatic concert at Booth's Theatre last evening was well attended, and as an artistic entertainment was fairly successful. If it had no shining merits, it was at least free from any positive defects, and that it gave a large measure of satisfaction was pretty well attested by the frequently recurring encores. These were insisted upon with charming but undiscriminating impartiality during the first portion of the programme, up to the very last item therein set down, but after the manner of a lady in a celebrated poem, "who forgot, just at the very moment she should not," the gallantry of the audience was deficient at an inopportune moment; that is to say, when Mme. Ortolani, the only lady whose name appeared on the bill, had sung a cavatina by Mercadante. There was certainly no reason why there should be a redemand in that particular instance, except that it was the order of procedure so far, and seemingly without much scrutiny. Mr. Stoddard was the first to come within that ardent temperature of favor which an encore implies. He had sung "Non e ver" (Mattei) carefully and well, and in response to the redemand sang the exceedingly pretty ballad "Killarney." One of the main features of the concert was the appearance of Master Glanco Mazzoleni, a youthful pianist of ten years. The boy is not an absolute prodigy, but he is a very skillful and facile executant on the piano-forte. His touch is delicate and rapid, and when his appreciation of his art matures, it is pretty certain that he will be able to express a greater sympathy than he can at present evoke from the instrument, but which, of course, abides in every piano that has been at, or that has any kinship with those which have been at, the great Centennial Exhibition at Philadelphia. Signor Francesco Mazzoleni appeared last night after an absence of eight years, and was in good voice. His name was set down twice on the programme, but in the profusion of encores he was called upon for further service. His compliance was graceful, and he gave abundant satisfaction. Mr. Arbuckle was down for two cornet performances, but following out the customary rule, his work was doubled. In pieces of rapid movement, such as the grand fantasie "Alexis" which he played last night, Mr. Arbuckle is not at his best, but the pathos and sweetness of his performance in "The Old Folks at Home," and in kindred homely themes, are delightful. Mme. Ortolani sang twice, once in a duo with Signor Mazzoleni. Downing's Ninth Regiment Band played the overture to Masaniello, and furnished the orchestral accompaniments.

GENERAL MENTION.

A new burlesque, called "The Two Orphans," will be made known to-night, at the Eagle Theatre.

A performance of special variety will be given for the benefit of Mr. James Barnes, at Wood's Museum, this evening.

The new ballet which is to be part of the terpsichorean attractions of "Sardanapalus" will be brought out at Booth's Theatre, this evening.

THE ALLEGED SOMMERARD LETTER.

THE ATTENTION OF THE FRENCH MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS CALLED TO THE MATTER BY MINISTER WASHBURNE—PROBABLY UNAUTHENTIC CHARACTER OF THE LETTER—THE MARQUIS DE TALLEYRAND ON THE SUBJECT.

LONDON, Oct. 29.—A dispatch to Reuter's Telegram Company from Paris to-day says: "Mr. Washburne, the American Minister, has drawn the attention of the Duke Decazes to the calumnious insult contained in a letter attributed to M. Du Sommerard, Chief Commissioner of France to the Centennial Exhibition. He did not, however, demand the recall of M. Du Sommerard, or any other measure, but confined himself to pointing out the matter, leaving the French Minister of Foreign Affairs to determine what reparation was due the United States. The manner in which the Duke received Mr. Washburne's representations leaves no doubt that complete reparation will be afforded and the affair will be satisfactorily arranged."

A later telegram reports that M. Ozouna, acting in the name of the Minister of Commerce, after conferring with the Duke Decazes, telegraphed on Saturday evening to M. Du Sommerard, asking him, before rigorous measures are adopted, to state whether the objectionable letter is authentic. It is said that M. Du Sommerard has replied that it is apocryphal.

The affair has caused much excitement among the Americans in Paris, and has called forth the following official note, which is published this morning: "A letter speaking offensively of a great nation holding friendly relations with France has been published in a foreign journal and reproduced in a French newspaper. The letter has been attributed to a high functionary representing France at Philadelphia; but the Government hopes it is apocryphal. The Government has, however, demanded an explanation from the person concerned, and is now awaiting his reply in order to come to a decision on the matter."

The alleged letter of M. Du Sommerard first appeared in a Vienna newspaper, whence it was copied by the Figaro.

A letter from the Marquis of Talleyrand is published to-day. The Marquis says he is profoundly surprised at the statements in M. Du Sommerard's letter. As an attaché to the French Commission he feels it to be his duty to protest against the imputations on Americans. When in the United States he received nothing but the most delicate attentions, both officially and in his private capacity as a Frenchman. He believes all the French Commissioners will say the same. To charge the Americans with purposely setting fire to the packing cases of the French Department is so monstrous a calumny, that he must protest against it with all his force. He was in America at the time, and will guarantee that the fire was not maliciously caused. The Americans regretted it more than any one, and the whole nation would have manifested its indignation had the fire been the work of an incendiary.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

THE ARMISTICE QUESTION—THE TRIPLE ALLIANCE—THE SITUATION ON THE MORAVA—WRETCHED CONDITION OF THE SERVIAN ARMY—NOTICE TO THE PEOPLE OF DELIGRAD TO LEAVE THE TOWN GIVEN BY TCHERNAYEFF.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—Reuter's telegrams from Paris say private advices from Constantinople represent that the French and German Ambassadors have received instructions to support the proposals for a six weeks' armistice.

A special dispatch from Berlin to the Russian organ Le Nord, of Brussels, declares that the triple alliance cannot be shaken, and adds that in the event of a conference, Russia will energetically uphold therein the programme of pacification originated by England.

The Berlin correspondent of the Times telegraphs that Gen. Ignatieff, at a private audience, has informed the Sultan that if the armistice were accorded, Russia would be content to submit the question of autonomy to a conference of the Powers. The correspondent remarks that Russia certainly wants to exclude Turkey from the conference; but as Austria is likely to persist in opposing any conference at all, this part of Russia's proposals probably will not much embarass Turkey.

A telegram to the Times dated Vienna, Sunday, says, information received directly from Constantinople, shows there is still a sensible difference between the Russian and the Turkish proposals for an armistice; Turkey wishes to make the prolongation certain, if peace is not concluded within the original term, and Russia only admitting the possibility of a prolongation.

A Constantinople correspondent of the Daily Telegraph says he is informed that the Sultan has accepted the armistice without conditions.

A dispatch to the Standard, dated Nisch, Saturday, reports that all operations on the part of the Turks have been stopped since Monday, rain preventing the troops from marching.

A Belgrade telegram to the Standard says Tchernayeff has fallen from his horse, and is confined to his bed. He seems to be apprehensive of disaster, and has warned the inhabitants of all the villages in the rear of Deligrad to leave. The state of the Servian Army is indescribably distressing. No force has undergone such suffering since the retreat from Moscow.

Reuter's Belgrade dispatch reports that Gen. Tchernayeff has ordered the inhabitants to evacuate Deligrad. An eye witness just arrived from Deligrad describes the position of Tchernayeff's Army as follows: The centre, under Depreratovich, occupies the heights of Djunis; the right, under Horvatovich, is behind Schliegovaiz; and the left, under Popovich, occupies Alexinatz. On the whole, the Servian Army is in a precarious position.

The Times Belgrade telegram confirms the report that Gen. Tchernayeff has been disabled. It points to the orders for non-combatants to quit Deligrad and neighborhood as exceedingly significant.

The Times dispatch from Vienna explains the contradictions concerning the capture of Djunis. It says the position at Djuuis consists of a series of entrenchments along the Djuniskar stream, the key of which is two large redoubts to the north of Djunis. These were taken on the 23d inst. There may be some positions further on which the Servians still hold, and which they consider as belonging to Djunis.

The Daily Telegraph's Belgrade dispatch contains a sensational statement that a Russian force, with the consent of Germany and Austria and the cooperation of Roumania, will enter Servia, and that operations will probably commence to-day.

A telegram to the Daily News from Belgrade announces that Gen. Tchernayeff has recovered, and is expected to arrive in Belgrade, where some decisive action is looked for, involving a change of Ministers and a direct appeal to Russia for active intervention.

A SCHOONER WRECKED.

HALIFAX, Oct. 29.—The Government steamer which arrived to-day from Sable Islands reports that during the heavy north-west gale of the 16th inst. an American-built schooner, supposed to belong to Eastport, Me., struck a bar at the west end of Sable Islands and went to pieces, all hands being drowned. Five bodies and parts of the wreck were washed ashore. She had a cargo of herrings from Newfoundland or Labrador, of which 150 barrels were saved.

TROOPS IN THE SOUTH.

WHY THEY WERE NEEDED IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

HOW THEY ARE USED, AND IN WHAT NUMBERS—THE FACTS ABOUT "THE BAYONET RULE"—DEMOCRATIC STATEMENTS WHICH SOUTHERNERS LAUGH AT—WHY THE REPUBLICANS WANT A FAIR ELECTION—THE RIFLE CLUBS NOT DISBANDED.

From Our Special Correspondent.

AIKEN, Friday, Oct. 27, 1876.

The Democrats of South Carolina and their friends and sympathizers in other parts of the Union have for months past declared that they ask for the support of the people solely on the ground that the principles which they represent are those best calculated to insure the well-being and prosperity, not only of this State, but of the country at large. If the supporters of Tilden and Hampton are sincere in such declarations as these, then there is no occasion for the "abhorrence," the "indignation," the "horror" which the newspapers and public speakers of their party pretend to feel in regard to what they have been pleased to call "the bayonet rule in the South." Neither is there any occasion for the gross misstatements which they are now making relative to the number of troops recently sent into South Carolina. In the Boston Post, the St. Louis Republican, and the New-Orleans Times there has appeared within the past week an article headed "The South Carolina Outrage." There can be no doubt that the article was prepared in the Tilden Bureau in New-York, as the false statements it contains are identical in all the journals named. In the first place, it boldly asserts that "Grant has massed ten thousand United States soldiers in South Carolina;" that "they will be placed under the orders of the United States Marshals on election day, and used to keep white men from the polls," and that "they will support the ignorant negroes in any outrage which they may commit upon Democrats of their own color." Such statements as these are so false as to be simply ridiculous. There is not a man, white or black, in South Carolina, who does not laugh at them. Regarding the number of troops in the State there is no secret. Everyone here knows that instead of the ten thousand there are not two thousand United States soldiers in all South Carolina. The total number, as I learn from official sources, is about eighteen hundred. These men are scattered all over the State, and there is no fair minded Democrat here who is not willing to admit that their coming has prevented much rioting, and possibly great bloodshed. It was for this, and to prevent the murder of negroes for political purposes, that they came here. They have no other duty to perform, and of course they will not attempt to perform any other.

THE NECESSITY FOR TROOPS.

That it was necessary to send troops here for the purpose indicated is easily proved by a reference to the recent political history of the State. Such a reference will show that within the past three months thirty-three men are known to have been killed for political purposes in South Carolina. To be more specific, there were murdered:

In the Hamburg massacre	8
In the Ellenton massacre	17
In the Charleston riot	1
In the Cainhoy fight	5
In the Edgefield fight	2
Total	33

As I have already stated, those men are known to have been killed. Their names and the circumstances under which they were murdered are now before me. In addition there are 114 men who are known to have been wounded. A full list of the men actually killed and wounded, however, will never be obtained, for many negroes killed in the Ellenton massacre and butchered in secret, have been buried quietly by the terrified natives, who, fearing for their own lives, have said nothing about their loss. It is estimated by well-informed persons that there have been at least one hundred cases of this kind, and there is no doubt that the slaughter would have gone on until Hampton's election if Gov. Chamberlain and President Grant had failed to act as promptly as they did. Nothing but the President's timely proclamation could have prevented a constant repetition of the bloody scenes of Hamburg and Ellenton for the Democrats had determined, in the words of the notorious Gary, to "kill half the niggers in Edgefield if the election could be carried no other way." It has been claimed that Gov. Chamberlain was able to stop all disturbances without the intervention of the Federal power. This statement is quite as ridiculous as the others to which I have referred. It is true that Mr. Chamberlain was elected to the position of Governor of South Carolina by a very large majority of the people, but the Democratic minority has never fully recognized his authority. Indeed, he has been frequently told that he was the "niggers' Governor only, not the white man's;" and on one occasion Gen. Gary informed him that he might be Governor of South Carolina, but that he had no power in "unreconstructed Edgefield." Now it must be remembered always that the negro majority in South Carolina is at least twenty-five thousand votes; consequently, all the Republicans have to do to be successful is to have a quiet election and get other hand, can only hope to carry the State out their vote. The Democrats, on the by beating, killing, and so frightening the blacks that they will stay away from the polls on election day; and as has been proved again and again, they have been solely responsible for every conflict of the races, every election riot which has occurred in the South since reconstruction. It is to their interest to create disturbances, it is to the interest of the Republicans to preserve the peace.

GOV. CHAMBERLAIN'S DILEMMA.

Such being the case, how was Gov. Chamberlain to prevent the whites from killing as many negroes as suited their purpose? No white man will serve on a Sheriff's posse when one of his own race is to be arrested, and the Militia of the State is made up entirely of negroes, the white military companies having positively refused to organize under the militia laws. Now, if Mr. Chamberlain had called upon the negro Militia to stop the Ellerton riots, and arrest the Democratic out-throats who had just hunted from their homes and killed a score or more of harmless black men, what would have been the result? The whites would have been reenforced by all the rifle clubs in the State, and by hundreds of men from Georgia, and every black man in Barnwell County found with a gun in his hand would have been killed in twenty-four hours. To avoid this slaughter, however, Chamberlain did the only thing possible under the circumstances; he called for United States troops, and it is now believed that the election will pass off quietly. It is for this reason that the Democrats are "indignant" and "horrified" at the President's proclamation and the arrival of the Federal soldiers in the State. There is now a prospect that there will be a fair election, and a fair election is precisely what they are anxious to avoid. Even now, in spite of the President's proclamation and the arrival of the troops, they are doing what they can, without resorting to actual violence, to intimidate the negroes. Ostensibly the rifle and sabre clubs have all disbanded, but in reality they have all preserved their organization and continue to ride the country as actively as they did two months ago. They do so in accordance with the following order, which was printed in the Edgefield Advertiser, the organ of their commander-in-chief, "Hamburg Massacre" Butler:—"To the Rifle Clubs. Disband, the proclamation says, and Rifle and Sabre Clubs must no longer exist. But no proclamation can prevent men from carrying arms or associating themselves together for social or religious purposes. There might be a few brotherhoods and Bible Unions formed. Nobody could object to that; and then, what's the use of having captains when presidents and grand masters do as well?" In response to this significant paragraph, nearly every rifle and sabre club in South Carolina has been reorganized as a "Benevolent Association." "Riding Club," or "Social Circle." They are all armed with heavy navy revolvers, and ride through the country at all hours of the day and night. Last evening, a few miles from this place, I saw a company of them, numbering not less than a hundred men, galloping wildly along the road, and yelling at the top of their voices for Tilden and Hampton. They all wore red shirts, and were well armed, mounted and drilled. Two days ago, at Blockville, more than a thousand uniformed and mounted men attended a Hampton meeting. They were all armed with two or more heavy pistols, and silently obeyed the commands of their officers, but, of course, they were not rifle clubs, for all the companies carried banners which declared that they were eminently respectable and peaceable organizations. One of these flags displayed the legend, "This is not a Rifle Club." On another were painted the words, "This is a Chamberlain Benevolent Association," and on others, "The Tilden Mounted Base Ball Club," "The Indiana Social Union," and "The Band of Civilization." It is under such titles as these that the rifle clubs have disguised themselves. It is in this way that the Ellerton rioters obey the President's proclamation, and still they would have the country believe that they are all peaceful, law-abiding citizens, and that there are no troops needed in South Carolina.

CURRENT TOPICS ABROAD.

A POSSIBLE QUESTION BETWEEN FRANCE AND THE POPE—CONSTITUTIONAL GUARANTEES IN SPAIN—CAPT. CAMERON'S AFRICAN EXPLORATIONS—THE PAN-ANGLICAN SYNOD.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—The Pope having desired to divide the Archbishopric of Lyons into two dioceses without the assent of the French Government, the latter has issued a decree forbidding such division.

MADRID, Oct. 29.—The Council of Ministers has decided to terminate the suspension of the constitutional guarantees immediately after the opening of the Cortes.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—The Post announces that Capt. Cameron will not at present resume his exploration. The expiration of his furlough obliges him to resume service in the Navy.

Nearly every Bishop to whom the invitation to attend the Pan-Anglican Synod has been addressed, has either accepted or replied. Some of the most influential American Bishops have stipulated that if they attend all subjects of interest and importance shall be perfectly free and open to discussion. The Synod will probably be much occupied with matters affecting the Episcopalian Church in America.

THE SAN FRANCISCO WATER SUPPLY.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 29.—Richard Ives, of San Francisco, arrived here last Friday, and is negotiating with the Vulcan Iron Works for 40,000 tons of iron plates to be converted into pipes to be used in conducting water from the Sierra Nevadas to San Francisco, a distance of one hundred and twenty miles. The contract will amount to about $2,000,000.

FIGHT WITH KNIVES BETWEEN COLORED WOMEN.

LOUISVILLE, Oct. 29.—An extraordinary duel between two negro women, Aunie Simmons and Mary Boules, was fought here this morning. They quarreled and resolved to fight a duel with knives. They met by agreement in front of a Baptist church at night, without witnesses. They fought fiercely for half an hour. Boules was stabbed and gashed horribly, and her right eye was cut out. Simmons was only slightly hurt, and has been arrested. The cause of the trouble is unknown.

THE MAGICAL EFFECT OF CLEANLINESS ON OLD AND young need not be discussed. The tired man is refreshed, the fretful child soothed and enlivened. Apropos of this, we may remark that in B. T. BABBITT'S BABY SOAP is found the best in the world, if the opinion of the best chemists is worth anything. No deleterious component enters into it that need to be hidden by perfume. It can be trusted as the purest and most agreeable toilet soap extant.—Advertisement.

Wilbor's Compound of Pure Cod Liver Oil AND LIME.—The advantage of this compound over the plain Oil is that the nauseating taste of the Oil is entirely removed, and the whole rendered entirely palatable. The offensive taste of the Oil has long acted as a prominent objection to its use; but in this form the trouble is entirely obviated. A host of certificates might be given here to testify to the excellence and success of WILBOR'S COD LIVER OIL AND LIME. But the fact that it is regularly prescribed by the medical faculty is sufficient. Sold by A. B. WILBOR, Chemist, Boston, and by all druggists.

KINGS COUNTY POLITICS.

THE RING BADLY FRIGHTENED.

BRIGHT PROSPECTS FOR THE SUCCESS OF THE REPUBLICAN AND INDEPENDENT DEMOCRATIC TICKET — THE PEOPLE AROUSED TO THE IMPORTANCE OF THE ISSUES INVOLVED—SOME OF THE CANDIDATES COMPARED.

The people of Brooklyn are thoroughly aroused to the importance of the issues involved in the present campaign. Everywhere throughout the City the friends of reform are on the alert and watchful to defeat the diabolical scheme of fraudulent voting by which the Democratic Ring expects to carry Kings County for Tilden by a large majority. That the Ring men are thoroughly frightened is evident from the great uproar they make about the coalition ticket placed before the people by the Republicans and Independent Democrats. The Ring organs make piteous appeals to Republicans not to vote the coalition ticket, never stopping to think that Republicans are not likely to take advice from the advocates and defenders of every corrupt measure by which the tax-payers of Brooklyn have been fleeced for years past. Driven to desperation, the Ring men seek by colonization, and other fraudulent schemes, to defeat the tax-payers of the city and county. But, in the hurry induced by fear, they have bungled things miserably, and left themselves open to easy detection. During the past week an unlooked for development brought dismay into their ranks. Lest they might be held accountable by the people for the lawless acts of their associates, a large number of the respectable men imported into the Regular Democratic General Committee of Kings County last year after the people had given to the Kingsley-McLaughlin Ring its first serious defeat, resigned in a body, and issued an address to the voters of the county in which the fact—already well known and scarcely in need of confirmation even from men just separated from the Democratic organization—was set forth that ex-Register McLaughlin, better known as the "Boss," made all the nominations for the Democratic Party. Some facts relative to the nominees of the Boss on the county and city ticket, and the nominations made by the Republicans and Independent Democrats will be found below.

THE NOMINEES OF THE "BOSS" COMPARED WITH THE REPUBLICAN CANDIDATES.

The "Boss' man, Barre," as he is called, is becoming more unpopular every day. He has not a single follower in the ranks of the regulars, nor does he attempt to gain any, and yet he confidently expects to be elected. The truth is, he is conscious of the fact that he is the "Boss' man Barre," and that McLaughlin has what some of his followers call "solid reasons" for urging his election. Barre was a Know-Nothing, and probably is yet, if such a sect exists, and so little does he care for the rank and file, that when they called on him to make a speech after his nomination, he deigned only a few contemptuous words in a voice that could not be heard beyond the first bench from the platform. McLaughlin was Register of Kings County for two years, during which Barre was his deputy. The "Boss" knows exactly what the office is worth, and as a large part of this future income depends on this man Barre's election, no effort will be spared to bring about that result. Unfortunately for the "Boss" his relations with his man Barre, and the terms on which the latter received the nomination, are well known to the rank and file of the regulars, a great majority of whom cordially detest McLaughlin's puppets in the Register's office. Corp. James Lanner, the Republican nominee for the office, is, on the contrary, a favorite with all classes of citizens, and will receive thousands of Democratic votes. Every soldier in Brooklyn and every voter who sympathized with the war for the Union, will cast a ballot for the man who left both his legs behind him on the battle-field of Antietam. Aside from his war record, which cannot be surpassed, Mr. Tanner has, by his gentle, genial manners and frank, manly nature, made for himself hosts of friends in private life. Even the Democratic organs find only praise for this gallant soldier and estimable private citizen.

For the office of County Clerk, the Republicans and Independent Democrats have nominated Eugene D. Berri. A better nomination could not have been made. Mr. Berri is one of the best known business men in Brooklyn. He inherited wealth, but he has added largely to his means by his own industry and business ability. He was twice a member of the Assembly from the Fifth District, and each time he received a larger majority than any other candidate who ever ran in the district. Mr. Berri is a young man of singularly pure life, and his popularity is of the kind that arouses enthusiasm in young and old alike. He represents the best element in politics. His opponent in the Democratic ticket is Justice John Delmar. With a certain class in his own party, Justice Delmar is said to be popular. The gentlemen who, up to last week, composed what was known as the reform element of the McLaughlin General Committee, gave as one of their reasons for withdrawing from the organization, the fact that the "Boss" had nominated Delmar. They intimated that Delmar was a man unfit to hold any office, much less such a responsible position as that of County Clerk. The opposition to McLaughlin's candidate offered by the reformers was probably founded on the fact that Delmar's name was mixed up in some very doubtful transactions in connection with the fines levied in the court over which he presides. Quite recently Judge Barnard, of the Supreme Court, compelled Delmar to give up some money belonging to a litigant who had come before him, which he had held for years. The Supreme Court Justice broadly intimated in his decision that there was no honest intention of delivering the money to the litigant. No good argument can be offered in favor of Delmar's election. He aspires to succeed McLaughlin as "Boss" of Brooklyn. The people, however, have outgrown Bosses, and it is reasonable to suppose that a majority of the voters will prefer a well-educated young business man, who has already made his mark in the mercantile world, to a Boss in embryo, who, graduated from the worst school in ward politics, founds his ambition by a desire to occupy the place and wield the influence of the man to whom the tax-payers of Kings County point as the incarnation of all that is bad in political management.

The Ring candidate for Surrogate, Abram H. Daily, is a renegade Republican, who, like the "Boss' man Barre," is thoroughly detested by a majority of the Democrats. Daily owes his nomination directly to "Boss" McLaughlin. Mr. Walter L. Livingstone, his opponent on the Republican and Independent Democratic ticket, is a man who strongly rebuked McLaughlin when that political potentate offered to nominate him for Controller on condition that all the patronage—that is, the appointment of the clerks who handle about eight millions of the people's money yearly—of the office should be dealt out by the Boss. Mr. Livingstone belongs to one of the best families in Brooklyn, and is a wealthy lawyer in large practice.

Bernard Midas, known to all Brooklyn as the "Boss'" most fawning follower, is the Ring nominee for Commissioner of Charities. It would be difficult to find a man less fitted for the position. The administration of the Charity Commission has been a disgrace to Kings County for years past. It has been so bad as to attract attention not only in the State but all over the country. Not long ago three of the Charity Commissioners were convicted of swindling both the tax payers, who contributed of their substance to support the county's wards, but the unfortunate recipients of the people's bounty. The revelations as to the treatment of the insane confined in the County Asylum when Dr. Ordronaux and a committee of gentlemen held an investigation last year, were simply horrifying. Nearly five hundred thousand dollars a year is expended by the Charity Commissioners, and a great many people are employed about the county buildings. For this reason McLaughlin, in order to use the commission as a political machine, makes it up, whenever he can, of his most abject tools. Last year a bill passed both houses of the Legislature, creating a new Charity Commission, which was to be nonpartizan in its character and was to serve without pay. Midas, when the bill was introduced, hurried up to Albany and spent days in lobbying against the measure. When it finally passed, Gov. Tilden, by direction of "Boss" McLaughlin and as part of the price of the Kings County delegation to the Utica Convention, vetoed the bill. It may be said, briefly, that a vote for Midas is a vote for corruption and ring-rule. John Cunningham, the Republican and Independent candidate, was formerly a Charity Commissioner, and was tried with the three Charity Commissioners who were convicted of swindling the people and paupers. Mr. Cunningham, who was tried only because he had been in office with the guilty Commissioners during the period covered by the indictment found against them, was honorably acquitted. In every instance where fraud was committed, his vote was found recorded against it in the Board. In the convention which nominated Mr. Cunningham, Davenport Johnson, one of the first citizens of Brooklyn, said that it was largely by the aid of honest John Cunningham that the gigantic frauds committed by the Ring Charity Commissioners, and the terrible mismanagement of which they had been guilty, were brought to light. The election of Bernard Midas would be a disgrace to the County of Kings.

No man in Brooklyn of either party has done so much, perhaps, to deserve the support of its citizens as Ripley Ropes, the Republican and Independent Democratic candidate for the office of Controller. Mr. Ropes has labored assiduously for the welfare of the people, both in private life and for the short time which he held public office. In their service he has spent his time and his money lavishly. When on the Board of Aldermen he accomplished many reforms, and had the power to accomplish even more because of the great moral influence he wielded over his associates. He first brought to light the irregularities in the office of Boss McLaughlin's Controller, Evan M. Johnson, who is now being sued by the city to recover a large sum of money which he wrongfully appropriated. It was Mr. Ropes who led the attack on the corrupt Charity Commission, which resulted in the trial and conviction of three of the Commissioners. When the citizens of the First Ward solicited him to represent them in the Board of Aldermen, no candidate was named against him. His services the interests of Brooklyn are first; considerations of politics or party have no place in his mind where public duty is concerned. Mr. Ropes is an earnest Republican, but is not and never has been a violent partisan. He was in the Board of Aldermen, when a member of that body, what Judge Robertson is in the State Senate —a sleepless guardian of the people's interests, a conscientious and fearless opponent of every measure tainted in the least by fraud or injustice. A great domestic affliction, coming in the shape of the severe and dangerous illnes of a dear son has prevented Mr. Ropes from taking a very active part in the canvass. It is gratifying to know, however, that the friends who do not favor his election at the gatherings of the people held nightly all over the city will not have to repel harsh accusations because none will be made even by those who are opposed to him. Against this model citizen and man, "Boss" McLaughlin has nominated to run for the office of Controller, Mr. Wm. H. Burrill. Mr. Burrill is a respectable looking gentlemen, well advanced in years, and his only merit—if merit it is—seems to be that he was formerly foreman of an engine company under the old Volunteer Fire Department. It may be mentioned en passant that nearly all the McLaughlin office-holders who have good positions used to "run wid de machine" in the days when the "Boss" wore a red shirt, and was a strapping fore man, albeit more efficient in running primaries than in running to fires. Not a dozen delegates in the room knew who Burrill was when they voted for him by direction of the "Boss" brought to the convention by Robert Furey who was not even a delegate. Furey confessed after the convention adjourned that ten minutes before they assembled none of the delegates knew who they were going to vote for. Mr. Burrill is a crony of McLaughlin, and it will be strange indeed if the people of Brooklyn should prefer him for Controller, unknown as he is, to Ripley Ropes, whose record as a banker, business man, and uncompromising enemy of fraud in every shape, is known to every person in the city who reads a paper.

Mr. George A. Kingsland, the Republican and Independent nominee for the office of City Auditor, is a well-known and wealthy builder, residing in the Seventeenth Ward. In business circles he is held in high repute. He never occupied any political position, and is a determined enemy of the McLaughlin—Kingsley Ring. The "Boss'" candidate against Mr. Kingsland is William S. Searing, the present incumbent. Mr. Searing is not much of anything except a McLaughlinite. He owes his political existence to the "Boss," and is always ready to come at the latter's beck and call. It is not likely that he will poll even the vote of his party.

THE SOUTHERN IDEA.

Gen. A. R. Lawton, an ex-rebel candidate for Presidential Elector on the Tilden ticket in Georgia, addressed a meeting in Augusta on Thursday night last, in which he said: "According to the habits of the present day the people indicate at the ballot-box who is to be their next ruler, and the Electors have only to carry out that will. But it often happens that this delegated power is confided to improper persons. When you elect the Electors on the 7th of November you lose all control over them, and they may vote for whom they please. True, if they acted contrary to the wishes of the people who elected them, they would be eternally damned. But suppose the great citizen who now bears the standard of Democracy in the Union should die between the 7th of November and the time of counting the electoral vote, who will tell the electors who they shall vote for? Ought we not be careful in committing that duty to a few men? I have considered with great seriousness what was the duty of an elector since I have been placed in my present position by the State Democracy. Who in the State of Georgia does not know where his duty lies in the present Presidential campaign? Who have we then to convince? But men should give a reason for the faith that is in them. Men should meet and confer together. Not long since, in conversation with a distinguished citizen of Georgia, especially honored in this community, he said to me that it was time that our relations with the Federal Government should be discussed, that we should discuss what the principles upon which we supported one or the other of the candidates. When these sentiments came from Andrachel V. Johnson, I deemed that it was indeed time to discuss these principles. Since we have claimed this as our Government we say that it is time that a certain set of principles prevail as well in Georgia as in New-York. We have not had any fault to find with the form of Government; indeed the South, when it set up a government of its own, formed one similar to the old one. No people have been truer than the Southern to the old original form of constitutional government. The party in power has only gone on from bad to worse until we are in our present deplorable condition."

PUBLIC INSTRUCTION IN FRANCE.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

Frenchmen are complaining that, after all the debates on primary education, and a respectable volume of laws passed by successive Legislatures, something like thirty thousand children in Paris alone are receiving no instruction whatever; and this though there are hundreds of schools where they can be taught free of cost. Last year a report on primary and secondary instruction was read before the Academy of Moral Sciences by M. Levasseur, who compared the results achieved at home and abroad, and established, to the complete dissatisfaction of his hearers, the fact that France is but the twentieth among civilized States in respect of the number of her citizens who receive a regular education in their youth. The number of children inscribed on the books of the primary schools amounted to an average of no more than thirteen per cent. On the other hand, it would be unjust to deny that considerable progress has been made during the last half-century. In 1829, the last complete year during which the white flag waved over public edifices, there were 30,796 State primary schools in France; in 1832 the number had risen to 32,520, in 1850 to 43,845, in 1868 to 53,820. Curiously enough, at the Vienna International Exhibition, France received the diploma of honor for primary instruction. The truth seems to be that France, while possessed of excellent theories on the subject, has long felt herself obliged to spend so much money on the naval and military establishments of the country that comparatively nothing has been left for the schoolmaster. At all events, this view of the case is one which generally impresses itself upon the Minister of Public Instruction for the time being.

A MIRACLE PLAY IN ENGLAND.

Some excitement has been occasioned in South Wales by the production on Sunday week, at the Baptist Chapel, Briton Ferry, of what may fairly be termed a dramatic performance, entitled "Joseph and his Brethren." The Western Mail, having obtained a printed copy of the work, publishes extracts from it, showing a regular dialogue for several persons, stage directions, and the familiar "enter" and "exit" used precisely as in the acting editions of theatrical literature. The author of "Joseph and his Brethren" remarks in a prefatory note: "The difficulty and objection to the assembling or performing such a Sunday-school dialogue as 'Joseph and his Brethren' is its great length. To avoid this objection and prevent tediousness, the dialogue has been arranged in six parts, in order that singing, recitations, &c., on the general programme, may be introduced between the parts. The effect will be very fine." There is also a caution that the recitation is "to be performed without change of apparel or costume," qualified by the statement, however, that "Joseph may be designated by a coat of many colors." A correspondent of the Western Mail thus describes some of the observations of the Sunday audience in the chapel: "A grown-up woman packed in the crowd exclaimed, in one breath, 'Don't shove ther;—and where's his coat of many colors? And where's the sacks?' Another replies, 'Don't I want to see Joseph as well as you?' A youngster close by, after the sentence was passed on the baker to be hanged, called out to those near him, 'Look there, how quiet that chap is taking it what's going to be hanged.'"

ENTERTAINING PREJUDICES.

C. H. Gates, who was a member of Cowan's Battery, and lost a leg at Gettysburg, was unable to attend a recent union of his comrades in Auburn, but wrote a letter, in which he said: "It is an oft-repeated expression, but one which I think is very applicable and appropriate for me just now, 'I vote as I fought' against the Democratic Party, and for this I am charged with being prejudiced. Twelve years ought to remove all prejudice. But if it is prejudice to vote for a comrade and be loyal to the party that was loyal to the soldier, when friends were scarce as angels' visits, in the Democratic Party, then I am prejudiced. But when we vote for a comrade what do we more than the Johnnies do; for is it not an undeniable fact that no man can hope for election south of Mason and Dixon's line unless he held a commission in the rebel Army or sympathized with the cause? And in proof of this assertion see our Congress of last Winter, composed of nearly one-half of ex-rebel soldiers. The South maintains the right of exalting her soldiers to high and honorable positions; they certainly ought to concede to us the same right. I for one propose to exercise that right, and make every effort consistent with honesty to that end."

A TILDEN TRICK.

The Indianapolis Journal of Friday says: "Within the last three days it has come to light that Tilden's New-York managers have made arrangements for printing tickets in every Northern State headed 'Republican ticket,' and containing all the Republican electors except two or three in the body of the ticket, which are Democratic. This is an infamous and dangerous scheme. If they can thus slip in two or three Democratic electors in each Republican State, the vote for Tilden will be increased by just that much, and his election perhaps secured by means of this nefarious fraud. The scheme emanates from Tilden's 'reform' bureau in Liberty street, New-York. It fully reveals the degeneration of the Democratic Party."

THE LATE BISHOP JANES.

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT THE METHODIST FREE TABERNACLE—THE TRIBUTE OF THE METHODIST MISSIONARY SOCIETY OF NEW-YORK—SERMON BY REV. DR. C. H. FOWLER.

A generous tribute was yesterday paid to the memory of the late senior Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church by the Methodist Missionary Society of New-York City, in a commemorative service held at the Free Tabernacle in West Thirty-fourth street. The feature of the occasion was the memorial sermon of Rev. Dr. C. H. Fowler, to whom the task of reviewing the life and work of the deceased had been assigned. The service was opened with the singing of the hymn, "Lo! round the throne," which was followed by prayer and the reading of the Scriptures. The congregation sang the hymn: "Who are these arrayed in white?" and at the conclusion Dr. Fowler began his discourse.

We are here to-day, he said, as the Missionary Society of the City of New-York, to pay a tribute of grateful remembrance to the cherished and honored dead, Bishop Janes, the Bishop of the common people. With a scholarship that made him at home in the company of the learned and philosophical, with tastes that could revel in the refinement of the select few, with every social circle welcoming his approach, and with resources sufficient to make these varied advantages a delight and not a burden, he still remained in his convictions, in his habits, in his home, in his sympathies, and in his affections, the brother of the laborer and the friend of the poor. Upon the simple outline of his life, continued the speaker, was wrought out one of the richest and grandest lives in the history of the Christian Church. The elements out of which Bishop Janes' greatness was constructed were simple and easily apprehended, being on the surface of his transparent character and open to the gaze of the common observer. He had reason in its best development—a practical reason that indicated the statesman rather than the philosopher, and bespoke the business man rather than the speculator. The vigor of his intellect enabled him to acquire that vast sum of knowledge which is rudely epitomized in the principles and peculiarities of the three learned professions—theology, law, and medicine. A chaste and timid imagination clothed these principles with flesh and sometimes with beauty, and sent them forth in the service of the one dominant idea of his life—the hastening of the redeemed Kingdom. The most conspicuous element of his mind was his common sense. He had that rare combination of perception and reason and moral sense—simple, hard, practical, common, every-day sense—without which all his other abilities would have fallen out of harmony and become a mob of bewildering eccentricities. And with all he could please the lowest of the poor man, so that the unlettered and uncultured felt him to be a brother, and persuade in the palace of Princes, till those who were rulers by birth, scholars by inheritance, and statesmen by birth saw and acknowledged his greatness. Combined with this faculty he had, too, a conscience that was clear, delicate, Scripturally trained, and absolute in authority; a conscience which, when he was once in the grip of obligation, led him never to receive or desire release until the obligation was fulfilled. He was, continued the preacher, a man of convictions, and he received, believed, and declared truth. He was a man who felt the presence and the pressure of life's great issues, and looked upon them as earnest, solemn, sublime, desperate realities—a man who, putting his fear upon the Book, heard the wail of the lost, the shout of the saved, and the conflict of the endangered, and reached forth to save them. Endowed with such gifts, another element assumed a prominence in his character, and that element was ambition. Bishop Janes had such activities and a great, fiery, uncompromising, restless ambition that knew no bounds but conscience. But his ambition was consecrated to God, and had a purpose worthy of being the chief aim of a dauntless soul—the avowed purpose of being the greatest man possible. But through all these restless activities there was a tide of tenderness flowing with rippling melodies through the rocky channels of his rugged nature—the ivy that clambered over the crag and covered its strength with a robe of beauty. Loving God, whom he had not seen, he also loved man, whom he had seen, and this love was as the sunlight on the earth, quickening every germ of life and power throughout his nature. It was a love that was quiet, undemonstrative, and genial, never suggesting the idea of the desertion of an old love for a new, but giving him a sympathy for the afflicted that has been the admiration of all who knew him.

The speaker, after a brief reference to the domestic life of the deceased, alluded to his indomitable will, a will which, he said, made him recognize nothing as impossible which was right. When it became necessary for him to act he never lacked the power, no matter what hindrances impeded his path. Tempering this will and subduing its dangerous intensity was a living, conscious, victorious faith. The constant communion with God which attended this faith gave him an enduring patience that never wearied, and made him ever ready to renew rejected offers of peace to enemies. He saw the Church as the ordained means for the salvation of a lost world, and the building of that Church became thereafter the end and aim of his life, the one great idea of his being. So rounded and complete was his character that his powers seemed like groups of mountain peaks towering side by side; but the most exalted peaks were his common sense, his conscience, his will, his concentration of his powers, his ambition, and his industry—attributes which made him among men a great man. As a preacher he had few superiors, and as a Pastor he was unethical, yet easy, and without a blemish. He was an orator of superior parts, a thinker able to reveal the hidden relations of truths, a writer of great ability, an organizer who handled with ease the system of Methodist polity, a leader steadily moving up the advance line, and an administrator who worked upon a system dependent upon moral power for its continuance—a Bishop whose close imitation will perpetuate Methodist polity for many generations.

MAN'S PLACE IN THE CREATION

SERMON BY REV. CHAUNCEY GILES IN THE THIRTY-FIFTH STREET SWEDENBORGIAN CHURCH.

"Man's place in the Creation: How he is related to God on one side of his nature, and is different from animals on the other," was the subject of a sermon preached yesterday by Rev. Chauncey Giles in the Swedenborgian Church, East Thirty-fifth street, between Fourth and Lexington avenues. The doctrine of the New Church, he said, made entirely new disclosures to man concerning himself. It not only revealed the Lord to him, but it gave him accurate and rational information concerning his own nature and destiny, his grand possibilities, and the means necessary to attain to them. It rendered this grave service, too, with the greatest precision. It did not confound him with God or with the angels, but it brought him nearer to the Divine nature. Man was indeed the crowning work of the Lord, the most beautifully organized of all the creatures which He made. He was mineral, vegetable, animal, spirit, and angel. All forms, all qualities, all motions, all activities were centred in him. The Kingdom of God was within him; he was larger than the material universe, and had capabilities superior to it. What, he asked, could man accept in exchange for his soul? Though he should instead be the possessor of the whole material universe, the exchange would be to him irreparable loss. There was, however, a danger of mistaking some of the means by which the distinctively human quality was formed in man. He was in human form, but it was not form alone that established the human quality in him. The human did not consist in outward form; it did not reside in the ability to hear, to see, to eat, to enjoy the pleasures of the senses. In many cases, indeed, the senses of the animal were more acute than those of man. Reasoning, for instance, was not a distinctively human faculty. Animals could reason within certain limits; could draw conclusions and act upon them, and had wide ranges of mental activity. If man possessed all the qualities of the senses in perfection it would not make him human. If he had such a large and accurate knowledge of business as to be successful in every operation; if he were the shrewdest of politicians, and could sway people to his purposes; if he could rise to power; if his natural affections were strong and his friendships enduring—he would still fall far short of possessing genuine human nature. To possess all these qualities was not to be man. There were three planes in man's mind—the natural, the spiritual, and the celestial—and the relation of the first two of these was the question with which he proposed to deal. The natural plane in man's mind was that which he possessed in common with animals. However largely it might be developed, he only became the nobler animal. The human was the link between the natural and spiritual, partaking of the nature of both. All man's power of perceiving what was just and equitable, also all spiritual affection, belonged to this plane of his mind. These planes of mind were distinct from each other, and took organic spiritual forms in the same way as the body took its forms. The spiritual faculty of man's mind was distinct from the natural, just as the nerves of the material body were distinct from the bones. Now, it was especially to be borne in mind that the higher planes of mind were vastly superior to the lower. The superiority of the spiritual, in which the human rests, was, said the preacher, as superior to the natural, which we possess in common with animals, as was the natural to the grass upon which we tread. Perhaps the human quality of man's mind was best defined by the golden rule, that we do unto others what we would have them do unto us—to make that which the Lord says is the law and the prophets the rule of our lives. There was no evidence that the animal, which had only the natural faculty, could have any such motive. It was as impossible for an animal to have such motive as for a stone or an acorn to think. Keeping that rule in mind, men would begin to see when they were coming to be essentially human. When they began to feel the sense of obligation, to act from love to others, to place other interests on an equality with their own, then they began to be human. Take, for instance, a familiar example—the good business man. He was a good man in a commercial sense, shrewd and far-seeing, desirous of making money for the pleasures and ease which it enabled him to purchase. There was no human quality in such a man. He was not a man in the higher sense of that term. He had no more than the squirrel that laid up its treasures in the hollow of a tree. He was doing the same on a grander scale, of course, but the principle was identical. The artist who worked for fame, the poet who sang for glory, the farmer who cultivated his fields, the laborer who worked for food and shelter, if they worked only for these things, then they were no men. They might be successful, but they were not men unless they acted from human principles. Men did not rise out of the plane of being common to the animal kingdom until they were in the effort and purpose of doing to others as they would have others do unto them. The natural mind, excellent and noble in quality as it might appear, was mere amusement compared with the spiritual mind. It contained in chaotic masses the material to be used in forming the spiritual degree of the mind; and the person who possessed it only had that which was to man as stones and mortar lying promiscuously about were to the beautifully finished house. All the elements of his nature were in wild confusion compared with the flowing harmonies of the heavenly mind. The spiritual degree of mind was formed through our humanity. The image of God did not consist in outward, physical contour; its essential elements were of a divine character. If one wished to become human, he must begin to act from love to others. Man was distinguished from God on the spiritual side by being a form receptive of life from God. On the other hand, the lowest plane in man was the highest in animals; consequently the animal could never become a man, even though it should be developed to its highest possibilities. It could possess no distinctively human character. It was for man to say whether he would subdue the animal in him and become human, or whether, preventing the image of God from being formed in him, he would remain forever in the lowest plane of his nature.

RUMORS OF A RAILROAD STRIKE DENIED.

During the past week there have been rumors of a serious strike among the locomotive engineers on the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, and positive statements to that effect have appeared in more than one of the New-York papers. With the view of ascertaining the facts a TIMES reporter yesterday called on the Secretary of the Hudson River division of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, who made a frank statement. He said, "The society with which our division is connected numbers over twelve thousand men, and its ramifications extend all over the United States and part of Canada. The finances are in a very satisfactory condition, and were a universal strike to take place to-morrow, the men could afford to lay off for a very long time. The strike which has been going on in New-Jersey is purely local. When the men of any special division strike they are supported from the central funds, in the event of their conduct being approved. In the division with which I am connected there are eighty-five members, and for a long time we have been receiving Three Dollars per hundred miles. There was a general meeting of the society in Germania Hall on the 15th inst., and not a single word was said about a strike. I am sure that at present the men are satisfied with the present wages and are most anxious to avoid collision with their employers. I cannot speak for any other division of the general society, but there will be no strike among the men on this railroad, and I do not think there is the least probability of a general strike. The false statements made by some of the papers have excited a very uneasy feeling, and I am glad to have an opportunity of expressing through the columns of THE TIMES our real position."

THE LOST FOUND.

On Monday last a young lady, temporarily residing with relatives in West Fourteenth street, left their house with the intention of paying a visit to friends residing in West Thirty-fourth street. She did not reach her destination, and se no tidings were received by her friends in relation to her whereabouts, they became alarmed at her mysterious disappearance and invoked the aid of the Police to assist them in searching for her. It was feared that she had been taken sick or had met with an accident, while on her way to Thirty-fourth street, and advertisements describing her appearance, and offering a reward for any information concerning her, were inserted in the papers. Still no tidings of the missing young lady reached her friends, and fearing the worst, they had a large number of copies of her photograph struck off and distributed them to the Police, who were ordered to make inquiries at all the hotels and boarding-houses in the City. After a thorough search, the young lady was found yesterday morning in a lodging-house, kept by a gentleman and his wife, who had not seen the advertisements relative to her disappearance. Her grief at the recent loss of a brother and the fatigue following a visit to the Centennial Exhibition had led to mental aberration, under which she wandered from the house of her friends. On Tuesday she went to Albany, and returned to New-York late on Thursday night. She was restored to her friends at 2 o'clock yesterday morning by Ponce Commissioner Erhardt, who had discovered her whereabouts. Although she had been uninjured during her wanderings, she was prostrated last evening by brain fever.

SUICIDE OF A LAGER-BEER SELLER.

Frederick Dietrick, a native of Germany, fifty-six years of age, the proprietor of a lager-beer saloon at No. 446 West Thirty-third street, committed suicide yesterday afternoon by hanging himself with a strap to the door of his bed-room in the rear of the saloon. Dietrick was a stone-mason by trade and came to this country about ten years ago. After working at his trade for several years he opened a lager-beer saloon, and since that time has kept saloons in various parts of the City. His wife died about two years ago, and soon after that event he sent his youngest son to the Juvenile Asylum, and lived with his son John, aged twenty, and his daughter Anne, several years younger. Lately the business in the saloon did not prosper, and became so profitless that Dietrick was unable to pay his rent, and his son, who worked at his trade as a stone-mason, was compelled to devote his earnings to that purpose. Finally young Dietrick refused to pay the rent any longer, and this refusal led to a bitter quarrel between the father and son on Saturday last. After this quarrel Dietrick was heard to say that he was tired of life. Yesterday afternoon the son went out soon after dinner, and returned before 3 o'clock. He looked into the saloon from the street and saw his father apparently standing against the door of the bed-room. John remained in front of the place for nearly half an hour, and looking into the saloon again saw his father in the same position, becoming alarmed he called Patrolman Morgan, of the Twenty-second Precinct, and, in company with the officer, entered the place. Dietrick was found to be dead.

WAR AMONG THE BARBERS.

The "Tonsorial Artists" in this City, otherwise known as barbers, who charge ten cents and upward for a "shave," are greatly excited on account of the increase in the number of "rat shops," whose proprietors charge only five cents. Last evening a new organization, calling itself "The United Barbers of New-York and vicinity," whose members, comprising both bosses and journeymen, are opposed to a reduction of prices, held its second meeting at Central Hall, in West Thirty-second street, Lewis Büchner presiding and Charles Lorenzen acting as Secretary. About sixty new members signed the roll, making a total membership about four hundred. A resolution was passed to establish free agencies at the shops of such members as were willing to act in the matter, where journeymen, members of the society, might obtain employment in the shops of bosses who are members. The journeymen in the "rat-shops" are to be notified that unless they join the society within a specified time and pay twenty-five cents each towards defraying its expenses, they will be debarred from obtaining work in shops of the society bosses. The following bosses last evening agreed to open "agencies" at their shops: Philip F. Schmidt, No. 205 Spring street; Jacob Prass, No. 443 First avenue; A. Vogel, No. 72 Suffolk street, and August Pimner, No. 447 West Forty-first street.

A MYSTERIOUS CASE OF STABBING.

Matthew Cronin, aged seventeen, residing at No. 447 Eleventh avenue, was taken to the West Thirty-seventh Street Police Station last evening, suffering from a severe stab wound in the abdomen. Cronin stated to Capt. Washburn that about 7 o'clock, while standing in front of No. 423 Eleventh avenue, he was stabbed by a strange man, without having given his assailant any provocation for the assault. Police Surgeon Fetter was called to attend the wounded youth, and ordered his removal to Bellevue Hospital. The stranger made his escape. Cronin's story is not credited by the Police, and it is supposed that he received the injury, which is of a dangerous nature, in a fracas with some of his companions or while assaulting the man who stabbed him.

Robert Loius, aged thirty-five, whose residence was not ascertained, was found at a late hour on Saturday night at the corner of Fourteenth street and Fourth avenue, suffering from a severe scalp would, which it is supposed he received by falling on the sidewalk while intoxicated. He was cared for at Bellevue Hospital.

A musical and literary entertaiment will be given on Wednesday evening at Steinway Hall, for the benefit of St. Stephen's Home for Orphaned and Destitute Children. A feature of the programme will be readings from Shakespeare, and the recital of an original poem on Fontenoy by Mrs. James H. Hackett.

The decomposed remains of a man, about thirty-five years of age, were found yesterday floating in the North River at Pier No. 43. They are supposed to be the remains of Hugh Clark, of No. 37 Clarkson street, who has been missing from his home for about three weeks. They were taken to the Morgue for identification.

The funeral of the late Capt. George William Smith, of the Seventh Regiment, took place yesterday, from his late residence, No. 109 West Twenty-third street. A very large number was present from the Seventh Regiment, and the Veterans of the National Guard, Mad Rane Lodge F. and A. M. The remains were interred in King's Bridge Cemetery.

A novel walking match, in which the pedestrians are ladies, will commence at Central Park Garden next Sunday night, and will continue six days. The contestants are Miss Bertha von Hillern and Miss Mary Marshall. The latter claims to have walked 330 miles in six days, at Chicago, in a match last Spring, defeating Miss Von Hillern by twenty-three miles.

At the meeting of the American Geographical Society at Chickering Hall to-morrow evening, a paper will be read by Commodore Daniel Ammen, of the United States Navy, on "Surveys and Reconnoissances from 1870 to 1875, for a Ship Canal across the American Isthmus," and addresses will be delivered by Profs. Rosowell D. Hitchcock and William H. Thompson, and Rev. Dr. Howard Crosby, on "Palestine Exploration Beyond the Jordan," illustrated by stereopticon views.

On Saturday evening, James Jenkins, of No. 536 Eleventh avenue, was listening to music in a concert saloon on the West side, when two youths named William Flynn, of No. 433 West Forty-third street, and Thomas Lee, of No. 544 West Forty-sixth street, accosted him, and demanded that he should "treat" them. He refused, when Flynn caught him by the arms while Lee stabbed him twice in the back. They were arrested by Officer Schner, of the Twenty-second precinct, and Justice Wandell, in the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court, yesterday, committed them to await the result of Jenkins' injuries.

THE NATION'S CREDIT IN PERIL.

THE BUSINESS MEN OF SYRACUSE PRESENT A FORCIBLE APPEAL TO THE PUBLIC—AN EXIGENCY IN PUBLIC AFFAIRS POINTED OUT—THEY SHOW HOW THE IMPENDING DANGER MAY BE AVERTED—THE ELECTION OF GOV. HAYES URGED UPON ALL BUSINESS MEN.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SYRACUSE, Oct. 30.—The following appeal to the business community, signed by upward of two hundred and fifty business men, including the leading iron and salt manufacturers, wholesale dealers, bankers, and representatives of all trades and pursuits here, will be published to-morrow:

To the Business Community:

The public credit is the basis of all business prosperity and success upon which depend the happiness and welfare of communities. When this becomes impaired, and there exists a prospect of a blighting reaction and widespread disaster, it is time every energy of the people should be put forth to protect their interests and to ward off the perils. Such an exigency has arisen in our public affairs, calling for prompt and decided action by the business community. Confronted by an extraordinary condition of national politics by which the business interests of the country are threatened with new and dangerous complications, carrying with them further disturbance and uncertainty in commercial operations and industrial pursuits, which, if not speedily arrested, must be fraught with embarrassments and disasters far exceeding those already experienced, the undersigned, business men of the City of Syracuse, N. Y., hereby make declaration of their apprehensions, and assert their belief in the necessity for public spirited and patriotic citizens making common cause and rising above all mere partisanship, in earnest co-operation to avert the impending danger, and to render successful the most efficient measures for restoring the public confidence and promoting an improvement in financial affairs.

We beheld recently, with high hope and proud satisfaction, a marked improvement in the national credit, which was indicated by the success of the plan for placing the Government securities at the greatly reduced rate of four and one-half per cent., and we welcome it as a forerunner of that full restoration of confidence and happy adjustment of business relations which would assure the revival of the general prosperity of the people, attended by a continuance of the nation's heretofore unexampled progress. We were suddenly startled from this condition of hopefulness and satisfaction by an abrupt suspension of the successful operation of this financial plan both in this country and in foreign lands. This altered condition of affairs attests the sensitiveness of the money markets of the world—those of our own country as well as of Europe—to whatever threatens an interference with the smooth currents of trade and manufactures, and the startling suddenness with which the conversion on such favorable terms of our national securities was checked, indicates the presence of an imminent danger to the public credit, and peril to all material interests depending upon it. The cause is found in the apprehension of an untoward political result, viz.: the success of the Democratic Party in the approaching election. The lesson enforced by these altered conditions, which have so surprised and alarmed business interests everywhere, is that a change in the nation's financial policy would be followed by an inevitable revulsion and general derangement of business affairs throughout the country, and that there is no assurance for the future except in a firm adherence to the measures already adopted for the resumption of specie payments, a strengthening of the public credit, and a faithful discharge of every obligation of the nation. Any other course, as the experience of the past and the present warns us, must inevitably involve the country in a long continued period of business depression and widespread disaster.

The national peril is further enhanced by a movement throughout the Southern States, countenanced and fostered by the dominant party in that section, for excessive and unreasonable demands upon the National Treasury; and in contemplation of the pending Southern war claims and other schemes for reimbursing the lately insurgent people for the expenses and losses of their causeless rebellion against the Government, we hold that there is no security for business or property except in the defeat at the coming election of the candidates and policy of the Democratic Party. We have already witnessed the reaction caused by the bare possibility of the success of that party, and what the results would be were that possibility to become an actuality, we may with reasonable certainty estimate. The prospect is such that we as business men and citizens, animated by the impulse of self-preservation, and recognizing our dependence upon the conditions which conduce to the common welfare of our countrymen, are impelled to admonish our fellowmen of the menacing peril and to invoke the unity of political action to avert it.

The recent letter of Mr. Tilden, candidate of the party of reaction and an uncertain policy, warns us that the question of the Southern claims is a vital issue which is pressed by his supporters, without whom he could not hope to be elected, and to whom, in the event of his election, he would be under obligation and control. It impresses upon us more strongly than any other circumstance could, the imperative necessity of the election of a President and a Congress who are not only known to be opposed to the contemplated raid upon the people's treasury, but who are wholly untrammeled by the support of men and influences which are pressing these demands. Herein is only the perfect security against this menace. Our conviction, which we seek to impress upon the business men and all other citizens, is that national unity and prosperity is the speediest possible attainment of the indispensable conditions for the restoration of financial stability and business certainty, and the successful pursuit of trade and manufactures depend upon the success of the Republican Party in this election.

And therefore our agreement for ourselves, and recommendation to others, is that business men and manufacturers give their votes and influence to the election of Rutherford B. Hayes as President, and William A. Wheeler as Vice President, of the United States, and to afford every facility in their power for the promotion of the cause of national unity, security, and prosperity which they represent."

REPUBLICAN RALLY AT OWEGO—GEN. WOODFORD ON THE FINANCIAL QUESTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OWEGO, Oct. 30.—Gen. Stewart L. Woodford addressed the largest meeting of the campaign here to-night. The large hall was packed with the best people of the town and the neighboring villages. Gen. Woodford's address was two hours in length, and was mostly devoted to the financial question. It surpassed the best of his Ohio speeches on this subject, as pronounced by persons who heard him there. It was a logical, compact, solid, and, at times, brilliant presentation of the financial problem. It began by showing that an attack on the credits of the nation was a blow at business and industry in every form, and that an attack on the greenback and its redemption in 1879 is an attack on the nation's credit. He then showed that all the attacks which have been made have been by the Democratic Party, and that this campaign is the crowning and would-be fatal attack. He besought support for the Republican Party this Fall as a support of the national honor and private prosperity. He concluded by a few brief and sober words on the reform and Southern questions, and assured his hearers that if the country supported the ticket, the city Republicans would not allow fraud to cheat them out of victory.

THE POUGHKEEPSIE DISTRICT.

REPUBLICANS WORKING FOR LARGE MAJORITIES—THE DEMOCRATS DEMORALIZED AND HOPELESS—TILDEN'S UNPOPULARITY.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Monday, Oct. 30, 1876.

The closing week of the campaign in Dutchess County promises to be a very active one on the Republican side. Meetings are to be held every night at all the principal points in the county, and on Thursday afternoon a mass-meeting is to be held in this vicinity, with Speaker Blaine, Gen. Husted, S. B. Dutcher, and others, to present the issues of the campaign. There is to be a grand cavalcade, and Republican clubs will be in attendance from Fishkill, Cold Spring, Hyde Park, Pine Plains, Millerton, Pauling, Dover, and in fact from nearly all the towns in the county.

The outlook in Dutchess County is favorable. The Republicans are now making a canvass of the county under the direction of Hon. H. G. Eastman, Chairman of the County Committee, which is expected to be completed on Wednesday. A canvass of this county, however, does not usually afford any reliable index of what the vote is to be on election day, for reasons which all who are acquainted with the politics of this Congressional District for the last four or five years will readily understand. At present the Republicans estimate their majority in the county from 500 up to 1,000 and over on the electoral and State tickets. The Liberals are nearly all with the Republicans here as elsewhere, and the Democrats are not at all enthusiastic for Tilden, though most of them will probably vote for him under protest. They will not, however, spend their money for him, and it is reported that Tilden is so disgusted with the lukewarmness of the Dutchess County Democrats for his species of "reform," that he will not roll any of his "barrels" in here to help them on election day. The Congressional contest here is all on one side, and Ketcham's election by a large majority is conceded by both parties. In fact, the Democrats have not yet learned the name of the candidate they are running against him. He had not been thought of an hour before their Convention met, and the man who presented his name said it was Mansfield Davis. Afterward it was asserted that his name was Davies and not Davis. This was again denied, and the controversy is still raging in the Democratic ranks. It is admitted, however, that he is the "nephew of his uncle," and this is all that can be predicated of him with absolute certainty. The question of the name is important only as it concerns the printing of the tickets, and so few will be needed that it is not of much consequence any way.

The Republicans have renominated both of last year's Assemblymen—Dr. Thomas Hammond in the First District, and Dr. De Witt Webb in the Second—and both are sure of re-election.

The majority for Ketcham in the Congressional district comprising the Counties of Duchess, Columbia, and Putnam, will probably exceed that of the electoral and State tickets, and is estimated as high as 3,000. In Putnam County Hon. Hamilton Fish, Jr., regards his re-election to the Assembly as sure, and says the majority for the electoral ticket in that county will not be less than 250. In Columbia County it is thought that Tilden may get a small majority of 200 or 300, though this is by no means certain. Tilden is very unpopular in his native county, as he is everywhere else where he is personally known.

A REMARKABLE MASS-MEETING IN COLUMBIA COUNTY—AN INTERESTING PROCESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

HUDSON, Oct. 30.—The most remarkable mass-meeting held in Columbia County this campaign, took place at Chatham Village to-day. Every town in the county had delegations present, some of whom came with four-horse teams for many miles, to attend the demonstration. Special trains were run on all the railroads converging at this place, and thousands filled the square and stood patiently in the open air to listen to the eloquence of Senator Boutwell, Hon. Neil Gilmour, Hon. John T. Hogeboom, and others. Large wagons, loaded with the yeomanry of the country towns, hay riggings converted into platforms, vehicles, gay with streamers and flags, fanning mills on wheels, and threshers on flats improvised for the occasion, were among the features in the line. The farmers brought their wives and daughters, and the town wore a holiday appearance. Six bands of music enlivened the occasion, while the multitude supplied enthusiasm unbounded. The houses were gayly dressed with flags, and in the evening were brilliantly illuminated. Special trains in the evening brought the campaign clubs from various parts of the country, and nearly a thousand torches were in line this evening. The demonstration, in numbers, enthusiasm, and effect, may be set down as a complete success.

GRAND MASS-MEETING IN MALONE — AN EFFECTIVE SPEECH BY SENATOR PRINCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MALONE, Oct. 30.—A grand mass-meeting was held in this place last Saturday evening. A torchlight procession half a mile in length paraded the streets before the speaking commenced. In the procession there was a special honorary guard of sixty of the principal professional gentlemen and merchants of Malone. A glee club was also present, and sang campaign songs in a worthy manner. Senator Prince spoke effectivly for two hours. He sketched the histories of the two parties, their recent reform records, and compared Hayes and Tilden in a forcible manner. He said Georgia's vote gave warning of a solid South, based on intimidation. He paid an eloquent tribute to Mr. Wheeler, and closed amid great enthusiasm.

MEETING OF FRENCH REPUBLICANS IN OGDENSBURG.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

OGDENSBURG, Oct. 30.—This evening J. B. Truda, of Plattsburg, addressed one of the largest and most enthusiastic indoor meetings that has been held in Ogdensburg during the present campaign. He spoke in the French language for the Republican cause. The Town hall was packed. The Lafayette and Hayes and Wheeler Glee Clubs were present, and the audience, composed mainly of French voters, was wild with enthusiasm. The meeting will do much to overcome the efforts that have been made to detach the French-Americans from the Republican Party.

A MEETING OF IRISH REPUBLICANS IN BINGHAMTON—DEMOCRATIC DISCOURTESY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BINGHAMTON, Oct. 30.—A very large and enthusiastic meeting held here to-night was addressed by D. F. Burke, of New-York, and Edmund O'Conner, Esq., of this city. The speakers are both Irishmen, and the immense audience was largely composed of people of their own nationality. Our wigwam, which will accommodate two thousand persons, was packed to its utmost capacity. The speeches were eloquent and of great power. Great good will result from the meeting. The Democrats organized a meeting, and, by music and parading the streets, sought to draw from us, but most signally failed.

TILDEN'S WAR CLAIMS LETTER.

THE REFORMER'S SCHEME EXPOSED BY SENATOR BLAINE—THE DIFFERENCE BETWEEN "INCURRED" AND "SUFFERED"—A GREAT REPUBLICAN MEETING IN ROCHESTER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ROCHESTER, Oct. 30.—Unquestionably the grandest demonstration made by Western New-York Republicans since 1860 occurred here to-day. A better day could not have been desired. Every train from early morning till sun-down brought hundreds to town, and special trains and vehicles increased the hundreds to over 20,000 strangers. Hayes and Wheeler flags are conspicuous everywhere, and the people are jubilant over the unprecedented success of the gathering. At 2 o'clock P. M. a procession of mounted men, ward and town clubs, colored organizations, the industries of the city represented on carts numbering over a hundred, bands of music, &c., formed and marched through the principal streets, which were lined on both sides with thousands of spectators. The procession was three-quarters of an hour passing a given point. The colored clubs made a fine appearance, and were lustily cheered. For a most impromptu affair its magnitude and success astonished the Republicans and discouraged the Democrats. The Democratic barbecue last week was mentioned in comparison only with derision. At 3:30 P. M. the procession gathered in Washington square, where over five thousand people were addressed with great effect from different stands by ex-Gov. Gibson, of Ohio, Hon. S. S. Rogers, and Hon. Horace Bemis. Mr. Blaine arrived at 4:30 P. M., and was received with demonstrations of enthusiasm, and spoke briefly. Among other things he said: "I do not accuse Mr. Tilden of insincerity in his letter about the Southern war claims; still less would I intimate that he uses language, after the Talleyrand model, to conceal his ideas. But I do maintain that according to the peculiar phraseology in Mr. Tilden's letter he does not exclude that class of claims from which the whole danger is feared in the future. Mr. Tilden expends needless ammunition on two classes of claims, the payment of which is expressly forbidden by the fourteenth amendment. By the language of that amendment payment of any debt or obligation incurred in aid of the rebellion is prohibited. Had that amendment gone one step further and forbidden the payment of any war losses suffered by disloyal persons, a dangerous door would have been closed. But, unhappily, the amendment does not go to that extent, and a distinction between losses incurred and losses suffered is kept up. In Mr. Tilden's letter, he uses the word 'incurred' with evident care and precision, and does not include within the scope of prospective and promised vetoes the losses suffered, and whether he talks losses inside or outside of the fourteenth amendment, he carefully speaks of them as losses 'incurred.' Now, I think Mr. Tilden had a sharp eye on the dictionary, and the difference between 'incurred' and 'suffered' is the difference between 'agent,' and 'victim;' between losses brought on one's self and losses inflicted by another. That a vital distinction exists just here is evident from the fact that Mr. Riddle, member of Congress from Tennessee, and author of the famous Riddle bill, telegraphed Mr. Hewitt, that he cordially indorses Mr. Tilden's letter. But Mr. Riddle does not intimate that he abates one jot or tittle of the provisions of his bill. That bill provides for a reasonable compensation to all citizens of the United States for the use or occupation of their property by the United States Army, or any part thereof, during the late war. This bill would take hundreds of millions of dollars from the United States Treasury, and evidently its author does not consider Mr. Tilden's letter as in the least conflicting with its passage or the Executive approval. I do not think Northern people can congratulate themselves on any view of the Southern war claims that is so eminently satisfactory to Mr. Riddle, of Tennessee, as Mr. Tilden's letter seems to prove."

In the evening the city was a mass of illuminations and fire-works. Business houses and many private houses were decorated, and the thoroughfares were densely crowded with people. At 9 o'clock a procession of torch-bearers began to move, forming a magnificent sight—one never surpassed in Rochester. It was nearly an hour in passing a given point. Mr. Blaine made a ringing speech from the Court-house steps, and was again greeted with unbounded favor. Speeches were also made in City Hall, by Senator Rogers, Hon. Horace Bemis, and others. At this hour the enthusiasm is great, and Republicans are highly elated over the remarkable demonstration made. The people are wide awake, and the effect of the mass-meeting will be felt appreciably next week.

EX-GOV. NOYES AT SENECA FALLS—A GREAT MEETING OF THE MOST EARNEST PEOPLE OF SENECA COUNTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SENECA FALLS, Oct. 30.—The largest, most earnest, and successful meeting ever held in Seneca County, has just closed in this village. The announcement that Gen. Edward F. Noyes, of Ohio, would address the electors, was sufficient to call out the largest assemblage that has ever listened to one speaker in Seneca County, and hundreds were unable to get within hearing of the speaker. There was no torchlight display, and no unusual effort was made to attract the crowd; but the people were there by the thousand, the most earnest and thoughtful of our population. Col. Henry T. Noyes was chosen Chairman, with a full list of officers, embracing the largest manufacturers and business men of this county. The speech of Gen. Noyes was a remarkably powerful and logical production. His candid and forcible arguments were irresistible. At times his immense audience was almost stirred to tears by his eloquence, while at others they were aroused to the greatest enthusiasm. He made a most telling point in illustrating the magnanimous treatment of the Southren rebels by the Republican administration and the North, and after recounting the history of the Democratic Congress, and of the recent events in the Southern States, he fairly electrified his auditory by declaring: "The best way to deal with this second and incipient rebellion is to take it by the throat and choke it to death." Throughout his entire speech General Noyes was greeted with tumultuous applause, and his searching, exhaustive and eloquent discussion of the issues of the canvass will be productive of much good.

There has been a decided improvement in the tone of the Republican canvass in Seneca County within the past forty-eight hours, and we shall maintain it to the end.

THE SHOVEL BRIGADE IN MOTION IN THE INTEREST OF "REFORM."

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ITHACA, Oct. 30.—The canal-boat owned and commanded by Capt. Cadmus, of Cayuga, arrived at this place Saturday night. The Captain states that his boat was loaded with shovels in New-York, on an order of the canal authorities of the State, and that by their direction these shovels were left at various points along the line of the canal. He adds that thousands of men are marching up and down the tow-paths, armed with these implements, but with no work to perform. As it is well understood that only absolutely necessary repairs are made at this season of the year, it is supposed that this shovel brigade is put in motion in the interests of "Reform."

NIAGARA COUNTY REPUBLICANS.

THE GREATEST RALLY SINCE THE WAR—LOCKPORT CROWDED WITH PATRIOTS—UNAVOIDABLE ABSENCE OF SENATOR BLAINE—AN ELOQUENT SPEECH BY GEN. SHERIDAN—HAYES AND TILDEN CONTRASTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LOCKPORT, Oct. 30.—The Niagara County Republican mass-meeting held here to-day, has not been exceeded in numbers by any political gathering in the county since the war. The people commenced pouring into the city at an early hour, and continued to come until afternoon. Every town furnished its quota, and large delegations came from Albion, Medina, Brockport, Holley and other places outside the county. Main street was gayly and profusely decorated with flags, mottoes, and bunting, and enlivened by music and the firing of guns. The street was thronged and crowded to an extent rarely known in the history of the place. A very noticeable feature of the demonstration was that it was heartily participated in by the whole party of the county. The experience of the entire day has furnished the most positive proof that although the party is unhappily divided upon the Congressional question in this district, such division extends no further, and that both Flagler men and Hoskins men will be a unit at the polls in support of the national and State tickets. Indeed, it is confidently predicted that this rupture, by intensifying the feeling among Republicans, and causing them to work heartily for their favorite for Congress, whichever he may be, will necessarily bring out the Republican vote for the best man, and therefore be a positive benefit to the general ticket.

The gratifying success of the demonstration in numbers was largely owing to the expectation of the people that they were to hear Hon. James G. Blaine speak. The Senator is quite popular hereabout. Accustomed as he is to popular ovations, he would have been touched to-day by the warmth of the greeting from the immense concourse that filled the Court-house square, had he appeared upon the platform. Hon. Burt Van Horn, Chairman of the day, explained Mr. Blaine's absence to the great crowd, which then remained all the afternoon to hear speaking from other orators. It seems Mr. Blaine left Chicago on Saturday night, intending to reach Lockport via Suspension Bridge, but this side of Detroit he was, in some unexplained way, switched off to Buffalo. All efforts to get an engine to bring him to Lockport failed, and about 3 o'clock this afternoon he telegraphed a cordial greeting and earnest regret to Niagara County, closing his message with the words: "The Western skies are all alight." He speaks to-night at Rochester.

In the absence of Mr. Blaine the crowd was held and deeply interested by Gen. George A. Sheridan, in a speech of two hours. Gen. Sheridan was particularly strong and forcible in his presentation of the Southern question, the danger from a solid South in the event of Tilden's election, and in contrasting the two Presidential candidates. This latter picture was drawn in a masterly way that brought frequent responses from the crowd, and the caustic touches with which Tilden was sketched provoked peals of laughter. Gen. Sheridan's description of Gen. Hayes at the head of his brigade, in Crook's corps, charging the Confederate left at Winchester, contrasted with Tilden at the Chicago Convention the same Fall, stretching out his skinny hand in hope and comfort to Jeff. Davis—in his resolution declaring the war for the Union a failure—was as fine a burst of political oratory as the people generally have a chance to hear. The whole speech was excellent, was well received, and went far to compensate for the disappointment caused by Mr. Blaine's non-attendance. At least two thousand persons surrounded the stand, and half as many more filled the street during the speaking. A torchlight procession and a meeting at the Hodge Opera-house to be addressed by Col. Albert D. Shaw will close the day Niagara County, by this demonstration, gives notice that she will poll a decided majority for Hayes next week. She has been found in the Republican column at every presidential election since the party was born, and will not desert it now. She can and will settle her local differences without abating a vote or an effort for the general ticket, but will rather augment both.

REPUBLICAN RALLY IN ROME.

A LARGE POLITICAL DEMONSTRATION—SPEECH BY HON. A. W. TENNEY, OF BROOKLYN—GOOD NEWS FROM ONEIDA COUNTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ROME, Oct. 30.—The largest political demonstration that ever took place in our city was held this evening. There was a grand torchlight procession, and fully 2,000 men in uniform paraded the streets amid such enthusiasm as has seldom been witnessed here. Along the route of the procession private residences and places of business were handsomely illuminated. The procession comprised clubs from Utica, New-Hartford, New-York Mills, Clinton, Oneida, Wampasville, Clockville, and Durhamville. All the organizations carried banners and appropriate transparencies. A novel feature of the procession was a miniature locomotive, emitting smoke, with the bell ringing, and drawn on wheels by a yoke of oxen, accompanied by a company of fifty men from the car shops in Rome. Another pleasing feature was a large company of young men carrying shovels, hoes, axes, &c. Sink's Opera-house was crowded to its utmost capacity. Hundreds could not gain admittance, but were entertained by speakers who spoke from the balcony. Shepard's Glee Club, of Utica, sang some stirring songs, and at 8 P. M. Chairman C. D. Prescott introduced Hon. A. W. Tenney, of Brooklyn, to the vast audience. Judge Tenney, who had spoken here before, was received with tremendous and tumultous applause. He held the audience almost spell-bound by his eloquence and convincing arguments. Oneida County will certainly not do less in this campaign than in former years, but Rome will do a great deal better.

LARGE MEETING IN MILFORD, OTSEGO COUNTY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MILFORD, Oct. 28.—A great political Republican meeting took place this evening. Delegates of Boys in Blue were present from Oneonta, Cooperstown, Schenevus, Fly Creek, Maryland, and Portlandville, making, with the citizens present, a crowd of at least two thousand people. Music, fireworks, and glee clubs enlivened the scene, and over all waved the Star-spangled Banner. The hall at which Col. T. B. Thorpe spoke could not hold one-fifth of the people, and two outdoor meetings were organized, which were addressed by Andrew Davidson, of Cooperstown, and Charles Carpenter, of Oneonta. Otsego County is safe for a Republican majority for Hayes and Morgan.

MR. LEVI P. MORTON FOR CONGRESS.

An adjourned meeting of the Eleventh Congressional District Republican Convention was held at Brevoort Hall, East Fifty-fourth street, last evening, Mr. M. Eagleson in the chair, Alderman Billings, on behalf of the Nominating Committee appointed at the previous meeting, presented the name of Mr. Levi P. Morton, of the Twentieth Assembly District, as their candidate, and Mr. Morton was thereupon nominated by acclamation. Mr. Morton is about fifty years of age, and has done business in this city for the past twenty-five years. For fifteen years he has been engaged in the banking business, and is a member of the firm of Morton, Bliss & Co. Mr. Morton has always been a leading Republican, but has never held office.

NITRO-GLYCERINE EXPLOSION IN CANADA.

TORONTO, Oct. 30.—A quantity of nitro-glycerine, in a magazine, situated on a crib on the lake, below the East River, at Port Colborne, exploded today. A man named King was blown to atoms. The crib was shattered and a number of houses in the neighborhood damaged.

THE GREAT TAX-BLANK PLOT

CURIOUS COINCIDENCE IN THE CASE.

MYSTERIOUS VISIT OF TILDEN TO PHILADELPHIA THE DAY BEFORE THE ARRIVAL OF THE FRAUDULENT PAPER BLANKS—HIS VISIT KEPT UNUSUALLY QUIET—A QUESTION FOR HIS FRIENDS TO CONSIDER—ARREST OF THE CHAIRMAN OF THE DEMOCRATIC CITY COMMITTEE—PRELIMINARY PROCEEDINGS AGAINST THE PRISONERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Oct. 30.—The capture of the paper for the Democratic bogus tax receipts still continues the theme for excitement in political circles, and the Democracy have been busy all day endeavoring to make out the affair as trivial, and one of common practice by both parties; but all unprejudiced people know well that such an infamous and shameless attempt at fraud has never been attempted here before. Another very important fact in connection with this bold scheme to carry Pennsylvania is that Gov. Tilden is understood to have paid this city a flying visit on Friday last, one day in advance of the fraudulent paper. On the register at the Continental Hotel of that date there appears the following signature among the numerous others: "Samuel J. Tilden, New-York." He was assigned to room No. 230, and left on Saturday. The matter was kept a profound secret and the presence of this prominent individual not noted. Whether he came on a "still hunt"—or, indeed, it was a quiet one—is a matter of conjecture, and the most plausible theory is that he came here to see what chances there were for the success of this bold scheme of his managers. What the result of the endeavor has been he now undoubtedly knows, as he is a constant reader of THE TIMES. His known experience in all the small details of political trickery, and his questionable reputation as a public man and in some other respects, lay him under strong suspicion of active complicity in this last nefarious plot, when taken in connection with the undeniable facts that his name stands on the hotel register and that the hotel clerks refuse all information concerning it.

This afternoon Marcus and Josephs were brought up for a further hearing at Police Head-quarters. The court-room was densely packed with a motley crowd of Democratic leaders and hangers-on, among whom were Squire McMullen, Jim Atwell, Chief Clerk to the Secretary of the Interior, and of Whisky Ring fame; Doc. Kasserly, Jere. McKibben, from whose hotel Josephs started on Saturday night, and others. Immediately before the commencement of the hearing George McGowan, Chairman of the Democratic City Committee, came into the court-room, and with considerable assurance took a stand among the spectators, well knowing that a warrant had been issued for his arrest, but brazenly defying justice in its own temple. He was soon taken into custody, and placed along with the other culprits, and the trial commenced. The Commonwealth was represented by Hon. William B. Mann, Hon. Christian Kneass, and Hon. John K. Valentine, United States District Attorney. The conspirators were represented by Lewis C. Cassidy, a Pilgrim Democrat. In addition to the facts relating to the capture of the papers, Deputy Sheriff Salter produced the Sheriff's proclamation calling for an election on Tuesday next, and Mr. Thomas W. Price, who manufactures and prints the genuine tax receipts, was called to prove that all the tax receipts required had been printed and delivered to the Receiver of Taxes this year, and that as great care is exercised in the manufacture of the paper and the printing as the Government exercises over the making of paper for printing the notes of the United States Treasury Department. The driver of a carriage testified to taking Josephs and another man from the Girard House to the North Pennsylvania Railroad Depot, where both men alighted and soon afterward re-embarked, and were driven to the head-quarters of the Democratic State Committee, at No. 1,014 Walnut street. This driver was very forgetful, and apparently with a purpose. He could not tell whether bundles had been placed in his carriage or not, or whether they had been taken out. Matthew Vallon, who brought Marcus to meet Josephs, testified to stopping at a saloon kept by Squire McMullin, at Ninth and Bainbridge streets, and Mr. Cassidy, endeavored to make capital out of this, and show that the bundles were brought out of this saloon, and thus throw the onus of the affair on the Squire, to shield the Democratic State Committee from complicity. In this he was not successful, as Mr. Mann proved beyond a doubt that Josephs and "the other man," [McGowan,] received the bundles at the depot, thus showing that they came from New-York direct. At this point Mr. Mann, for the prosecution, asked for another hearing on Friday next, saying that he wished to show that the conspiracy extended further than the three persons under arrest, and that he would prove in time who the parties were that brought the paper from New-York, and implicate parties there in the conspiracy. "For," he added, "this is not a conspiracy of mean proportions, but one to furnish persons who are not qualified to vote with the necessary means, and thus give the ballot to at least thirty thousand persons who are not entitled to enjoy its privileges." He therefore asked that bail in $5,000 for each person be required. Mr. Cassidy, with a great deal of braggadocio, said, "Well, we are ready to furnish bail to any amount, and to appear for a hearing at any time you may name." This concluded the proceedings for to-day.

ARREST OF INTIMIDATORS IN LOUISIANA.

NEW-ORLEANS, Oct. 30.—Deputy United States Marshals Murphy and Thompson arrived this morning on the steamer Gov. Allen from Bayou Sara with fifteen prisoners whom they had arrested in West Feliciana Parish, charged with conspiracy and the intimidation of negroes in July last. The prisoners, all of whom are white men, were arraigned before United States Commissioner Southworth, and held to bail in $1,500 each to appear before the United States Court at the November Term.

A WARNING TO NEW-YORKERS.

CINCINNATI, Oct. 30.—Eph Holland, a notorious sporting man of this city, was arrested today by the United States Marshal on a charge of inducing a Judge of Election in the Fourth Ward to accept a fraudulent vote at the late election from Frank Westjohn, another gambler. The latter is also under arrest.

THREE MURDERERS UNDER ARREST.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 30.—The Coroner's inquest on the body of young Williams, murdered last evening, closed to-night, and the jury rendered a verdict that he came to his death by a pistol-shot wound, inflicted by J. Henry Dressing, and that Herman Henry Dressing and William Weber were accessories to the act. All the three men mentioned are under arrest.

POSSIBLE MURDER IN VERMONT.

RICHFORD, Oct. 30.—On Sunday evening J. O'Brien, the boss of a section of the Missisquoi Railroad, was stabbed in the side and neck, and left insensible near the track at Enosburg. On recovering consciousness the wounded man crawled to his house, and though unable to give an account of the affair, repeated the name of Patrick Regan, a fellow-laborer. Regan was arrested to-day. O'Brien's injuries are of a serious and perhaps fatal character.

GEN. B. F. BUTLER'S CANDIDACY.

IS THE NATIONAL COMMITTEE AIDING IN HIS ELECTION?—THE QUESTION SATISFACTORILY DISPOSED OF—BUTLER DENOUNCED BY A MEMBER OF THE COMMITTEE—SOME INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Oct. 30.—The following important correspondence, showing the position of the National Republican Committee toward the canvass of Gen. Butler in the Seventh District, is given out to-night by F. E. Clarke, Chairman of the Committee managing the canvass for Judge Hoar:

John M. Forbes, Esq., Member for Massachusetts of the Republican National Committee:

DEAR SIR: We have been informed that application has been made to the Republican National Committee to send speakers into the Seventh Congressional District of the State, to advocate the election of Gen. Butler. As Gen. Butler is only partially in sympathy with the Republican Party, and is openly at variance with it upon some of the most important issues in the campaign, I beg to express the hope, on behalf of the committee of those Republicans of the district who are supporting the nomination of Judge Hoar, that the National Committee will decline to take any action on the matter, or send speakers who will advocate the election of Judge Hoar, who is now and always has been in entire accord with the party platform and the letter of acceptance of its Presidential candidate. F. E. CLARKE,

Chairman of Committee of Seventh District.

LAWRENCE, Oct. 28, 1876.

BOSTON, Oct. 30, 1876.

Frederick E. Clarke, Esq., Chairman of Committee of Seventh District, Lawrence:

MY DEAR SIR: I beg leave to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 28th, addressed to me as representing Massachusetts in the National Republican Committee, and expressing the hope that we should avoid interference in the contest going on in your district. There is not time to bring the subject before our committee, and I must ask you to accept my answer as personal. I am not aware that any direct application has been made to our committee on the part of Gen. Butler for speakers, but a prominent Western member of it informed me at our last meeting that he had been asked to speak in your district, and requested my advice in the interest of the National Campaign as to his doing so. I replied that the settled policy of the Committee was to avoid helping any Congressional district, unless, from peculiar circumstances, it rises into national importance. In this case I advised my colleague by all means to speak in your district if he was ready to oppose Gen. Butler as the worst enemy of the Republican Party, who has done more than any other man to bring about the tidal wave against us two years ago, and who is now openly opposed to our most important principles. I thought such a speech in your district the best missionary work for the national cause which could be done anywhere. My colleague decided not to come to Massachusetts to speak in Gen. Butler's interest, and here I presume the matter will be dropped in the Committee. I give this information more readily because the Butler organ here and the New York Nation both profess to believe that the whole National Committee are supporting Gen. Butler. I further beg leave to that say, when asked by leading Republicans to use my influence with Judge Hoar to induce his acceptance of the nomination, I replied that, in my judgment, such a personal and pecuniary sacrifice on his part would worthily crown his long career of usefulness, but that after having given the best years of his life to the public we had no right to demand it of him. I honor him for responding to your call and wish I could do anything in or out of our committee to help you rid our district of the disturbing element of an old pro-slavery Democrat, who was drawn into our party by its success, and is held there by his inordinate appetite for the spoils and patronage of office. It is the long toleration of Butlerism, and its kindred diseases, by the Republican Party which gives the only hope of success to the unholy alliance of Adams, Tilden, and the Jefferson Davis Democracy. Your truly,

J. M. FORBES.

A CENTENNIAL TRAIN RUN INTO.

FIVE PERSONS KILLED AND THIRTEEN WOUNDED IN PENNSYLVANIA.

GOLDSBORO, Oct. 30.—The 9:04 train from Scranton, consisting of seventeen cars, was run into by the Summit coal train, one mile and a half north of Goldsboro Station, on the Delaware, Lackawanna & Western Railroad this evening. One car was burned and two telescoped. Five persons were killed and about thirteen wounded. A corps of surgeons attended to the wounded. Full particulars of the accident cannot be learned at present.

DECISION IN A CANAL CASE.

MANDAMUS GRANTED BY JUDGE WESTBROOK AGAINST THE AUDITOR OF THE CANAL DEPARTMENT.

ALBANY, Oct. 30.—In March last argument was made before Justice Westbrook on an application for a peremptory mandamus to the defendant in the case of The People ex rel. William Wosson against George W. Schuyler, Auditor of the Canal Department. The court then took the papers under advisement, and to-day Judge Westbrook rendered decision that the peremptory writ of mandamus, as applied for, must issue. In his decision Justice Westbrook says: "Upon the present motion, in answer to the facts hereinbefore stated, we have only this allegation in the affidavit of the present Auditor, George W. Schuyler, that, as the affiant is informed and believes, the award stated in the moving papers is void on the ground of collusion and fraud between the appraisers and Voorhees, and that it can be established upon the trial of an issue of facts to that effect. Not a single fact is stated upon which the judgment of the court can be exercised, nor even is there the general statement of fraud and collusion made upon any personal knowledge, nor even is the source of information stated. In the absence of any such statement the court will not subject sworn State officials to the imputation of official corruption, nor claimants to the cost and delay of a trial by granting the writ in an alternative form.

WARREN COUNTY, N. J., REPUBLICANS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—There was a great Republican demonstration here to-night. Delegations were present from Hackettstown and Oxford. Gen. Conway spoke on the rebel claims from his own experience as a custodian of rebel property during the war in the Department of the Gulf, and made a marked impression. His plea for public education in the South, during which he referred to the illiteracy of the masses in the Democratic States South, as compared with the intelligence of those in the loyal North, was very instructive and convincing. We had the best meeting and the best speech of the campaign, and the prospects are good for a largely increased Republican vote in the town and county.

OUTRAGE BY MEXICAN OFFICIALS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Oct. 30.—Collector Casey has received a letter from the mate of the American schooner St. George, announcing the seizure and imprisonment of Capt. Gandy by the Mexican officials of Coatzacoalcos, Mexico. The mate states that the schooner's papers were correct and had been approved by the Custom's officials.

THE REPUBLICAN OUTLOOK.

NO DOUBT IN PENNSYLVANIA.

THE DEMOCRATS INGENIOUS AND TRICKY BUT HOPELESS — ALL ATTEMPTED FRAUDS UNSUCCESSFUL — THE CONGRESSIONAL DELEGATION SURE TO BE REVERSED, AND THE REPUBLICANS MAY DO BETTER STILL—CONSTANT GAINS OF THE REPUBLICANS.

From Our Special Correspondent.

PHILADELPHIA, Monday, Oct. 30, 1876.

may be beaten by Campbell, and in the latter Mahan will probably succeed Stenger.

Such is the prospect, so far as I can now learn, as to the gains in members of Congress. If further information suggests any corrections as necessary, they will be made. There are many interesting details concerning the contests in some of the districts which are also reserved for another letter and for further investigation. There are two or three of the districts noted above where the majorities will be small, and where any unexpected complications between now and election day may alter the chances of Republican gains; but, as stated at first, a net gain of seven Congressmen is the least that Republicans expect and are justly entitled to.

THE PROSPECTS IN THE STATE.

The reports from all sources indicate Republican gains, and the condition of affairs is rapidly improving during the last few days. There is now no fear of the frauds contemplated in this city, which may be set down for 20,000 majority for Hayes and Wheeler. The Republican Committee expects a majority outside of Philadelphia. This the Democrats will not concede. But they would not admit it in any election, not even in 1872, when the majority outside the city was greater than within. No Democrat now privately claims the State, and Republicans everywhere may go to their work on election day with perfect assurance that Pennsylvania will give her twenty-nine electoral votes to the Republican candidates. Of particular localities and local influences and labors, it will be necessary to speak in another letter. J. E. C.

GOOD WORK IN MASSACHUSETTS.

ADAMS NOT GETTING ANY CONSIDERABLE REPUBLICAN SUPPORT — AN EARNEST CAMPAIGN WAGED IN THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS—CLOSE CONTEST IN GEN. BANKS' DISTRICT, WITH THE CHANCES IN HIS FAVOR — BUTLER WORKING DAY AND NIGHT AND EXPECTING TO WIN.

From Our Own Correspondent.

BOSTON, Monday, Oct. 30, 1876.

The campaign is being pushed in Massachusetts with a good deal of vigor on all sides, and this last week before election will be crowded full of work. The Republican State Committee have just completed a careful canvass of the State, and they announce themselves as satisfied with the outlook. True, they find, as they were told they would find, that the leaders of the factions, the Prohibitionists, the Labor Reformers, and the Woman Suffragists, which are represented by those little known citizens Baker and Eddy, are working systematically and energetically, not to elect their own men, of which they have never had the slightest hope, but "to beat Rice," and "punish the Republican Party," and that the Democratic managers are throwing a good deal more energy and spirit into their work than is their wont; but they also find that the Republican masses are "awake" at last to a full comprehension of the situation, and that many who would in "off" years be counted upon to bolt the straight Republican ticket for a Prohibitory one, have come to the conclusion that their duty is to wheel into the Republican line, and leave the business of "punishing" the party managers who will not entertain the Prohibition doctrine for another year. The greatest danger that Rice has to fear is from these Prohibitionists, and that so many are found finally determined to turn their backs on their fanatical leaders is a pleasing discovery to his friends and supporters. The Labor Reformers are but a handful, and the Woman Suffragists who are not Prohibitionists can be counted only as a "baker's dozen." For Adams it is found that comparatively few Republican votes will be cast, and it is thought that these will be more than balanced by the Irish Democratic votes which he will drive away. The secret move among the Irish Democrats, of which THE TIMES has already had information, is a strong one in some sections, notwithstanding the fact that influential Irish politicians discountenance it, and it is exerting not a little influence. So it is safe to predict Gov. Rice's re-election by a good majority, and not many thousand under the popular majority for Hayes in the State.

The public campaign work this season is almost entirely in the Congressional Districts. In the Seventh, where Gen. Butler is the regular Republican candidate, the fight is the hottest; in the Sixth, where Dr. Loring is the candidate against Congressman Thompson, who has the advantage over the other Democratic candidates for Congress in the State, in being "the man who beat Butler," two years ago, there is a warm struggle; and in the Eleventh, represented last year by the venerable Mr. Chester W. Chapin, of the Boston and Albany Railroad, Democrat, there is something of a contest. Mr. Chapin is again a candidate, and his Republican competitor is State Senator Robinson. Mr. Clapo, Republican candidate in the First, Mr. Harris in the Second, Mr. Walbridge A. Field in the Third, represented by Henry L. Pierce; Mr. Frost in the Fourth, who was unseated just as the awful hot weather came on, it will be remembered, by Judge Abbott; ex-Gov. Claflin in the Eighth; W. W. Rice in the Ninth, succeeding George F. Hoar, and ex-Mayor Norcross, of Fitchburg, in the Tenth, succeeding President Seelye, of Amherst—these are all likely to be elected without much of a struggle, although the managers do not propose to lose sight of their cause, and campaign work will be carried on with vigor to the last day in all of them. Of these mentioned there is Republican opposition only to ex-Gov. Claflin, and this is on account of his former leaning toward the rag baby; but the Governor has within the last year strengthened himself on the financial question, and is now as strong a hard-money man, by declaration, as any of his associates on the Congressional ticket, planting himself squarely on the national Republican platform, and taking Gov. Hayes' letter as his guide.

I have said above that the only severe contests are in the Seventh, the Sixth, and the Eleventh Districts. I should have added the Fifth, where Gen. Banks is the Republican candidate, to the great surprise of the Republicans generally of the District, who had concluded that, on account of his past course, in devotion to the party, and becoming almost a Democrat, his race was run. There was a good deal of disappointment as well as surprise at the result of the Nominating Convention, and for a while there was talk of a bolt, and the nomination of Hon. John Cummings, of Woburn, who was a prominent candidate before the convention, and is a man of sterling integrity, ability, and of good parts generally—but second thought was against the movement. The General is making many speeches in the district, and his warm friends are working for him zealously, having the same sturdy belief in him as long ago when he was "the pride of the State," and as "the little iron man," created intense enthusiasm wherever he went. It is generally thought that his good luck will carry him through if all other means fail. His opponent, Hon. Richard Frothingham, of Charlestown, is an able conservative, and is respected by Republicans and Democrats alike.

The Seventh District is ablaze. Butler and Hoar speak nightly, and Wendell Phillips and Fred. Douglass, with a couple of bright Southerners, travel up and down the district stumping for the former; while Gen. Gordon, Rev. James Freeman Clarke, the "apostle of bolting," Hon. George O. Shattuck, and others of this class, help the Judge on the stump. Meanwhile the torch-bearer, the distributor of political tracts, the broad-side poster, and the whispering and button-holing wire-puller, are abroad, and the people of the district are in a high fever of excitement. What will be the result? Judge Hoar will not be elected; this is the generally expressed opinion, and is quietly given by many of the Judge's warmest friends and the bitterest opponents of the General. But whether the victory will be with Butler or Tarbox, the Democratic candidate, is a question difficult to answer. Shrewd observers, who have canvassed the district in the interest of the Republican Party at large, say that if there is no violent change, Butler will be elected "by the skin of his teeth." No man could work harder than he. He is in the field constantly, and his law business is left to take care of itself. His headquarters, in Pemberton Square, this city, are like a military campe. Clerks are toiling over huge piles of documents, answering letters and telegrams, and busy messengers are bustling about, while the outer offices are crowded with the workers of the General, and the latter, when in town, is closeted with his chief, giving directions for the prosecution of the work, planning and leading himself. A good deal of the work is of the coarser sort, and some of the posters and cartoons displayed in the district are vulgar in the extreme. Though the outlook for the Judge is blue, he and the leaders who have pushed him forward, are putting their shoulders to the wheel, and no effort will be spared to carry the district if that is possible. But the Judge is not a popular man, and as he will not descend to personalities, and so meet the General with his own weapons, he finds his work in the district most distasteful. Whether he fails or succeeds he should have the credit for what he has done for the good name of his party. The fight here is looked upon with the greatest of interest, but there seems to be no general desire on the part of the leading Republicans of the State to take a hand in it. In fact, they appear to be exceedingly careful to keep at a safe distance. A strong pressure has been brought against the Governor to induce him to declare himself on one side or the other, but he remains firm in his safe position — the Governor's chair. He maintains that as Governor of the State, it would ill become him to take a hand in a political quarrel in one of the Congressional districts, and so he wraps his mantle about him and gazes silently on the struggle from afar off. The fact is, they are afraid of Butler in this courageous State of Massachusetts. While the better class of Republicans would rejoice at his defeat by Judge Hoar, and the leading public men of the party would breathe freer if the Judge should beat him, all shrink from coming into contact with him, and falling under his avenging arm, and so they wag their heads and say nothing.

In the Sixth District, as I have said, there is a struggle, but Dr. Loring is quite sure to carry off the prize. He has to contend against a man who is popular in the district, and against enemies who fight him in the dark. But he is making a vigorous canvass, and is, every time he speaks, winning votes. He has an advantage here in being known. The fight against him is on his record as a Democrat up to the breaking out of the war when he became a Republican. No one questions his Republicanism while in the Party or his consistency, and we have the spectacle of an opposition denouncing him for holding the very doctrines and sentiments his opponents held and hold. False charges are brought against him thick and fast; but he meets them manfully, and conducts himself with dignity through the rough ordeal.

NEW-JERSEY PROSPECTS.

A PROBABLE GAIN OF TWO CONGRESSMEN—THE NATIONAL TICKET TOLERABLY SAFE—DEMOCRATS WHO DENOUNCE TILDEN—THE DEMOCRATIC FRAUDS NOT SUFFICIENT TO OVERCOME REPUBLICAN MAJORITIES.

From Our Special Correspondent.

TRENTON, Saturday, Oct. 28, 1876.

The State of New-Jersey has suffered the misfortune of a Democratic Executive Administration for the last eight years. There has not been the absolute darkness of Democratic rule, because the Legislature has generally been held by the Republicans. There has been a goodly number of Republican members of Congress, and the Republican candidate for the Presidency has, since the beginning of the war, received the electoral vote of the State. New-Jersey has not been all the time, and under all circumstances, a Republican State in the same sense as Vermont, Maine, Minnesota, and many others. This fact interposes at once an elemeat of doubt as to the contest in this canvass, or at least a ground for a claim by the Democrats that they will secure its vote for Tilden. Such a claim, however, is not very remarkable when it is recalled that they even boast of their prospects in Ohio and Pennsylvania, both of which are as sure to vote for Hayes as the sun is to rise on election morning. In 1872 President Grant carried New-Jersey by 15,200 majority, in a vote of more than 178,000. Two years later, in 1874, a Democratic Governor was elected by a majority of 13,232, in a voteof 181,000. But in 1875, a year ago, the State Legislature chosen was Republican by a good working majority in both houses, and the majority in the popular vote on members of the Legislature was about four thousand. This is a suggestive fact that should not be overlooked in considering the prospects of this year. It looks as though the State were already brought back to Republicanism a year ago. Besides, the careful canvass made of the State shows that the ascendency then gained will be kept in November, and greatly strengthened. The Democratic claim of the State for Tilden is probably intended for nothing more than to keep up the courage and enthusiasm of "the boys."

New Jersey, besides voting for Presidential Electors, chooses members of Congress, State Senators from seven districts, and members of the lower house of the Legislature.

THE STATE LEGISLATURE.

The control of the Legislature will undoubtedly be retained by the Republicans. There is a great contest, the stake of the issue being a United States Senator. There are eight Republican members of the Senate who hold over, and to keep a majority in that body it would be necessary to elect but three of the seven to be chosen. The three districts that are considered absolutely certain for Republican majorities are Cape May, Burlington, and Passaic. These districts alone insure eleven Senators out of the twenty-one. The Middlesex District is Democratic, but Ross, the Democratic candidate for member of Congress, has encountered difficulties and local divisions which make him and the whole of his party uncomfortable. The candidates for the State Senate are Mr. Gerard on the Republican side, and Mr. Ludlow on the Democratic. The Republicans have the advantage in the character of the candidates, and the quarrels, hereafter noted, on account of Ross, may elect Mr. Gerard. Sussex County district will be represented by a Democrat undoubtedly. The regular Democratic candidate for the Senate is Francis M. Ward, an old Pennsylvania Railroad man of bad reputation, how bad may be imagined by the fact that Democrats even will not unite in supporting him. Dr. F. Smith, a Democrat, and a man of excellent standing in the community, has been nominated by Independent Democrats as a bolting candidate. The Republicans will probably make no nomination, but will vote for Smith, and thus insure the choice of a respectable man. Ward is well understood to have procured his nomination by corrupt means, and he can have no hope of election by an honest vote. Of the two Democratic newspapers in the district, one supports Ward and the other Smith.

Hunterdon County, is now represented by a Republican. The Democrats have nominated for the Senate, James M. Pitcock. The same gentleman bought his nomination three years ago, and was beaten; he has now bought it again. There is a great deal of dissatisfaction among Democrats. The Republicans have nominated Mr. Louis H. Taylor, who built the Bound Brook and the New-York Railroad. He is proprietor of the Taylor Iron Works at High Bridge, and is a strong candidate. The majority is entirely against him, but there is hope of his election.

In the lower house there is a majority of twelve or fourteen, which will be nearly or quite maintained. Two or three members will be lost in Hudson County, doubtless. In the Southern part of the State, there will be a gain, and it is hoped the gains will equal the losses. In the counties from Cape May to Burlington County line, twelve Republican members will be elected. It is not believed possible that in any event the Democrats can gain the Legislature. As a United States Senator is to be chosen to succeed Senator Frelinghuysen, the contest for the Legislature is of great importance. Happily the situation is not now complicated by rivalries and hostilities among candidates for the Senate. All seem to have tacitly consented that the canvass for the Senatorship shall not begin till after the Legislature has been chosen. Secretary Robeson is not now understood to be a candidate, and is certainly not disturbing the canvass with personal claims. Senator Frelinghuysen has declined to take any measures at this stage of the canvass to secure his re-election, though he cannot help but be a candidate. Gen. William J. Sewell, now State Senator from Camden County, and President of the Senate, will probably be presented as a candidate from the southern part of the State. Courtland Parker, of Newark, will doubtless be a candidate. But the canvass will be reserved till the Legislature is chosen, and the consequence is that the general prospect is greatly improved in the State. Such a course, if it had been pursued, would have saved the Republican Party some trouble in other States in the past three years.

THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

The Republicans will gain in New-Jersey two members of Congress, probably, which will make the delegation stand four Republicans to three Democrats. The First District is now represented by Clement H. Sinnickson, a Republican, who is renominated, and will be returned by a majority of 2,000, or more. The Second District is Republican, and Dr. John Howard Pugh who has been nominated will be elected. The majority two years ago was less than a thousand, but it will be increased very considerably. In the Third District the Democrats have renominated Miles Ross, a man unfit to represent any constituency. He is counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, and will probably have the powerful railroad support, and he can command the use of large sums of money. There is much feeling against him among the people. Two years ago his majority was 2,000, but the district is this year regarded by sanguine Republicans as doubtful. Against Ross, George W. Atherton, Professor of History in Rutgers College, an able man of spotless character, has been nominated. The people of the district would honor themselves by electing him, and they may be able to do it. But he has a host of bad elements to overcome. His election would mean the emancipation of the district from railroad domination, and that is a great deal to hope for.

The Fourth District will be represented by a Democrat. The Republicans have made no nomination, and yet there will be one of the hardest contests of the canvass. A person by the name of Aavah H. Clark bought the regular nomination of the Democratic Convention. He bears a very bad reputation, and some time ago was indicted, with others, for conspiracy to obtain certain property not belonging to them. James M. Pitcock, candidate for the State Senate in Hunterdon County, was indicted as one of the same band of conspirators. This noble pair have excited a good deal of disgust in the Democratic ranks. The district is Democratic by 5,000, or certainly 4,000 majority, and there was no chance of electing any Republican in this Presidential canvass, though it might have been possible at another time. The halting Democrats have put in nomination R. H. Veghte, an out-and-out Democrat, but a man of excellent character and reputation. He will receive the Republican votes of the district. It would seem at first thought that the Republicans might have taken advantage of the division to run a candidate of their own, and perhaps elect him by a plurality vote. But on inquiry it appears that Veghte would not consent to be a candidate without that prospect of election which he would gain from Republican support, and he was the only man who could have been run by the bolting Democrats that would have been strong enough to draw sufficient votes from Clark to render the election of a Republican candidate possible. The Republicans had, therefore, to take their choice between voting hopelessly for a candidate of their own or aiding the election of a decent Democrat, and they chose wisely in taking the latter course. Veghte has a fair, chance of election.

In the Fifth District Cutler was two years ago elected over William Walter Phelps by a majority of seven votes only. The district is fairly Republican, and Alfred Mills, who has the nomination, should this year regain it by a good majority. There can be little doubt of his election, and his friends admit no doubts at all. F. H. Teese, of Newark, a Democrat, was elected over ex-Gov. Ward, in 1874, by a little more than a hundred votes. This, like many political results of that year, was a complete surprise. It should not have happened. This year the Republicans have renominated Thomas B. Peddie, a successful and wealthy business man of Newark, who will have a majority of 1,500 certainly, and perhaps 2,500. The Seventh District, which embraces Jersey City, is hopelessly Democratic, and Hardenburgh will no doubt be re-elected, though there is some dissatisfaction in his party because he had the decency and independence to sign the report on District of Columbia affairs, which was drawn by the Republican members of the committee, instead of sustaining the outrageous and unfounded conclusions of Buckner, the Chairman. The Republicans will, to recapitulate, carry the First, Second, Fifth and Sixth Districts, and have a small chance for the third. The Democrats will carry the fourth, seventh, and probably the third.

THE GENERAL RESULT.

The rather uncertain political course of New-Jersey in the past, causes some doubts which would not exist if the appearances and indications of the present were to be made the exclusive basis of a conclusion as to the general result in the State. There is only one discouraging fact to Republicans, and here, as in some other States, it is the obvious preparation for unusual Democratic frauds at the polls. In some years of political observation as a correspondent in many States, I have never seen anything indicating a grand scheme for carrying an election for the whole country by frauds in the election. This year the evidence is universal that over the country, especially in every close and doubtful State, frauds have been devised in behalf of Tilden, which are so extensive and uniform in design as to leave no doubt of their common origin and arrangement by one directing mind. It is painfully common to find in elections signs of tricks and frauds by local candidates of both parties, devised and practiced in their own behalf. Congressional districts are sometimes carried by such efforts, which are also extended to whole States, usually without disturbing the result. But it is easy in such cases for a practiced political observer to see the difference in the schemes and methods of work, oftener than otherwise bungling and inefficient for that purpose, and accomplishing nothing more than to display their authors' willingness to cheat the people of their choice. This year everything is different. Everywhere is the same kind of preparation for fraud, designed everywhere to accomplish the utmost possible. There is room for only the conclusion that Tilden, through his own chosen agencies, has set in operation all over the country the same machinery that he was familiar with in 1868, modified to suit the needs of the time. One part of the plan is believed to be to commit frauds in the localities where they are least suspected, and they will be extended to small towns where extensive cheating was never before undertaken. In every instance trained experts are at the work, and if the plans should succeed in the magnitude in which they have been conceived and undertaken, the result would be disastrous to Republican success. The money for the political campaign is furnished by Tilden himself. For this statement I refer to Samuel J. Randall as authority, and call as a witness Senator Randolph, of this State, to whom Randall said that Tilden promised beforehand that if he were nominated he would furnish the money for campaign expenses. As money for fraudulent registration and voting is plenty, it cannot be doubted that Tilden knows all about the work that has been undertaken, if he did not devise it himself.

It is not believed the State of New-Jersey can be carried by frauds, for the indications of a Republican majority too great to be overcome by such means are very strong. But the preparations have produced some anxiety, and have incited to earnest work of detection and prevention. The aid of the United States Election law will be invoked, and the most earnest and zealous labor will be expended to secure an honest expression of the people's will. If the effort succeeds there can be little reason to doubt that New-Jersey will give its electoral vote for Hayes and Wheeler. The southern part of the State may be counted upon for large Republican gains. In the north, where the Democrats are strong, it is impossible to say what may be expected, but there is reason to hope for Republican gains, except in the towns where corrupt influences can be best used.

The public canvass has been of late spirited and active. Among those who have spoken or will speak in the State, are Ben. Harrison, of Indiana; Senator Frelinghuysen, T. N. McCarter, one of the candidates for Electors; John L. Stevens, of Maine; Prof. Langston, of Washington; Prof. Atherton, Dr. Pugh, Gov. Noyes, Eugene Hale, Mr. Blaine, and Gen. Kilpatrick.

The questions urged upon the attention of voters are these: The school question, the financial question, and a Government by the solid South. The school question maintains considerable prominence here by reason of the freshness of the contest about the constitutional amendment prohibiting the use of public money for sectarian institutions, and the determined opposition made to it by the Democrats. Mr. Tilden's letter on the Southern claims has done him no apparent good. It is regarded as an exhibition of the white feather, which does not usually aid a candidate in the closing days of a canvass, even if there is occasion for it. Then, too, Tilden's declaration in his letter of acceptance, that the self-imposed restrictions of a candidate before election are of no value, is remembered, and his last promise is reviewed in the light of that former expression of his principles.

THE ANTI-TAMMANYITES.

RESULT OF THE CONFERENCES.

NO UNION WITH THE GERMANS OR INDEPENDENT CITIZENS' ASSOCIATION—REPORT OF THE CONFERENCE COMMITTEE TO THE COUNTY CONVENTION—THE TICKET PROPOSED FOR ADOPTION.

The conferences between the Anti-Tammany, Independent Citizens', and German-Americans' Independent subcommittees were resumed yesterday morning. The Anti-Tammany Conference Committee met at George H. Purser's office, No. 82 Nassau street, at 11 o'clock, and immediately took a recess until 2 o'clock in the afternoon. As soon as the recess was taken, the Anti-Tammany subcommittee went over to the Astor House to confer with the Independent Citizens' and German-Americans' subcommittees. Just prior to the meeting at the Astor House, some of the Anti-Tammyites said that there seemed to be little prospect of a combination being formed. In the corridors of the Astor House a number of politicians, including ex-Chief Justice John M. Barbour, ex-Justice Edward Hogan, ex-Police Commissioner Abraham Disbecker, ex-Justice Joseph Koch, and Myer Stern, were awaiting developments and discussing the situation. Before the meeting was called to order, Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, Hon. Ira Shafer, Mr. Oswald Ottendorfer, and Justice Marcus Otterbourg had a consultation without arriving at any definite result as to a course of action. On inquiry afterward, it appeared that the Germans favored an adjournment until to-morrow morning to await the action of the Republican County Convention this evening, while the Anti-Tammany leaders were inclined to have a ticket made forthwith, if it was possible to have it done. The Germans thought it would be bad policy to decide on a ticket until it was ascertained beyond a doubt what course the Republicans would take. One of the Anti-Tammany leaders said that he and many of the Anti-Tammany men were heartily sick of this conference business. It was "too much committees with too little results." One man had been the cause of all the trouble, through being persistently kept in the field as a candidate, and if he was now withdrawn, as it seemed likely that he would be, it would perhaps be too late to remedy the evil caused by his stubborn action. Another Anti-Tammany man said that the Anti-Tammanyites had apparently outwitted themselves, as in the opinion of many of them new it would have been better for the organization if it had adopted John Morrissey's minority report to the County Convention counseling the acceptance of Tammany's offer.

As the proceedings of the meeting were about to begin, Col. Rush C. Hawkins and Mr. Oswald Ottendorfer came out of the room to the corridor and engaged in a very animated discussion. Col. Hawkins expressed himself as disgusted with the continual delays which had prevented the presentation of a ticket which they could all sanction, and said he felt like giving no further aid in an effort to form a combination, and should certainly not consent to any further postponement. Mr. Ottendorfer admitted that too much time had apparently been consumed, but said that his committee had done all that could be done under disadvantageous circumstances, and did not feel like throwing away any opportunity that might now present itself, by taking hasty action at the eleventh hour. Col. Hawkins did not seem to feel convinced that it was of any use to remain, and said so as he went down stairs, but declined to say that he had permanently withdrawn. Mr. Henry Clausen, Jr., presided at the meeting, and most of the time was consumed in discussing the expediency of attempting to agree at once upon a ticket, or of adjourning over to Wednesday morning to await the result of the Republican County Convention, and the discussion lasted until about 1 o'clock, when a recess was taken until 3:30 o'clock without any determination being arrived at. Col. Hawkins, who had returned to the meeting, was in session, it took part in the debate, and, with most of the Anti-Tammany men, favored immediate action, while the German-Americans, and most of the independent citizens desired a postponement until Wednesday. The Anti-Tammany men wanted a ticket to report to their convention which had been called for last evening. As Col. Hawkins entered the room, on his return to the meeting, many said: "We want Green for Mayor, but we can't handicap him in the way that has been proposed."

At two o'clock, the Anti-Tammany Conference Committee met again at Mr. Purser's office, and, after an hour's session, during which the report of its sub committee was discussed, a recess was taken until 7 o'clock, at Irving Hall, and the sub Committee returned to the Astor House to confer with the other sub Committees, the understanding being that the County Convention should meet, in any event, at 8 o'clock, in Irving Hall, and probably make nominations.

The meeting at the Astor House at 3:30 o'clock was of very brief duration. At the instance of the Independent Citizens' and German-American subcommittees, an adjournment was taken until 11 o'clock to-morrow forenoon, the Chair being given power to call a meeting in the meantime if deemed necessary. After the adjournment, some of the Anti-Tammany Subcommittee said that they thought it more than doubtful whether their subcommittee would meet again with the other subcommittees. They thought it probable that their convention would nominate a straight Democratic ticket, taking Mr. Ely for Mayor, and nominating less objectionable candidates for some of the other county officers than those who had been presented by John Kelly. It was possible, though, that they might make only a provisional ticket, giving their Conference Committee power to modify it afterward, if necessary, or the convention might make no nominations, and give their Conference Committee full power—which is did not then possess—to act with the sub-committees of the citizens' and Germans', who had full power in placing a combined ticket in the field. The tendency, however, was strongly in favor of acting independently and making their own ticket, and thus matters stood when the Anti-Tammany Conference Committee reassembled at Irving Hall at 7 o'clock.

Some of the members of Anti-Tammany were disposed to make a jest of the unsuccessful efforts to form a combination ticket, and one of them had the following bogus ticket published in an evening paper yesterday, prefaced by an assertion that the Republicans were "willing to accept it as a fusion ticket, but that it had failed to meet the views of Anti-Tammany:"

Mayor—Jenkins Van Schaick.
Sheriff—Peter Bowe.
County Clerk—Jacob Hess.
Surrogate—Wheeler H. Peckham.
Superior Court—James C. Carter.
Marine Court—Joseph Koch.
Coroners—Feodore Mierson, William H. Stiner, and J. C. Hannon.
Aldermen at Large—O. P. C. Billings, James Cunningham, Joseph C. Pinckney, and J. G. Hyatt.

Mr. O'Brien said, before the Conference Committee met in the evening, that he "shouldn't wonder it nominations would be made" at the convention which was to follow the Conference Committee meeting, and expressed himself in favor of naming a full ticket, with power to be given to the Conference Committee to withdraw candidates and substitute others if deemed advisable. When asked whether any communication or understanding had been had with the Republicans, he gave a most decided negative answer, and said he would have nothing to do with them. When the Conference Committee assembled at 7 o'clock a large force of policemen were on duty in the hall, and remained during the evening, and no one was admitted to either the Conference Committee or the convention without a ticket. When ex-Supervisor Hayes, of the Third Assembly District, who is a warm friend of John Morrissey, was going to the Conference Committee meeting last evening, he freely denounced the conference proceedings which had transpired, as a farce, and said that he was tired of such nonsense, and thought that he would take no further part with the Conference Committee unless something tangible should be done at the coming meeting.

The Conference Committee held its session in an ante-room to prepare its report, while the delegates to the convention were assembling in the main hall. The hall was crowded by 8 o'clock, and at 8:15 the Conference Committee entered the hall. As soon as Mr. O'Brien made his appearance almost every delegate sprang to his feet and cheered for him until they were hoarse. Among those present in the hall were Hon. Emanuel B. Hart, ex-Supervisor James Hayes, Dennis McMahon, J. Henry Ford, Alderman Bryan Reilly, John D. Coughlin, William P. Mitchell, Michael J. Shandley, Justice John A. Dinkle, George H. Purser, ex-Aldermen John Moore and George W. Plunkitt, ex-Justice James Walker Fowler, Malcolm Campbell, Daniel C. Birdsall, and Timothy Shea. Mr. Shafer called the convention to order and presided, and Messrs. Coughlin and Mitchell acted as Secretaries. Mr. Shafer, who is the Chairman of the Conference Committee asked Mr. Hart to take the chair, and made a verbal report of the proceedings of the Conference Committee, which have already been published. Mr. Shafer said the Conference Committee had now concluded that it was better to nominate a ticket of their own, and empower the present Conference Committee or a new one to make such changes or substitutions of candidates as might be deemed best. The report was received with cheers and adopted.

Mr. O'Brien now arose, amid deafening applause, and said he had come there to propose a candidate for Mayor. He said he had done all in his power thus far to get a proper candidate, and failed. The Republicans had schemed to prevent the Anti-Tammany party from putting a straight Democratic ticket in the field until the latest possible day. If the Republicans had told him two weeks ago that they would not affiliate with them they could have nominated a straight Democratic ticket that would have beaten both Tammany Hall and the Republicans by a handsome majority. [Cheers.]

Mr. Shafer—Mr. O'Brien, you are out of order. You are speaking to no motion, and you have no right to proceed. [Sensation.]

Mr. O'Brien—I want to explain a motion I am about to make. [Yells of "That's right. Hurrah for O'Brien. Let him proceed."]

Mr. Shafer—The gentleman can only proceed by courtesy, and I will permit him to continue his remarks, but [raising his voice and speaking determinedly] I want you to understand one thing, I am not to be intimidated by any threats or demonstrations. [Applause.]

Mr. O'Brien—I stand here now to nominate a good Democrat for the office of Mayor of this City. [applause.] I nominate Smith Ely, Jr., [wild hurrahs]. I have no favors to ask of Mr. Ely or of Tammany Hall, and expect none to be granted, but I am determined to do all in my power now to show the people of this State and country that the Democracy of this City is not to be hoodwinked by its enemies in the present great national and State contest, and that it will present a united front to the foe. I move you, sir, that this nomination, which completes the ticket presented by the Conference Committee, be referred back to that committee with power to make such substitutions as may be found judicious.

Mr. Shafer put the motion, adroitly adding to it, "and that this convention adjourn sine die," which was carried by a large majority, most of the delegates not realizing the effect of the vote until Mr. Shafer abruptly left the platform, apparently very glad that he had brought to a speedy close proceedings that had given promise of being exceedingly turbulent.

Following is the ticket referred to the committee:

Mayor—Smith Ely, Jr.
Surrogate—Charles Crary.
Sheriff—Feodore Mierson.
County Clerk—Adolph L. Sanger.
Superior Court—Samuel B. Garvin.
Marine Court—Joseph Koch.
Coroners—Myer Stern, Bryan Reilly, and William H. Kennedy.
Aldermen at Large—J. Graham Hyatt, Gershom Cohen, Henry Hinck, and Frederick Hegeman.

It was understood by many that this ticket, except the nominations for Mayor, Surrogate, and one of the Coroners, was intended as a "blind," and that it is likely that Anti-Tammany will indorse the whole Tammany ticket, except the nominees for Surrogate, Sheriff, and one of the nominees for Coroner, Croker.

MURDERED BY MUSSULMANS.

AN ITALIAN SHOT DOWN, AND MR. LONGWORTH, AN ENGLISHMAN, BARELY ESCAPES WITH HIS LIFE.

A correspondent of the Edinburgh Scotsman writes: "I have just received, from an eye-witness the following account of the attempted assassination of Mr. Longworth and the death of his friend. Very brief particulars of this affair have yet been published, although it occurred as long ago as last May. It appears that four months ago a young Englishman named Longworth (who was traveling in the East for pleasure) was spending a few days at Broussa in the family of an English lady, his aunt, who had married an Italian gentleman. After he had been about a couple of days in the town—I mention this particularly to prove that what followed was not the result of any particular hatred borne toward him by the Mussulmans, for he was an entire stranger in the place—his cousin, a young man of about twenty, proposed that they should take a walk in the outskirts of the town to a little river which afforded excellent facilities for bathing. They did so. The stream is situated in a mountain defile, on one side of which the rocks run up to a considerable height. After bathing, and when partially dressed, their attention was attracted to these rocks by hearing the report of a rifle, and, looking up, they saw the smoke slowly curling away over the ridge. For the moment they paid but little attention to this occurrence, thinking the shot had been fired by a sportsman. A minute afterward, however, two other discharges took place almost simultaneously, and a couple of bullets passed close to the young men. It immediately struck them that they were being fired at by brigands, and they both ran in the direction of the high road from Broussa to Mount Olympus, at no great distance from the stream. They had not gone many yards before the Italian fell, shot through the chest by a bullet fired by the assassins, while another whistled over the head of the Englishman, who with that pluck so characteristic of his countrymen, at once stopped in spite of continued firing and turned round from the ground. He assisted him for several yards in the direction of a clump of trees, behind which he hoped to find shelter; but suddenly the cousin said, 'I can go no farther—save yourself,' and fell to the ground a corpse. Mr. Longworth then ran off to the high road shouting for assistance. He met a Turk, who was riding a mule, upon the high saddle of which he was seated, and, regarding everything around him with half-closed eyes, as is usual with his countrymen under similar circumstances. The Englishman tried to explain to him by gestures that something unusual had happened. What did he care about it, the Turk answered; whatever had taken place must have occurred by the will of Allah, and why should he interfere. So he went on to Broussa. Several other Turks made somewhat similar answers, refusing to accompany the young Englishman to the scene of the occurrence, knowing but too well that, if anything extraordinary had happened, they would have to submit hereafter to the loss of much time and money in being called as witnesses.

It so happened that a party of Englishmen and Americans a few days previously had arranged an excursion to Mount Olympus, and as they were returning to Broussa they encountered Mr. Longworth just after he had in vain applied to the Turks for assistance. About half an hour had elapsed since the Englishman left his companion. The whole party at once went to the river, where they found the body of the poor young Italian. During the interval the assassins had descended from the hill, and the head of the unfortunate man had been hacked completely from the trunk, the hands and feet were cut, and numerous deep gashes, as if inflicted with a knife or sabre, traversed the back, chest, and limbs. This was no act of brigands, for money and other valuables which were in his pockets had remained untouched; the only article missing was a small revolver which he was in the habit of carrying."

BARONESS ROTHSCHILD'S YACHT.

From the London Times.

Considerable interest has lately been excited at Geneva by the trial of a new steam yacht, built for the Baroness Adolphe de Rothschild. This vessel, although only 91 feet long by 13½ feet beam, just large enough to contain the accommodation for a day's comfortable cruising on the lake, has attained and kept up a speed greater than that of any ocean steamer afloat, and only equaled, perhaps, by some of the largest American river steamers. The Gitana is rigged as a fore and aft schooner, and is built of steel. The accommodation on board the Gitana consists of a large saloon, pantry, and dressing-room forward, and a galley cabin for the crew and store-room aft of the engines. The engines are compound direct-acting, fitted with an injection condenser, and with a view to reducing vibration as much as possible were made with three cylinders acting on cranks set 120° apart. The high-pressure cylinder is 13¼ inches in diameter by 16 inches stroke, and the two low-pressure cylinders are each 15 inches in diameter by 16 inches stroke. The boiler is of the locomotive type, of Bessemer steel, with a copper fire-box and brass tubes. The speed guaranteed was eighteen English statute miles per hour in a run of two hours' duration—i. e., thirty-six English statute miles in two hours, subject, in the event of failure, to the penalty being thrown on the builders' hands; and, as high speed was to be one of the principal attractions in the yacht, the Baroness Rothschild agreed to pay a premium on each mile above thirty-six run in the two hours. As there is no way by which the yacht could be taken to Geneva complete, the Rhine being too rocky and rapid, and the yacht being too large for conveyance entire by rail, it was necessary to build her at Chiswick, take her to pieces, and send her, packed in boxes, to Geneva by rail. She was then erected at La Bellote, on the shores of the lake, by workmen sent from England. The trial was made on the 21st of September, the Baroness Rothschild and Lady Emily Peel being on board, and having as scientific advisers Messrs. Paul Carrié and Emile Sicard, French engineers. The distance between Geneva and Villeneuve, forty-three English miles, was run in 1h. 48m. 22s., being at the rate of 23.89 English statute miles, or very nearly 20¾ knots per hour. During the first twenty miles a light headwind and some waves were encountered, which reduced the speed somewhat, but during the remainder of the run the lake was quite smooth, the boiler pressure averaged 100 pounds per square inch, vacuum twenty-four inches, and the engines made from 300 to 325 revolutions per minute, and developed about 450 indicated horse-power. At the conclusion of the trial the Baroness Rothschild expressed her entire satisfaction with the yacht and her performance.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

CHIPS FROM A GERMAN WORK-SHOP. By F. Max Muller, M. A. Vol. IV. New-York: Scribner, Armstrong & Co. Crown 8vo, 565 pages.

Prof. Max Müller is still at work on his translation of the Rig-veda, and still continues to publish volumes of "chips" from time to time. The first of these publications attracted much attention and well deserved its popularity; if it must be said of the present volume, the fourth of the series, that it is not so novel nor so instructive as the first, no one need imagine that to buy it would prove a bad investment. The difference lies chiefly in the quality of the speeches, lectures, and essays which go to make up the new book: they form a less solid and perhaps less carefully written whole than the preceding volumes. Their dates range over the last eight years, from the Inaugural Lecture delivered before the University of Oxford in 1868 and part first of the Rede Lecture before the University of Cambridge during the same year, down to the chapter called "In Self Defense," dated September, 1875. The lecture on the "Migration of Fables," that delivered before the new University of Strasbourg on the "Results of the Science of Language," an essay on "Colebrook the Orientalist," and a lecture on "Missions" make this volume of interest to more people than the three former ones, since it presents a wider range of subjects. The Inaugural Lecture at Oxford consists of two readily distinguished portions; in the first Max Müller speaks of the university itself and its position before the world as the repository and encourager of learning; in the second he gives a short sketch of the beginnings from which the modern science of philosophy has sprung. He does not waste time in compliments to the university which has conferred a chair upon him, but tells them plainly:

"There is no career in England at the present moment [1867] for scholars and students. No father could honestly advise his son, whatever talent he might display, to devote himself exclusively to classical, historical or physical studies. * * * The funds which are now tritered away in so-called prize fellowships, would enable the universities tomorrow to invite the best talent of England back to its legitimate home."

On this text Prof. Müller has a good deal of sound advice to give. He maintains that a fellowship won after a hard struggle for honors is oftener a drag on a man than an assistance. He demands why the grotesque condition of celibacy should be imposed on a fellowship, and, indeed, why fellowships should not be held on the principle of no work, no pay? But if fellowships are to exist, why, asks the Professor, should they not begin with little and increase gradually in amount—in other words, offer promotion for faithful and useful services.

The discovery of the first trace of kinship between Sanskrit and the Western European languages is credited to Filippo Sassetti, an Italian who lived for a time at Goa between 1581 and 1588. The Père Coeurdoux, a French Jesuit, next writes from Pondicherry to the French Academy in 1767, asking, "How is it that Sanskrit has so many words in common with Greek and Latin?" After tracing the actual awakening of Europe to the value of the treasures hidden away in the obscure depths of the manuscripts of Indian Pundits, our Professor sums up with the remark that without a knowledge of Sanskrit a comparative philologist is like an astronomer without a knowledge of mathematics. He may admire, observe, discover, but he will never feel satisfied, never feel certain, never quite at home. Having thus cleared the ground Müller takes up the word paradise and notices the deceptive analogies which have led good scholars to derive it from Sanskrit paradesa through Persian and Greek, or to call it a Semitic word found in Arabic and Hebrew and borrowed by Sanskrit. The same want of fine philological criticism is marked concerning the Greek word augé, light, which has been associated with the German for eye, viz.: Auge. Having disposed of several of these mooted words to show comparative philology at work, he next distinguishes between two kinds of grammatical knowledge. One is grammar as a mere art, such as it is taught at present in most schools. Music can be so taught, and yet the learner will have no notion of thorough bass, or the laws of harmony. The other is a knowledge not only of facts, but of reasons in grammar, a knowledge that teaches not only what grammar is, but how it came to be what it is. To supplement this with an example, Prof. Müller attacks the part of speech which has figured so long in grammars under the head of verb, the infinitive, namely, and proves that the infinitive has nothing to do with the verb, since it is simply an old dative which has been assimilated to the conjugation, because grammarians did not know what else to do with it. The notes to this lecture fortify the positions assumed in regard to the infinitive, as well as several other grammatical points, and deal with the subjects in a manner intended to apply to the learned fraternity.

The Rede lecture, which follows next in order, was also delivered as far back as 1868 before the University of Cambridge, but has an important addition written in 1875 on Curtius' Chronology of the Indo-Germanic Languages. After touching on the stand taken before language by Plato and Aristotle, Prof. Müller reaches modern times and says:

"Out of the great mass of speech that is now accessible to the student of language, a number of so-called families have been separated, such as the Aryan and Semitic, the Ural-Altaic, the Indo-Chinese, the Dravidian, the Malayo-Polynesian, the Kafir or Ba-ntu in Africa, and the Polysynthetic dialects of America. The only classes, however, which have been carefully examined, and which alone have hitherto supplied the materials for what we might call the philosophy of language, are the Aryan and Semitic, the former comprising the languages of India, Persia, Armenia, Greece, and Italy, and of the Celtic, Teutonic, and Slavonic races, the latter consisting of the languages of the Babylonians, the Syrians, the Jews, the Ethiopians, the Arabs."

Having thus placed before us a long array of the languages which have not been adequately studied, he first deprecates any idea of underrating the value of what has been achieved, and next remarks upon the small place which the two most studied languages, "these two so-called families, the Aryan and Semitic," occupy in the kingdom of speech:

"They are in reality but two centres, two small settlements of speech, and all we know of them is their period of decay, not their period of growth, their descending, not their ascending career, their being, as we say in German, not their becoming, (Ihr Gewordensein, nicht ihr Werden.) Even in the earliest literary documents both the Aryan and Semitic speech appear before us as fixed and petrified."

This is certainly an extraordinary position for a man of Prof. Müller's breadth of view to assume. For the promise which underlies these statements—statements as of facts—is that he can say whether a language is ascending or descending, in a period of growth or one of decay, fixed or fluid! Because a literature has a retarding influence on a language by furnishing so many examples of speech which students may turn back to, it does not follow that the language is petrified. Language is always moving slowly, but whether it is up or down not even Prof. Müller, with all his study of Sanskrit in the country best supplied with Sanskrit manuscripts, and at a university entirely in harmony with his life-work, can be expected to say. We must consider it a slip of his pen when we find him talking of rigid rules like this, for in many other places he shows that it is not his habit of mind to lay down the law dogmatically. It is more than likely that a natural wish to write picturesquely has led him into an unphilosophical position. We may call this also picturesque writing when he says:

"In the area of the student of language, Sanskrit, Greek, and Latin, Hebrew, Arabic, and Syriac, are what a student of natural history would not hesitate to call 'monstra,' unnatural, exceptional formations, which can never disclose to us the real character of language left to itself to follow out its own laws without let or hindrance."

It seems to us that such similes only confuse the reader, even if the author of them have a perfectly clear idea of what he himself means. If Prof. Müller had likened these languages, or rather their literatures, to dried specimens in a cabinet of natural history, the chances of misconception would be much less. There is no difference in kind between Sanskrit and English as far as fixity or petrifaction of the language is concerned. The Sanskrit of the Vedas, of which Prof. Müller is so illustrious and profound a master, is different from the Sanskrit of the Mahabharata. The English of Chaucer is different from that of Milton. Yet English is not and has never been petrified or fixed. Specimens of it, however, remain as it appeared at certain epochs, just as is the case with every other language. A parallel case might be instituted from geology. We talk about certain fixed epochs for convenience sake, and are thereby very apt to forget that we are living in a changing geological epoch ourselves. Strata are being deposited now as well as formerly, and continents are slowly rising or subsiding. So although our written languages seem to us fixed, they are not so. The things written in them are fixed, but the languages go on changing with only a diminished rapidity when compared with the changes of tongues not committed to writing.

The succeeding lecture is on the "Migration of Fables," delivered at the Royal Institution and printed in the Contemporary Review for July, 1870. The subject is necessarily an intensely interesting one, and may have therefore roused expectations too high. It is somewhat disappointing, from the fact that less seems to have been made of so rich a theme than one might look for. The Strassburg lecture on the other hand, although dealing with drier materials, is more happily framed. We will quote a few lines on a point of the highest interest to Western nations:

"We have all accustomed ourselves to look for the cradle of the Aryan languages in Asia, and to imagine these dialects flowing like streams from the centre of Asia to the South, the West, and the North. I must confess that Prof. Burfey's protest against this theory seems to me very opportune, and his arguments in favor of a more northern, if not European, speech, deserve, at all events, far more attention than they have hitherto received."

In the lecture on "Missions," delivered in Westminster Abbey, in December, 1873, to the great scandal of many English Churchmen, Max Müller divides the eight religions of the world into missionary and non-missionary religions. The latter are three in number: Judaism, Brahmanism, and Zoroastrinism. Of missionary religions, three differ from the other two of the five, namely from the Chinese religious systems of Confucius and Lao-tse, by having had a missionary character from their very beginning. These are Buddhism, Mohammedanism, and Christianity. These are the three religions now alive, the religions between which the decisive battle for the dominion of the world will have to be fought. When India was conquered by the Moslem and affairs became settled on the new basis, Brahmanism and Mohammedamism existed side by side and by such neighborhood became respectively purified and improved. The presence of Christianity in the persons of missionaries has done still more to bring sanity and sweetness into Hindoo religion. The reformers Kabir and Nânak labored to prove to the Hindoos and Mohammedans that the truly essential parts of their creed were the same; that they ought to discard the vanities of practical detail for the worship of the One Only Supreme, whether he was termed Allah or Vishnu. Christianity found a responsive Hindoo mind in Ram Mohun Roy, who founded the modern and purified Hindo sect called the Brahma-Samâj. Still later and more at variance with the old traditions is the new form of faith advocated by Keshub Chemder Sen, a Hindoo, who lectured in England some years ago on religion, and, like Prof. Müller, himself, found Dean Stanley a stanch friend and helper. He forms an example of the strong influence Christian missionaries have exerted in India. Prof. Müller dwells eloquently upon the noble record of various missionaries and seems to find in the very nobility of the record a sufficient reward for all the expense and loss to Western society which arises from foreign missions. Perhaps it would be asking too much that, in Westminster Abbey, he should say anything on the adverse side; yet, it one looks over the field of India, the results appear very much out of proportion to the outlays. It is strange that it does not occur to Prof. Müller that, after all, the Hindoos have not been converted; they have, with characteristic subtlety of wit, taken from Christianity only just so much as it suited them, so that, however much the cause of truth may have been advanced, on a grand scale, by Indian missions, the object sought has not been attained.

Be that as it may, this lecture of the Sanskrit Professor raised many rejoinders from partisans of the religions he had classed as non-missionary. Therefore, in a paper on the vitality of Brahmanism in the Fortnightly Review of July, 1874, Max Müller gives some curious reports of a spasmodic attempt on the part of several religious leaders to claim and show that their faiths are not stationary or non-proselytizing. The essay exhibits the Professor defending himself well from the attacks of Jews and Christians. The "Address at the International Congress of Orientalists" is also good reading, and by no means the most abstruse chapter of the book. Page 350 will interest all who like to hear what Prof. Müller has really been doing all these years over the translation of a single book:

"And now, in conclusion, I have to express my own gratitude for the liberality, both of the Directors of the Old East India Company and of the present Secretary of State for India in Council, for having enabled me to publish that work, the last sheet of which I am able to present to this meeting to-day, the Rig-veda, with the Commentary of Sâyanâchârya. It is the oldest book of the Aryan world, but it is also one of the largest, and its publication would have been simply impossible without the enlightened liberality of the Indian Government. For twenty-five years I find that, taking the large and small editions of the Rig-veda together, I have printed every year what would make a volume of about six hundred pages octavo. * * * From an æsthetic point of view, no one would care for the hymns of the Rig-veda, and I can well understand how Colebrooke," &c.

Perhaps the most agreeable essay we find in this volume of "Chips" is that on the "Life of Colebrooke," the Anglo-Indian Magistrate, political economist, and—that for which he has got most fame—Sanskrit scholar. Its excellence is all the more noticeable because it comes directly before two papers called "My Reply to Mr. Darwin" and "In Self Defense," which are hardly worthy to find place with other work of a distinguished scholar. They are aimed at Prof. Whitney, of Yale College, whose criticisms on Prof. Müller the latter attributes to malevolence. Insinuations are freely made that Prof. Whitney is in league with certain enemies of Max Müller in Germany, and there are many very disagreeable passages in which he is taunted with lack of philological knowledge and presumption in attacking the Oxford Professor, when his (Whitney's) contributions to science are so slight. Altogether it is a most unedifying pair of chapters to close a volume of the "Chips," the pages in which Max Müller translates the scurrilous ravings of Prof. Steinthal against Prof. Whitney are quite unjustifiable, whatever provocation there may have been. As to the general merits of the question the state of affairs appears to be this: Prof. Müller has something of the romantic and picturesque in his temperament, and occasionally is inaccurate in his use of words. He has been called to order by Mr. Whitney, has got the worst of the argument, and falls into a fury he will one day regret. He came unexpectedly into contact with a hard-headed Yankee Professor,

From Our Own Correspondent.

CAMP AT YANK'S, EASTERN CALIFORNIA, Tuesday, Oct. 17, 1876.

Since I last wrote the weather with us has been, with the exception of a few days, what Starr King would call a "sweet fraction of Italy," and however threadbare a topic the weather may be in ordinary conversation, with us it is of much concern. Clear, warm, azure days and tranquil, brilliant nights, with a touch of frost to whiten the fields, have made topography a success and life itself delicious. Lake Tahoe, near which we have been camped during most of the time, has been unruffled, and the mountains surrounding it have revealed a new beauty in the rosy haze that has hung over them. The fields are as light a green as they were in the Spring, the pines are perennial, and the aspens have mellowed into a vivid, golden, showery leaf. The air is full of exuberant vitality, which makes itself felt in a quickened, elastic step and a healthy impulse of the mind. How great a pity it is that this beautiful region—more beautiful than anything in Switzerland, according to those who have been through and through the Alps—was not set apart for a national sanatorium! The regret forces itself upon us, and increases as we discover fresh attractions from day to day. Two weeks ago Lieut. Macomb and the writer made an excursion around the lake, a distance of about sixty miles. The water that near the shore is a transparent emerald, flecked with the white of rounded granite boulders embedded in yellow sand, changes in the deeper places to a blue. Not of such an indigo cast as the Atlantic, but a quite unusual shade resembling the turquoise, and its motion is as heavy as oil, the low waves falling from the prow of the steamer like folds of silk, and subsiding in the wake without a ripple. There is a gloomy theory that the human body sinking in this serene depth is engulfed forever, and it is a fact that the bodies of the drowned have never yet been recovered. Marvelously clear as the water actually is, moreover, the boats floating upon it seeming to be suspended in the air as we look down at them from the landings, and nothing but a thin sheet of pure glass seeming to intervene between the eye and the bottom—it has in the deeper places the apparent opacity of a solid, an illusion which is only displaced by the vividescence of a stray trout sporting at a depth of thirty feet or more.

"I see a way," said a practical and cynical friend of mine, as we left the landing at Warm Springs, "to reclaim this paradise from the lumbermen and make it a popular resort for Californians." "How?" I inquired. "By humbug and a little capital combined," he answered; "by the same process that attracts fashionable people to a New-Jersey sand-hill. The whole trouble is that the place is not foreign, and to insure success we must call it the Ems or Homburg or Luzerne of America. Then capture all the feminine correspondents who write gush from Long Branch and Newport, and induce them to iterate and reiterate the fact that the Warm Springs remind them ever so much of Switzerland and Southern France; bribe a fashionable metropolitan physician—there are plenty of Brand Firmins in our Eastern cities—to discover marvelous healing qualities in the waters; and, finally, waylay some distinguished guests—a royal visitor, a cabinet officer, or, if possible, the President. The scheme, as far as humbug is concerned, is complete, and the investment may be distributed in a good hotel with a wilderness of piazza, a fountain like a pagoda, and some rational bathing-houses that would set Long Branch an example." "Your success," I answered, "presupposes the venality of physicians and correspondents, and a silly craze of Americans for the conventional and fashionable things that would be doubted except by an unabashed cynic." My friend smiled impressively. "Yet you would like to be considered a man of the world!" he retorted, and there was an amazing degree of deprecation in his manner.

From Warm Springs we went to Tahoe City; from Tahoe City to McKinney's, and from McKinney's to Tallac. Do not picture to yourself a busy, populous, commercial settlement at the mention of Tahoe City. That is an elastic appellation lightly earned on the Pacific coast, and bestowed with a generous fancifulness. Some days ago our topographer and meteorologist found an isolated ranch among the mountains, miles away from any settlement. A solitary man stood in the doorway, smoking a dirty and meditative pipe, and when the surveyors asked him the name of the place, he glanced admiringly over his domain of pig-sty, barn, and fence, and answered, "Washington City," expectorating over a mule's tail by the way of emphasis. No; Tahoe is not really a city even in the very restricted sense that the far-distant, odoriferous, and wholly unprepossessing settlement at Hunter's Point is; but it is a pretty little harbor on the western shore of the lake, and has a large constituency of Summer boarders. The prettiest spot of all on the lake, however, is in the south-western corner, where Tallac Mountain is sharply lifted out of an exuberant green plain—a level reach that is alternately smooth with meadow and dense with groves of pine and aspen. On first acquaintance the Sierras are almost sure to disappoint the traveler whose previous knowledge of them has been based on the interpretations of art and poetry. The brilliant color that the painter has lavished upon them is absent, and proves to have been an evanescent effect of the atmosphere; the dreamy mystery with which the poet has invested them has been evolved out of his own inner consciousness. Brazen, yellow, massive, unsentimental sides of rock—that is all the mountains are on close inspection in the broad daylight to the average tourist, and they stand but little higher in the appreciation of the professional mountaineer. I have come, through association with Lieut. Wheeler's topographers, and experience with them, to look upon these convulsive throes of basalt and granite in a very practical light—as, in fact, troublesome tests of a man's leg and lung power, painfully angular in conformation and singularly inclement meteorologically. I say this much by the way of preface to acquit myself of undue enthusiasm in writing of Tallac Mountain as the most beautiful peak I have ever seen, either in Nevada, Utah, Colorado, New-Mexico, or Arizona. It is the embodiment of an ideal. From the more distant points of the lake it is individualized among a multitude of other pinnacles by a broad cross of perpetual snow, that clings in transverse fissures across its eastern front, and by its unusually vivid outlines. As we approach it along the southern curve of the lake, it grows in lucidity, and the dissolving haze of distance reveals a score or more of bright determinate colors which light up and variegate the sage-green tinge of the constituent basalt. This basalt expresses itself in columns and slabs, and in what appears in the distance to be a frothy crust. It is remarkably rugged, and overhangs the slopes with dark crags and ribs them with serrated walls. A flashing patch of snow adjoins a tender shade of mauve, and a straggling growth of shrubbery opposes the warmth of its Autumn crimson to the bright verdancy of a grass-plot. Such juxtapositions would be dangerous in a picture; but nature is a mistress of contrasts, and the crimson meets the green by a series of the most exquisite gradations. The foot of the mountain is in Lake Valley, the charming level of meadow and wood that I have spoken of before, and the valley is edged on the water side by a hard, narrow beach of red pebbly sand, upon which the waves break in windy weather with a portentous, ocean-like roar. But in the intervening space, encompassed by foliage, is another basin of water, poetically called Fallen Leaf Lake, which, in its purity and in the picturesqueness of its surroundings, rivals Tahoe. Fallen Leaf is about one hundred and twenty-five feet higher than the latter; its greatest length is about four miles, and its greatest width about one mile. A carriage road leads to it from Tallac Landing, and winds from its eastern side to the inlet at the southern end, and in following this road we discover how the mountain inclines precipitously from the summit to the lip of the water. Passing Gilmore's Ranch, a lonely cabin, which, it the proprietor's day dreams are realized, will soon blossom into a populous hotel, we turn to the westward through a romantic cañon, the portals of which are darkened by the Southern escarpments of Tallac Mountain. The roadway is strewn with sharp, angular pieces of granite, and bordered by an irregular growth of vines and firs. On one side is the high peak with its buttes and cliffs and masses of curiously stained basalt, and on the further side is another peak of very different formation and very different color. Among the detached columns, and between long smooth walls of rock, a wild stream courses over a rough bed, and twice within the space of a mile it breaks in a white avalanche over falls of a considerable height. Two miles from Gillmore's we reach Soda Springs, from which flows a clear, sparkling water, principally composed of carbonic acid gas, sulphurretted hydrogen, and sesquioxide of iron.

The geological structure of the mountain is more exactly reviewed as follows, by Mr. Alfred R. Conkling, who spent three days on the summit with Lieut. Macomb and Mr. Frank Carpenter, the topographer: Tallac is a mass of basalt, upheaved through granite, and shows nearly every variety of texture known to the basaltic group. There are both granular and compact species, and some specimens are porphyritic, with compact matrix. Crystals of monoclinic feldspar are disseminated through the basalt, giving it the appearance of trachyte, and incrustations of olivine occur in places. Nearly all the north side is composed of compact basalt, which has been much disintegrated, and these detached masses are seen in front of the main peak. The jointed structure of the basalt has been favorable to denudation on account of the many fissures, in which the water and melted snow freeze, thus expanding the cracks until the rock splits and falls. The difference in hardness in the basalt is well shown on the northern side. Isolated peaks and pinnacles project boldly from the mountain, while the rock that formerly connected them with it has been worn away by the influence of the elements. A vast amount of talus lies in front of Tallac, and seeds of the white thorn and manzanita berry-bush have been scattered over this débris and have taken root in the rocky soil—features which make the plateau north of the peak impossible for pack animals. The southern declivity of the mountain slants gradually to Gillmore's Lake, and is covered with a nutritious grass, except for a distance of about three hundred feet below the summit. Glacial scratches were observed on the eastern side of the mountain, vast surfaces of rock having been polished and grooved by these moving masses of ice, and terminal moraines were found which are as well marked as any in Switzerland. The southeast slope of the mountain is exceedingly steep. The basalt has been subjected to an immeuse amount of denudation, and nearly all of this side of the mountain is covered with rocky débris, while a solitary tree here and there breaks the monotony of the scene. Gillmore's Cañon separates the basalt from the grayish granite of the Western Sierra Nevada, the former rock extending about two miles in a southerly direction from Fallen Leaf Lake. Then the granite occurs, surrounding the mountain on all sides, except the north-east, where Tahoe forms the boundary line. Several lake basins encompass Tallac, and, according to some geologists, these have been scooped out by the action of glacial ice. Another feature worth mentioning, in connection with the geology of this region, is the absence of sedimentary rock. No fossils are found by which we can determine the position of the archæan and igneous rocks in the geological series of formations. According to Mr. Conkling's aneroid, the peak is 2,525 feet above Lake Tahoe, which itself is about six thousand feet above the level of the Pacific.

Though Tallac is beautiful on the most brazen and overcast days, there are conditions of the atmosphere, transient in themselves, but permanent in their effects on the imagination, which add to its charm. I can never forget it as it appeared to me one stormy afternoon while our camp lay almost under its shadow. A mist lowered and dragged with it a curtain of the leaden gray that had gathered in every direction overhead, and while it was yet diffuse, the filagree of snow on the dark rock looked like the figures in a lace. But, as its folds were drawn closer, every vestige of the massive basaltic peak seemed to dissolve in the pale monotone, and the granite boundary of the lake also disappeared, until all I could see looking out from the grove of tall pines was an apparently limitless sea, dimpled by rain, that murmured a low andante on the pebbly beach. I returned to my tent, and when I again looked out the weather was clearing, and the sun streamed in broad coppery shafts through the clefts in the Western mountains. A heavy snow had fallen on Tallac, and in contrast with this brilliant whiteness, some roseate puffs of cloud floated dreamily around it. It was an unusual combination of colors. The mountains in the North were chill and dark, their outlines metamorphosed by a ragged strata of vapor, and those on the Eastern side of the lake were purple, and the purple was changing to a ruddier hue as the sun sank further down in the West. A rift in the clouds opened a sea of deep blue, environed by a shore of desolate gray, and floods of a strange yellow light, with a tinge of red in it, struck through the Western cañons and threw a metallic reflection on the water.

While we were at Rowland's, the Topographical Corps under Mr. Carpenter made a detour of a week's duration and occupied Freel's Peak as a primary triangulation station. The secondary station was on Monument Peak, and the range of which this and Freel's are the culminating points, was skirted and surveyed. In altitude the latter is superior to all other mountains in this season's area, and is about 5,000 feet above the water of Lake Tahoe, which lies at the foot of its slope. The observations on its summit were prolonged throughout two days, and were accomplished only with great difficulty, the wind being so violent that from time to time it forced the observers from the crest and threatened the safety of all instruments not securely guyed. On the afternoons of these days peak after peak of the horizon became hidden by floating storms, which gradually thickened upon the mountain, bringing with them premature darkness and that exceeding discomfort which, says Mr. Carpenter with the eloquence born of suffering, seems peculiar to the cold Autumn storms of the Sierras. On the morning following the descent of our party the peak was visited by Capt. Rodgers, of the Coast Survey, who is engaged in carrying a belt of large triangles across the continent to connect those which extend along the shores of the Atlantic and Pacific. We met his party in Hope Valley, beyond the peak, and exchanged friendly greetings with them as befitted the representatives of the two great surveys. That we entertain no feelings of rivalry I can aver, and yet, when in the afternoon we saw a storm cloud swoop down upon the pinnacle upon which the gentlemen of the Coast Survey were standing, we were not as sorry as the circumstances and true courtesy would have seemed to command. Hope Valley is a broad meadow of easy slope in the very heart of the Sierra Nevada chain. What the origin of its name was we do not positively know, but presumably it arose from the following episode: It was here that Fremont, accompanied by Carson, suffered extreme privation, and lost his men in an attempt to cross the mountains. Kit Carson was the first to build a road through the cañon called after him, which is the drainage exit of the valley, and when his laborers emerged from the narrow pass through which they had worked their way, it is possible that the sight of the easy route beyond renewed their hope and gave rise to the name.

I have not yet said anything about sport in the neighborhood of Lake Tahoe, of which we heard enthusiastic accounts. A legend is extant that prodigious trout, weighing all the way from twenty to thirty pounds, are caught, and we met a man who had the temerity to declare that he himself had hooked one weighing twenty-eight pounds, a trolling line being used, baited with minnow. But the finest specimens that we have seen vary from three to five pounds, never exceeding the latter weight, and the mind of that zealous angler our zoologist is suffering from a temporary cloud of skepticism. The fish cannot be very abundant, as several, judging from the price paid for them by marketing fishermen, eighteen or twenty cents a pound being the usual rate. Deer and bears may be found in the mountains, and ducks, of which we have had teal, mallard, and canvas-back on our mess-table recently, are plentiful in certain seasons. Grouse and quail are also plentiful, and a few days ago Mr. Henshaw brought five brace of the former into camp as the result of two hours' shooting.

From Rowland's Lieut. Macomb moved his party to the base of Pyramid Peak, a distance of about thirty-four miles. We traveled most of the way over the old Placerville route to the famous California gold mines of '49, and passed tavern after tavern, which the exhaustion of the lode, combined with the construction of the Pacific Railroad, has crippled. Twenty years ago the overland stage, with its precious freight of passengers, bullion, and letters, rattled over the precipitous ledges, round the short curves, and down the impassable hills at the greatest speed and with the greatest éclat ever known in the coaching world. The wealth outcoming and incoming was enormous, and much of it was dropped at the halting-places on the road. As many as a hundred wagons, each drawn by from four to twenty-eight animals, went by in a day, and the receipts at one toll-house in a single summer were as high as $22,000. It was along here that a celebrated coachman drove Horace Greeley on a certain memorable occasion. "I am afraid we won't be in on time," Mr. Greeley repeatedly said to the driver, until the latter increased his speed to such a frightful degree that the journalist, it is said, subsided in a corner of the coach and murmured pathetically: "You need not be in such a very great hurry, Mr. Monk. We shall have ample time." It is highly enjoyable to listen while an old "forty-niner" recounts the former glory of the road and laments the altered spirit of the times. Here, too, are the scenes of many of Bret Harte's stories. The sign-board points to Fiddletown, and a reader of Gabriel Conroy cannot fail to recognize the Markleville of the novel in the Markleville of reality. Woeful and complete is the change! Nine-tenths of all the old stations are deserted and dilapidated; the windows are out altogether, or the panes are broken and cracked; the doors swing on one hinge or lie flat in the hall, and the capacious barns and stables have an exclusive tenancy of chipmunks and rats. The water-tanks, by which the road was sprinkled twice a day, and kept as firm as the asphalt in Central Park, are out of order and out of use, and the dust rises in suffocating clouds. Just beyond the Strawberry Station is an old depot of the Stage Company, consisting of a blacksmith's shop and a stable—a sorry litter of old timber, old harness and old iron, among which are several coaches, once a bright scarlet in color, but now cracked and stripped of cushions, curtains, and wheels. The traffic nowadays is limited to a few fruit wagons, bound for Carson, with loads of phenomenal grapes, apples, and pears, which indicate the prolific soil and new era of agriculture and horticulture in California—an era not as brilliant or as magical as that of the gold mines, but one destined, no doubt, to have a healthier and more enduring prosperity than was ever possible under the abnormal conditions of feverish '49.

PROMINENT SERVIAN ANOMALIES.

PRINCE MILAN OF PEACEABLE DISPOSITION—A MILITARY DICTATOR FROM RUSSIA—A BOASTING PEOPLE.

From the London Telegraph.

The spectacle presented by Servia to Europe at the present moment is unquestionably a very curious one. The nominal head of this much perplexed and suffering province is a young gentleman of eminently peaceable disposition, Western education and habits, amiably domestic proclivities, and almost feminine pliability of character, who has no sympathy with, but considerable apprehension of, his subjects. The Prince has every imaginable qualification for a constitutional fair-weather sovereign—agreeable manners, partiality to ceremonials, and a happy inborn indolence which is a natural guarantee against inconvenient ambitions or undue mediosomeness with the business of the State. He is the sort of potentate who is always sure to place implicit confidence in his Ministers for the time being, on the condition of being left in peace to pass his time in his own way. It is singularly illustrative of His Highness' gentlemanly languor that he does not even give himself the smallest trouble to bid for local popularity in his own capital at a moment which may fairly be deemed peculiarly opportune for his doing so. That he abstains from joining his army in the field may be read ily accounted for by more than one cogent reason: he has no experience whatever of military matters, is not gifted with the heroic turn of mind, and prudently desires to avoid certain complications of a political rather than technical nature which would inevitably accrue were he to put himself physically in the power of Tchernayeff and the Russian legions. Prince Milan must be assigned, in virtue of his rank, the first place in the list of Servian anomalies: à tout seigneur tout honneur! The second in the catalogue belongs to the Ministry, which has lost its martial intoxication of three months since, and is now stoically enduring the Katzenjammer, or agony of seediness which, in nature not artificially heated by alcoholic excesses, invariably follows over-indulgence in stimulants. This Ministry administers, but does not govern, the country. The reins of power have been wrested from it by a stern, unflinching hand. It is a penitent body, ready to confess its sins, and yearning for absolution; but it is not permitted to repent. It longs for peace, and is compelled by force majeure to lend its every endeavor to the prosecution of a war that stinks in its very nostrils.

Third in the list of distinguished anomalies is the military Dictator, Michael Gregorievich—he who is in actuality what Prince Milan is in name—the Sovereign of Servia. A Russian officer, at the head of a forcibly Russianized army, he does as he pleases with the Prince, the people, and the country. The Servian Government concludes a truce—he breaks it. The Servian Government wishes to conclude an armistice—he will not hear of it. The Prince wishes to keep as quiet as possible, and does not even join his army lest he should hamper his Ministers in their peace negotiations. Michael Gregorievich proclaims him Generalissimo, and compromises him horribly with all the respectable European powers. The remarkable man does not hesitate, while insisting upon the assumption of the royal title by Prince Milan, to usurp all the privileges which are attached in every monarchically-governed country to the person of the Sovereign. He makes a King, but he himself exercises the kingly prerogative. He dismisses Servian officers, puts Russians in their places, promotes, decorates, degrades, and decorates; there is no Allah but he, and nobody is his prophet. Gen. Tchernayeff is an extremely clever and versatile person. It would be difficult to prove what are his political convictions, or even to conjecture what is the settled purpose of his mind with respect to the enterprise which he is carrying out in so extraordinary a manner. I am acquainted with several people who know or have known him intimately. One says that he is a social democrat of the most advanced class—the sort of politician a mere passing allusion to whom moves Prince Bismarck to break a chair or hurl a beer-mug out of the window. Another describes him as an Imperialistic Panslavist—a believer in the subjugation of the world by the Slavic race under the House of Romanoff—one upon whose heart will be found written, should a post-mortem be ever held upon his body, the title of Glinka's famous opera, "La vie pour le Czar!" His conferment of the regal title upon Prince Milan lends some color to the assertion of another of his acquaintances, namely, that he is a man of strong monarchical predilections. Another account depicts him as a frank warrior, a soldier avant tout, with a genius for strategy and an insatiable lust for battle, whose favorite perfume is the reek of powder, and whose ear finds sweeter music in the screech of the shell and whirr of the bullet than in the most dulcet strains of Patti or of Nilsson. He is at once Proteus and Sphinxian—an apostle though mysterious living force, with which all these who are now engaged in endeavoring to elicit something like reason and order from this East-European imbroglio will find they have to reckon.

The fourth of these Servian anomalies that cannot fail to strike any intelligent foreigner just now resident in this country, is the Servian people itself. A more inherently thorough-going peaceful race does not exist upon the face of the earth. The Servian is, in reality, the absolute converse of a hero. In the first place, he is an incorrigible boaster of his valor. Of the qualities he indubitably possesses, he does not vaunt, but values himself extravagantly upon those he is not endowed with, and boasts among other people doing just likewise. He is easy-going to the verge of apathy, extremely ignorant, and quite indifferent to anything and everything not directly affecting his personal interests. Yet here he is, plunged up to his ears in a war which he is solemnly declared (by his Pastors and masters) to have undertaken for the emancipation of his Bulgarian and Bosnian "brothers," for whom he does not care the fraction of a maize-stalk. A well-to-do-man—for the Servian peasant is a Prince as compared to persons of his class in England or Germany—he finds himself, he knows not why, called upon to sacrifice his substance, to risk life and limb, and to undergo hardships of the most outrageous descriptions; yet so simple-like is his disposition, and so undisturbed his intelligence, that he leaves his comfortable cottage and well-plenished homestead, marches against the Turk, against whom he entertains no genuine enmity, (as why should he?) loses his crops, gets wounded or stricken down by fever, or has, at least, to suffer from fatigue and hunger. Why does he do these things? It would puzzle him to explain, but he does them, and thereby constitutes himself an anomaly of the first class. He does not love his Prince—he certainly does not love the Russians—he is extremely afraid of being shot—he is entirely devoid of political or material ambition—he goes so far in his abomination of those perils which environ the man who meddles with cold iron as to cut off his left forefinger or the thumb, both, in order to obtain exemption from service in the field. As long as his own officers commanded him exclusively, he executed a prompt and punctual movement to the rear whenever he came within a sight of a tarboosh or within hearing of a Turkish war-shout. Now that he is hectored by Russian officers, he retires no longer, because he has just sense enough to understand that a revolver fired into his ear is infinitely more perilous to his safety than an Osmanli field-piece discharged at a distance of a mile or so. But he is assuredly, poor fellow, much to be pitied in any case, as the victim of circumstances over which he has no control; and with him my résumé of Servian anomalies may fitly be closed, though not last, he is conspicuously not the least of them.

THE VALUE OF A PROMISSORY NOTE.

Decision was rendered yesterday by the Supreme Court, General Term, in the case of Henry B. Todd against Sidney F. Shelbourne, Judge Daniels writing the opinion. A note was made by the defendant for $10,000, payable in three years, not as a payment, according to the finding of the Referee, but in contemplation of a settlement which was never effected. The court finds that James Cummings, the payee, would never have enforced the note. The plaintiff bought it for $1,500 before it was due, and Judge Daniels discusses at considerable length the question whether the Referee's decision that the full amount of the note is due to the plaintiff under these circumstances is valid or not. He decides that, as the note was invalid in its inception, all the holder can recover is the amount he himself paid, on the principle that where one of two innocent parties has given occasion for a loss he must make it good to the other.

THE WORLD'S POPULATION.

THE ENORMOUS INCREASE IN ENGLAND—AN ASTOUNDING RESULT POINTED OUT.

From the Manchester Examiner.

Mr. Hawksley, C. E., has been stirring the thoughts and inflaming the fears of a good many members of the Social Science Congress. He has put forward a view which if not altogether novel—for Malthus anticipated many of his statements—is, nevertheless, well calculated to startle steady-going people to whom a danger is none the less real because it is inconceivably remote. He has been dealing with the enormous increase of the population of England, and his idea is that this increase is a matter of great and immediate concern. In the year 1801 the population of this country was only 8,892,356, while in 1871 it had become 22,712,266; thus exhibiting a mean annual increase of nearly 1.35 per cent. In the seventy years between these dates he computes that the loss by war and emigration only amounted to 15 persons in every 10,000 of the population. Assuming that this amount of spontaneous loss will remain unaltered over a prolonged course of years, he proceeds to calculate what the growth of population will amount to in the future; and he gives us a result which, taken in its simple nakedness, is astounding. At the end of the first generation, the population of England will become 42,000,000; at the end of the second generation, 74,000,000; at the end of the third generation, 130,000,000; at the end of the fourth generation, 230,000,000; at the end of the fifth generation, 400,000,000; at the end of the seventh generation, more than the world now contains; and at the end of the twentieth generation more than fifteen such worlds would contain, each as densely populated as our globe is at present. From this calculation Mr. Hawksley drew, or rather suggested, a number of inferences with reference to the food supply of the "countless millions yet unborn," and other matters affecting their welfare, and thus led the way to a conclusion that might be expected, if it were accepted, to cause a good deal of alarm and disquiet, not only among English people but, in the world at large. For if the English people increase and multiply at this rapid rate, it must be assumed that other nations in which there is a steady increase of population will proceed in the same ratio. America, for instance, and Germany. To take no other examples, must, like ourselves, go on doubling their population at periods varying

The last week of the campaign opens with bright prospects in every direction, and especially in this State. The Republicans are thoroughly aroused, as our news columns this morning show, and are working from the St. Lawrence to the Bay with hearty energy and with unwavering confidence. They are convinced, now, that their efforts will not be wasted, and that the City of New-York will not be allowed to override by fraud the honest majorities given in the interior of the State. That great cheating was undertaken here, there is no doubt; but it has become so dangerous that it will not be followed up. All we now ask of our friends in the other parts of the State is to get out their full, honest vote. We believe that, when that is done, New-York City will be ready to compare results, and need not be ashamed of its part in the contest. The Republicans of New-York City have an overwhelming majority to contend against, but they will do their whole duty, and they will see that the frauds which TILDEN'S circular so materially helped in 1868 are not repeated. Let the Republicans of the interior do as well as New-York City, and Mr. TILDEN will be buried out of sight.

One of the devices resorted to by the Tildenites to arouse the flagging spirits of their friends has been to boast of what a huge majority might be expected from Kings County. They have relied on Brooklyn and New-York to overcome the defections in the remainder of the State. But there is no part of this programme more deceptive. The Democrats in Kings County are hopelessly divided. The close and offensive alliance between TILDEN and the McLaughlin Ring in Brooklyn has disgusted a large number of the decent men in the party. The Ring has tried to "run" the conventions in that county, with more than usual insolence, and has baulked every effort of the reform element in the party to get a respectable representation on the local ticket. The Republicans have conducted the county canvass with great good sense and fairness, and have given the Reform Democrats the representation which the Ring denied them. This will gain more or less strength for the national and State tickets. Moreover, the voters of Brooklyn are largely business men, and they are wide awake to the danger of financial disorder from the election of TILDEN. All hopes of the sham reform party, based on a large majority in Kings County, are fallacious. If they get 7,000 they will do better than in their hearts they expect to do.

It is now generally conceded by TILDEN'S friends that his letter on Southern claims has ruined his chances among business men. The dispatch from Syracuse which we print this morning shows the effect that the letter is having throughout the country. Business men, previous to TILDEN'S letter, had not any just idea of what the Southern claims were, or how strong a hold they had on the Democratic party. But when it was seen that the Democratic candidate considered them important enough to devote a special disclaimer to them, the business community took alarm. Mr. TILDEN did not deny that vast claims would be presented; he only promised to veto bills for paying them. Plain men take his word for the urgency of these claims, but not for his mode of disposing of them, and reason that it is better to have a President who will not have to fight the great majority of his own party on such a question. "An ounce of prevention is worth a pound of cure," and the best way to make sure that the claims will not get paid in spite of a Presidential veto is to elect a President to whom they will not be presented.

We have already declared our opinion that the attempt at fraud on the suffrage in this City and in Brooklyn will fail through the vigilance and energy of the proper authorities. But we have to suggest that Tildenite leaders, rendered desperate by the defeat of their game here, may try to play it in the country districts. They did this in Indiana after they were checked in Indianapolis, transferring their forces to the rural counties in the southern part of the State. The same tactics, if employed in some parts of New-York, might seriously affect the result, and the absence of strict regulation of the suffrage or Federal officers to supervise it may tempt the Democratic managers. Our friends can, however, easily defeat any such scheme. Let every new face be watched, and, where there is doubt of a person's right to vote, let him be challenged and compelled to incur the risk of punishment if he undertakes to force an illegal vote.

The persistent announcements in the organs of Mr. TILDEN that he is "looking rosy" or "fresh," or "in good health and spirits," are suspicious. They give point to the warnings which the opponents of TILDEN'S nomination uttered before the St. Louis Convention, that if elected he would not survive the first year of the Presidential term. They also awaken considerable curiosity on the question of Mr. HENDRICKS' views on the Southern claims. Perhaps he will see the necessity of announcing them. His prospects of occupying the President's chair are, to say the least, as good as TILDEN'S. If he reached it, would he veto Southern claims? How would he feel about a new issue of greenbacks to satisfy them with? Does he regard them as all barred by the fourteenth amendment? What does he think of the validity of the fourteenth amendment itself? His views on these points are important—more so, in fact, than Mr. TILDEN'S. If the latter is elected, the former will be elected also, and if the latter succumbs to the trials and labor of the office, the former will be President. It would not be an agreeable thing for the country to see in the White House a State rights, anti-war politician, who despises the results of the war, and has always been ready to overturn them by inflation and repudiation. And the worst of the matter is that Mr. HENDRICKS would find a "solid South" in sympathy with him.

The nomination of Mr. L. P. MORTON for Congress in the Eleventh District is one which does credit to the Republican Party. It is not often, unfortunately, that the services of men of Mr. MORTON'S stamp can be commanded in Congress, though they are always imperatively needed and always extremely valuable. It will be the duty of the next Congress to provide the necessary legislation for carrying out the pledge of resumption in 1879. It will be its duty also to correct as many as possible of the serious defects which mark our fiscal policy. It will be called on to establish the civil service on sound business principles. In all these tasks, Mr. MORTON will find himself thoroughly in sympathy with the best portion of his own party, and, we are glad to believe, with a respectable minority of Democrats as well. There should be no possible doubt of his election.

Republicans who happen to be absent from their States should not fail to return to them in time to vote a week from to-day. There never was an occasion when public duty more clearly demanded every necessary sacrifice of private pleasure. The vote next week may be close in New-York, and is pretty sure to be in New-Jersey, Connecticut, and Indiana. Republican voters from those States especially should, therefore, be careful not to lose their vote. A few votes may change a State; one State may determine the Presidency. If Mr. TILDEN is elected by the default of a few voters who are attending the Centennial, the memory of their visit may prove a bitter one.

WHAT BUSINESS MEN FEAR.

The business men of New-York are proclaiming to the country the dread with which they contemplate the possibility of TILDEN'S election to the Presidency. "I am casting about to find a raft to float on in case of his election," wrote one of them to a Boston merchant the other day, "because values will fall to chaos, and it will be very difficult to preserve property." I don't see where to put it," he added, "that it will not perish." "The election of Mr. TILDEN might be regarded as the reversal of the verdict of the war," say our capitalists, bankers, and merchants in their letter to Mr. EVARTS. "Such a radical change in the policy of the Government would," in their opinion, "not only impair its credit at home and abroad, and postpone indefinitely the resumption of specie payments, but endanger in the future our peace and prosperity." As if this were not emphatic enough, we have all the great capitalists of the City, all the richest and most influential private bankers and merchants—the representative men, in fact, of each of these classes—uniting, irrespective of past party differences, in a declaration that the election of HAYES and WHEELER is required to insure "a continuation of the same general policy which has so well sustained our commercial honor and aided so powerfully in the preservation of the Union itself."

Testimony of a similar nature comes from other communities interested in large industrial and commercial enterprises. There is everywhere an unwillingness to embark money in projects while the result of the Presidential contest remains in doubt. Orders for beginning work have been suspended. In the interior of New-York, and in the busiest centres of Indiana, in Massachussetts, and in Pennsylvania, the feeling is the same. The tendency to business activity is checked. Men are unwilling to invest in the most promising schemes, so long as the immediate future is in doubt. Some of these are unconscious manifestations of distrust, arising from a vague feeling that there is a necessity for unusual caution in business matters. Others are the expression of a specific sense of danger, and one that rests on an intelligent estimate of the Democratic Party as a disturbing force, and of the manner in which that force will operate if it receive an impetus from success next Tuesday.

Ordinary partisan considerations furnish no explanation of the depth and strength of this widely-diffused fear. It has its origin in a knowledge of the influences which underlie the Democratic organization, and will control its policy without reference to the wishes of individual leaders. It is not necessary to assume that the policy thus shaped would be ultimately and in all respects successful. The essential fact, in the meantime, is that it would create uncertainty everywhere; that in every branch of the Government, in every form of industry and enterprise, it would produce doubt and anxiety, which an accident might easily convert into panic, and which would certainly aggravate existing depression and difficulty.

The first signs of the mischief would occur in connection with the national credit and the working of our financial system. The record of the Democratic Party is as well understood in Europe as here. Its assaults upon the public creditor are too recent to be explained away. It has assailed the contract under which he invested his money. It has proposed to tax the income derived from his bonds, and to pay the principal in depreciated currency. The immediate effect of its accession to power would be the stoppage of the funding of the debt, and the throwing upon the market large amounts of our Government bonds now held abroad. The premium on gold would rise rapidly, gold gambling would be renewed, and the importing merchant would be once more exposed to the vicissitudes of fluctuation in the value of his home currency. The risk would be enhanced by the greater opportunities possessed by the inflationists. The influence they have exercised in constructing the platform and swaying the tone of their Presidential candidate would reappear in legislation. Our whole financial system would be in jeopardy. Values would be fictitious. Trade would become speculation. Confidence would be impossible. There would be chaos in the monetary world, and among business men and working men the distress would be infinitely greater than that which has been recently experienced.

To the dangers inseparable from the loss of public faith and general financial disturbance must be added those proceeding from fierce party strife. What impels the South to make these desperate efforts for the success of the Democratic Party? If the South aimed simply at the acquisition of legitimate weight in the administration of the Government, its line of action would be very different from that which it now pursues. It would obey the laws, respect the rights of all its citizens, and allow the canvass to run its natural course. It does none of these things. Its spirit is the spirit of unrelenting hatred; its tactics are cruel and proscriptive. Only one inference is admissible: the South aims at revolution through the Democratic Party. Mr. TILDEN'S disclaimers are worthless. The South controls the party, and the party is stronger than the man selected to do its will. He has no alternative but to obey.

A Democratic victory, in its political aspect, means a reopening of the work of the last eleven years. What the North considers the righteous results of the war are at stake. The South proposes to rearrange affairs in a manner that shall as far as possible atone for defeat and humiliation, and compensate for the losses it has borne. There are many methods by which the latter object may be secured. The great bulk of the claims to which Mr. TILDEN says he shall interpose the barrier of the fourteenth amendment are not affected by that provision of the Constitution. The refunding of the cotton tax is really not touched by any plea he has urged. The subsidy schemes that are known to be in reserve would fasten upon the Government five hundred millions of debt, and there are other schemes for benefiting the South at a cost of a thousand millions more. These are stupendous prizes, and the South is struggling for them with frantic energy and utter indifference to the consequences. Is it surprising that business men recognize in the struggle the imminence of a great crisis, which only the continued supremacy of the Republican Party can avert?

REFORM REGARDLESS OF COST.

There is something terrible in the earnestness with which the Democrats enter upon the work of Reform. They are willing to sacrifice anything and everything to bring back that calm and holy time when such men as the virtuous FLOYD, the impeccable JAKE THOMPSON, the simple-hearted GWIN, and the ingenuous CORNELIUS WENDELL bore rule in Washington. They are so highly resolved on reforming the Government, by putting Republicans out and Democrats in, that they stop at nothing. They have already populated all the vacant lots on Manhattan Island with unfortunate outcasts who have hitherto earned a precarious livelihood by pulling the unsuspecting chicken or the nourishing turnip from the hen-roosts and fields of Westchester and Dutchess Counties. In their sacred fury for reform the Democratic Committee have given food to the wanderer and cellar-doors to the vagrant so long as these have promised to wear for ten days the names of defunct or absent citizens, and profess to have a local habitation and a name. It is in vain that the bewildered City housekeeper puts by the cold victuals with which she was wont to regale the tramp who called at the basement door for "a morsel of something to eat." The tramp has temporarily disappeared. Ten thousand of him are registered from brown-stone houses in the air and as many more of him are judiciously distributed among lumber piles, vacant lots, and street numbers which exist only in the wild fancy of the Democratic canvassers. Some over-nice people may say that this is a fraud. But it is done in the sacred name of Reform, always spelled with a large R, and must therefore be right.

The Pennsylvania Democrats, fired by the example of their fellow-crusaders in New-York, have not been laggard in the noble work. They, too, are determined to carry the country for Reform, even if there is not one commandment in the decalogue left with a leg to stand upon. They will have Reform. They will have it though they are obliged to break every law in the statute book. Reform is the thing; the purity of the ballot and other "condemned barren idealities," as WILLIAM ALLEN would say, must get out of the way for Reform. In their mad enthusiasm for this great object, the Philadelphia Democrats resolved to make fifty thousand additional votes by issuing tax receipts without authority. To vote legally, a receipt for personal taxes for the current year must be exhibited. And men who had registered and voted in their own proper names could not vote again without such a paper. The receipt must have the water-mark "Personal Tax, 1876," in it, or it would not pass for genuine. In this holy war for Reform, should an opportunity to make fifty thousand votes for the Boss Reformer—if we may be allowed the expression—be lost because of the weak prejudices of a few? Certainly not. The patriots who are marching on to sweep out the oligarchy who have spent the public money in public buildings, arsenals, and dock-yards, and have sent twenty-five hundred soldiers to terrorize the groaning millions of the South, are not to be turned aside by any mawkish considerations of an abstract morality. Reform must be achieved, and the trammels of a false civilization (in the matter of tax receipts) must be disregarded. So, with the assistance of the Democratic Reformers of New-York, a skillful imitation of the genuine tax receipts was prepared, and the Democratic Reformers of Philadelphia were ready to give voting papers to thousands of men whose names decorate the tombstones in the cemeteries and the sign-boards of distant cities. It is not creditable to a popular desire for Reform that several members of the Democratic Committee, found with those blanks in their possession, were seized by the myrmidons of a corrupt and tyrannical Government, and were held to answer the charge of conspiracy with an intent to commit a breach of the Election laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. The picture of a Treasurer of a Democratic Reform Committee jumping out of a carriage window and cutting down a dark alley, to avoid arrest, is certainly one which must excite the just indignation of every thoughtful patriot.

Never before have we had so much Reform in one campaign. Certainly, never so much of this sort. The October elections are long since over, and the official returns from the several States are accessible and comprehensible to the meanest understanding. Nevertheless, with that all-absorbing passion for Reform which burns in the Democratic breast, the Democratic editor and the Literary Bureau go right on claiming States that went Republican, and claiming majorities that never existed, (save in the distempered fancy of a "nincompoop,") with a calmness that would be appalling if we did not know that it was falsification in the name of virtue and a country to be redeemed. Now and then the Liberty street band of Reformers toss out a "secret circular" giving up the fight, and purporting to be issued by the Republican Committee. Some weak-kneed persons call this forgery, just as they would call the Philadelphia affair a criminal plot; but what would such people have? This style of Reform does not go on with prayer and fasting. It involves hard work. And if Reform cannot be got except by means of forgery, counterfeiting, ballot-box stuffing, fraudulent naturalization, and other little games, shall the Democratic Reformers pause? It is pleasant to know that the great original Reformer, the Boss Reformer, as we have taken the liberty of calling Mr. TILDEN, looks on and approves. It is understood that he was so much interested in the neat little trick in Philadelphia, the other day, that he went on to look over the game beforehand. If he did not, Mr. HEWITT will undoubtedly be able to swear an alibi for him. At any rate, he is "such an organizer," as we have always been informed by admiring friends, that it is impossible that he should not know just what tools his supporters are using in the sacred cause. He approves, and soothes his somewhat torpid conscience with the reflection that the end justifies the means. If he were in PETER COOPER'S place, he would say, "The currency must be increased even if I have to print counterfeit greenbacks to do it."

DELUSION IN DAYLIGHT.

Thoughtful persons must often have asked themselves how it comes that in this age of enlightenment par excellence quackery and humbug obtain the public ear. If we boast of our telegraph and railroad, of our discoveries in science, of our ability to weigh the stars, of our power to extract meaning from the fables of the childhood of the race, we are compelled with shame to admit that these discoveries, this power, this ability, runs parallel with a most shameless gullibility in accepting so-called miracles, the product of credulity on the one hand, and fraud on the other. If we have royal societies and academies of science, associations and congresses for the advancement of science and the promulgation of scientific truths, we have also spiritualistic associations, theosophical societies, and societies for the restoration of the black arts. We have in our society spirits as competitors with telegraphs, SLADE writing in opposition to the printing telegraph, and materialized ghosts showing that gravitation is a delusion and a snare.

A partial explanation of these striking contrarieties may be found in the wonders of science itself. As was said a number of years ago by Dr. PAGET, "the rapid succession of brilliant discoveries and inventions which has characterized the present age, and should have enlightened it, has actually enhanced its credulity for the pretensions of quackery and imposture; the unexpected and the unimagined achievements of true science have so dazzled the minds of people as to render them more accessible to other marvels, whether true or false, and more ready to yield unquestioning belief in whatever is new and wonderful."

The great development of sorcery and magic followed the Renaissance and the Reformation. MELANCTHON was one of the chief defenders of astrology, and LUTHER attributed diseases to the immediate agency of the devil. Even men who are looking narrowly into the traditional statements of the past on one subject, find it impossible on another to avoid the grossest errors and superstitions. At the present day, to be sure, we rarely find the men who have made great discoveries in science the victims of delusion, though, as if to show us that the rule is not absolute, Prof. CROOKES and Mr. WALLACE, well-known explorers in the domain of science, are also among the most ardent supporters and defenders of modern magic. It seems, therefore, as if our great strength was also our great weakness; as if our open-mindedness for the reception of truth fated us to open-mindedness for the reception of error.

One of the great problems of this day is, we confidently believe, how to keep our receptivity for truth while withstanding the reception of error; how to accept great discoveries and reject great pretensions to discovery. This can only be done by the education of the judgment, not only of men of science, of thinkers, but of the mass of the community. FARADAY did not go too far when he asserted that "that point of self-education which consists in teaching the mind to resist its desires and inclinations until they are proved to be right is the most important of all, not only in things of natural philosophy, but in every department of daily life." Even the classes that call themselves instructed in this country and in Europe are in the habit, in the vast majority of instances, of allowing the wish to be father to the thought, of believing a thing because their feelings incline them that way, and of disbelieving a thing because their prejudices are opposed to it.

The recent discussions on SLADE'S trickery have given prominence to the absence of the trained judgment among many of those who pride themselves on emancipation from the trammels of authority, and who attempt to instruct their fellow-citizens. It has been urged seriously that because great numbers of sane and apparently disinterested persons had witnessed SLADE'S performances, and had failed to detect any signs of jugglery, that Dr. LANKESTER is mistaken in his account of how the Slade trick is performed. It is entirely overlooked by these apologists, and some of them are not, in the technical sense, Spiritualists, that the great number of persons who did not detect the fraud and Dr. LANKESTER, who did, do not belong to the same class. They have not made a study of such matters; he has. They have simply general information and the desire for something startling; he has special knowledge and a trained judgment to seek for something true. It is not a case of universal suffrage, where the largest number of votes wins the day, but it is a case of higher law where one with truth is a majority.

The progress of the race in the past fortunately assures us that delusion, however persistent its reappearance, will finally give way. The great inventions and discoveries of this day will finally succeed in so educating the public judgment that Spiritualism, magic, and kindred delusions will have to put on quite other forms than they now possess before they can succeed in seducing any large portion of the public mind. But in order that such a time may speedily come, it is necessary to impress upon persons in this day of general reading that not every assertion, even when clothed in scientific garb, and not every pretension to discovery, even when vouched for by men of science, is a truth or a discovery, but that it is necessary at times to absolutely reserve the judgment as to what seems the best authenticated facts. A revival of magic, theosophy, spiritualism, and the "black arts" affords at the present day the most hopeful field for such reservation.

THE WOES OF DYNAMITE.

Among recent inventions which deserve notice, are two new applications of the explosive power of dynamite, at least one of which promises to be of substantial benefit to civilization, while both are evidently the work of ingenious philanthropists.

Mr. DUNCAN, of Nitshill, Scotland, is—or rather was—a poor and humble miner, but his name will live with those of the discoverers of vacciuation and anæsthesia. Various causes, among which was a tendency on the part of Mr. DUNCAN'S fellow-townsmen to speak slightingly of his moral and mining character, led him to resolve to quit an unappreciative and heartless world. In such circumstances, an ordinary Scotchman would probably have bought a copy of some humorous work, and killed himself with a few pages of jokes; or he would have set free his personal spirit with the pistol, the rope, or the vial of poison. But Mr. DUNCAN was not an ordinary man. He was anxious to die, but he was unwilling to annoy his surviving friends by leaving his body in their hands. He felt that no true gentleman ought to have his corpse littering up the street, or incumbering his neighbor's fish-pond, and that it would be little less than robbery were he to compel other people to undertake the trouble and expense of burying him. He therefore sought some way by which he could commit suicide, and at the same time effectually dispose of his body, and the result of this search was the invention which is sure to make him famous.

One day the small boys of Nitshill perceived Mr. DUNCAN in the act of issuing from his house, with a tin can and a length of fuse under his arm. On reaching the middle of the street he placed the can on the ground, lighted the end of the fuse, and inserting the other end in the can, leaned over it in a thoughtful though unusual attitude. Confident that here was a rare opportunity for safely upsetting the unpopular miner, the boys stealthily approached him. Suddenly he caught sight of them, and yelled to them to fly for their lives. They did so, but almost immediately the can exploded with a tremendous report. When the smoke cleared away, Mr. DUNCAN and the tin can had vanished. A few pounds of dynamite had blown that ingenious man into such small fragments that no Coroner has been able to find a piece of him sufficiently large to warrant an inquest or to require a funeral.

As a means of easy and successful suicide, Mr. DUNCAN'S invention is nearly faultless. It kills its man in the most thorough manner, and without leaving a particle of waste. Those who use it run no risk of spoiling carpets or of poisoning ponds, and inflict no gratuitous corpses upon innocent people, who have no desire for such gifts, and who grudge the funeral expenses which they entail. If the suicide is only careful to explode his dynamite in localities where there will be no danger of accidentally blowing up unwary spectators, it will be impossible to find any reasonable fault with him. Thanks to Mr. DUNCAN, the suicide need no longer be an expensive nuisance, but he can quietly take his dynamite into a vacant lot and distribute himself in the shape of impalpable and inoffensive dust over miles of surrounding country.

While Mr. DUNCAN'S invention shows that a humble miner may possess both inventive genius and a rare delicacy of feeling, the inventor of the dynamite machine which lately exploded in a New-Jersey baggage-car deserves as much credit for his ingenuity and philanthropy. It is strange that the real purpose of the latter machine has been so completely misunderstood. Most people have jumped to the conclusion that the inventor was a wretch who intended to blow up the baggag-car, either in order to rob the passengers in the ensuing confusion, or to defraud some insurance company. The fact that, while the machine contained sufficient dynamite to blow to pieces the trunk in which it was placed, it did not contain enough to do any serious damage to the train, ought to demonstrate the falseness of the popular theory as to its purpose. If the inventor had wished to wreck the train, he could have filled the trunk with dynamite enough to throw the passengers all over the State of New-Jersey; whereas, in point of fact, he only placed in it a small bursting charge. Clearly his motive was not that which has been ascribed to him, and at the same time the object which he undoubtedly had in view is so obvious that there ought never to have been any doubt as to it.

That inventor was a man whose honest indignation had been excited by the havoc wrought among trunks by the railway baggage-smashers. In all probability his own trunk had been smashed in this way to and from the Philadelphia Exhibition; but, at all events, he had seen the trunks of his fellow-men brutally hurled from car to platform, and utterly and irretrievably ruined. He felt that so desperate an evil deserved a desperate remedy, and he therefore prepared a trunk which would teach a wholesome moral lesson to the baggage fiend. There is no doubt that had the trunk in question, with its charge of dynamite, been handled by the ordinary baggage-smasher, in the ordinary manner, he would have been suddenly convinced of the error of his ways, while the appearance presented by specimens of his remains would have struck terror to his companions in crime. If baggage-smashers should once fully grasp the idea that a trunk may contain dynamite, they will abandon their nefarious practices, and will handle trunks with the most exemplary care. Even the premature explosion in the New-Jersey baggage-car will not be without its beneficent effects, for, although no baggage-smasher was immediately benefited by it, the evil-doers cannot avoid presuming that the avenger is on their path, and that his invention may be tried again, and with more marked and satisfactory results.

THE ALABAMA MANIFESTO.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

With a perseverance which does more credit to the zeal than to the discretion of those who are here managing the canvass for Mr. Tilden, they have procured from members of Congress and others of Alabama a communication, which is published in the World of this morning, declaring that the Southern people do not expect that a change of administration will inure to their pecuniary benefit, &c., and that compensation for all other claims than those barred by the fourteenth amendment are prohibited by the law of nations and the decisions of the Supreme Court.

On examining this communication with care, and comparing it with that signed by the Representatives of Kentucky, I find that the two are identical in language, and were doubtless run in the same mold and forwarded from this City for signature. It is to be presumed that many others have been here manufactured, and forwarded for a similar purpose. It was said by some client who was a defendant in a chancery suit, to his solicitor, "Draw my answer like a lawyer, and I will swear to it like a man." A similar spirit is manifested by these Alabama officials, but, like six of the Kentucky members, two of these from Alabama—William H. Forney and John H. Caldwell—have introduced private bills into Congress for the payment, as I learn, of Southern claims, which they declare in their communication, by them signed, to be prohibited by the law of nations and the Supreme Court. Under the circumstances I would suggest that hereafter such communications be framed in the States from which they purport to come, and be signed only by officials who have not made an inconsistent record in Congress. The people of the North have some intelligence, and will be more likely to be imposed upon if the course I have suggested be adopted.

E. W. STOUGHTON.

MONDAY, Oct. 30, 1876.

NOTES OF THE CAMPAIGN.

In one of the concluding sentences of his Kent letter, Gov. Tilden said: "Our only hope must be that as President, he [Lincoln] will abandon the creed, the principles, and pledges on which he will have been elected." The bearings of this true observation lie in its application to Southern claims.

However much credit Gov. Tilden may be entitled to for having caused the punishment of one Democratic canal thief, at an expense to the State of over one hundred thousand dollars, he has no right to boast that taxes are not now so high as they were when the people were refunding to the creditors of the State the plunder of a Democratic Administration.

The "true inwardness" of Gov. Tilden's claim to economy in the administration of the State finances becomes apparent when it is considered that the tax for the general purposes of the Government for the current year amounts to $3,825,271, a sum exceeding the tax of any other year in the history of the State by $568,554. The figures are Controller Ropkins'.

Mr. Donn Piatt, editor of the Washington Capital, who once not unaptly described the Democratic Party as "the organized ignorance of the country," is now doing what he can with his paper to invest that organized ignorance with supreme power. This is a bad business for a journalist of the intelligence of Mr. Piatt—worse than the Moth Exterminator business. He should employ the journal, which we learn he is anxious to sell, in expelling ignorance from the land, whether organized or unorganized, and lay up his treasures where moth doth not corrupt.

Very touching is the implicit faith of all good Democrats in Gov. Tilden's claim to personal and exclusive credit for the reduction of taxation. The truth is, the reduction was effected by Republican management and votes, was predicted by a Republican Controller before the model of reform and economy took his seat as Governor, and would have taken place whoever had been in the Executive chair at Albany, for the simple reason that no considerable tax for debt purposes was necessary after the Republicans had replaced in the sacredly-pledged sinking fund the $6,500,000 stolen from it by Democratic officials.

Mr. Tilden's "great financial wisdom" consists in making the lean kine which he owns eat up the fat kine belonging to some one else. Thus the bankrupt Chicago and North-western Railroad was made to absorb the Chicago and Galena road, paying its ten per cent. dividend annually. Chicago and North-western stock immediately rose from almost nothing to 45 and 50; Chicago and Galena stock went down to nominal prices. Hundreds of farmers, mechanics, and industrious working men of all classes, who had invested their savings in the Galena road, which ran through the towns and villages they lived in, were made destitute; but Tilden and the little clique of speculators he was the head of, made immense sums by the rise in the price of the North-western stock which they held.

The tendency of the veracious Knight of the Two O'ths toward self-contradiction would bring so many awkward complications in the domestic and foreign relations of the Government, that it would be safest not to place him in a position where his self-stultification would compromise the whole country with himself. If as Executive he should tell an ambassador one thing one day and the opposite the next, promise the settlement of a point in dispute and then refuse to adjust anything, a foreign diplomat, unaware of the constitutional eccentricities of the President, might think his conduct a just cause of war. If, like Buchanan, whom he so much resembles, he said one week that a State had no right to secede, and the next that there was no power in the Constitution or on earth to prevent it, we might have the solid Democratic South at our throats, with Bull Run and Andersonville over again. Upon the whole, we had better have a Chief Magistrate who can tell the truth—at least when put under oath.

Wade Hampton tells colored citizens in South Carolina that if they vote the Republican ticket they must look to Republicans for support; in other words, that Democrats will no longer give them work. We have not seen in Democratic quarters any condemnation of the use of this starvation argument, this robbing a voter of his subsistence if he votes according to his conscientious convictions. But suppose we bring the matter home. Suppose the capitalists and men who give employment to labor in New-York, two-thirds of whom are Republicans, should say to their clerks, operatives, and mechanics, if you vote the Democratic ticket you must look to Democrats for support; that is, if you do not vote as we do, we will discharge you, what then? Would not the Sun cease to shine and the indignant World melt with fervent heat? And yet if Republican capitalists employed this one mildest method of South Carolina coercion the Republican Party would sweep the whole North like a whirlwind.

The all-wise or owl-wise Nation does not approve of Howard's Life of Hayes because it "is prepared for the people," and the editor himself is not one of the people, but one of the "cultured few." He finds fault with the biographer for giving facts to meet the objection made to Hayes that he was a dapper little dandy, who twirled a rattan cane and parted his hair in the middle. He intimates that this biography is displeasing to a "man of culture" like himself, because of its "exaggerated eulogy." Of course it is of no consequence that half the journals in the country commended the biography in question for the absence of the very fault it discovers. An omniscient jaror must not be swayed by the eleven wrong-headed ones. The trouble with this preposterous paper is made known in the admission that Howard's Life "contains more in the way of speeches and Messages" of Gov. Hayes than any other. Here is where the eulogy comes in. There can be no loftier eulogy of the Republican candidate's character, and no higher proof of his abilities than his own utterances. To make these known to "the people," is to make votes—the object of all campaign biographies.

The deaths of three Presidents of the United States while in office warns all wise citizens to take into account the contingency of a promotion of the second candidate on the Presidential ticket to that high office. A vacancy caused by the death of Mr. Tilden, should he be elected, would be filled by T. A. Hendricks, the Great American Trimmer, who trimmed between the contending hosts fighting for and against the nation's life, and trimmed upon all other questions except finance. On that question he has been consistent. He has been for rag money and an increase in the volume of broken promises to pay, all his life. He favored the Pendleton plan of repudiation. He has uttered as much dreary inflation drivel as Old Bill Allen. He is responsible for the rascally resolutions in the Indiana platform of last year. On the other hand, should Gov. Hayes die while in the Presidential office, his place would be filled by an able and incorruptible citizen of New-York—a straightforward man, whose financial views all citizens know to be eminently sound. With William A. Wheeler, every voter knows the nation's credit would be in safe hands.

"Reform is necessary" when a man who drew up the notorious Credit Mobilier fraud aspires to the office of Chief Magistrate of the nation. "Reform is necessary" when a man who made money by drawing up schemes of fraud, and saved it by false statements and perjury, asks the nation to give him its highest office as the "great reformer." "Reform is necessary" when a candidate for the Presidency who talks hard-money doctrine is found to have flooded an extensive mining district with bogus currency. "Reform is necessary" when this candidate puffs himself as a friend of the working man, and cheats his workmen by compelling them to take their pay in this bogus currency. "Reform is necessary," when a candidate for the Presidency who arraigns the Government for extravagance and dishonesty is found to have been the prime mover in some of the worst cases of "stock watering" known in our commercial history. "Reform is necessary" when this aspirant for popular favor talks feelingly about the working classes with the "wolf at the door," and is discovered to be the same man who utterly ruined a prosperous manufacturing village in order to enrich himself and a clique of unscrupulous speculators.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

THE WAR IN EASTERN EUROPE.

CAPTURE OF DJUNIS BY THE TURKS—THE SERVIAN ARMY CUT IN TWO—RETREAT OF TCHERNAYEFF WITH PART OF HIS FORCE TO RAGANJ—HORVATOVITCH DRIVEN TO KRUCHEVATZ.

BELGRADE, Oct. 30.—A battle was fought yesterday in which the Turks drove the Servians from Djunis after a crushing defeat. Tchernayeff's army is cut in two and completely demoralized. Horvatovitch's command has retired on Kruchevatz. A great panic prevails at Belgrade.

Particulars of the battle between the Turks and Servians yesterday state that the Turks attacked the heights of Djunis. The Servian artillery, irritated at Gen. Tchernayeff's depreciatory manner, refused to fight and abandoned their positions despite the efforts of the Russian officers. A body of Russian volunteers defended the heights desperately, half of their number being killed. The Turks carried their positions thus cutting the Servian army in two. After the fall of Djunis Gen. Tchernayeff, with his Staff and part of the army, retreated to Raganj, but have since returned to the neighborhood of Deligrad. Gen. Horvatovitch's corps fought some time, but were finally completely beaten and driven back upon Kruchevatz. The Deligrad positions are now untenable. Last night patrols went through the streets of Belgrade, summoning sojourning Russian officers to proceed to the Ministry of War, whence they were dispatched to the front. Prince Milan left for the Army to-day, escorted by a body of Russians. The Prince had a long conference yesterday with M. Kartseff, the resident Russian Diplomatic Agent.

RAGUSA, Oct. 30.—Moukhtar Pasha has sent a force of Turkish troops by way of the Duga Pass to endeavor to revictual Nicsics.

LONDON, Oct. 31.—The Standard's dispatch from Deligrad reports that the Turks captured ten cannon and a large quantity of muskets and ammunition in their last battle at Djunis. The same paper's special from Belgrade does not single out the artillery as the most prominent indefection on that occasion, but states that the Servian Army, which was reduced to such a condition that the men were hardly able to crawl, openly declared it would fight no longer and abandoned its positions en masse. Tchernayeff telegraphed to Prince Milan imploring him to come and prevent the army from crumbling entirely to pieces. The Prince conferred with M. Kartzoff five times during the night. It is impossible to make a stand at Cuprilia. At Deligrad, Razanj, and Paratchin, and all along the road, the wildest confusion prevails. The wounded, the wagons, the staff, and deserters, are mixed up in an inextricable mass. The Circassians have appeared before Razanj.

The Paris Estefette has a report that military law has been proclaimed in the Russian Districts of Kiev, Odessa, Kharkow, and Caucasus, where lodgings for 50,000 troops are being prepared.

The Times correspondent at Belgrade telegraphs: There is no longer any delusion. Servia is now at the feet of Russia or the mercy of Turkey. Some officers are under orders to proceed to Kragojevatz, which is the arsenal of Serwia. The Turks, however, ought to have passed Kragojevatz before reinforcements could arrive there. If they delay, further resistance by the Russian vouinteers is probable. Intelligence, however, has been received from Russian officers that the Turks have received reinforcements to the amount of 20,000 men and some batteries of artillery. The Circassian cavalry are burning villages near Paratchin and Cuprilia. In Belgrade, after the brief excitement, the usual apathy supervened, in consequence of the belief that an armistice was near at hand."

A Belgrade dispatch to the Daily Telegraph announces that Prince Milan will take command of the Army to-day.

A special from Belgrade to the Daily News reports that of 1,000 Russians engaged in the last fight at Djunis, 700 were killed. Turkish batteries from Djunis are shelling the Deligrad camp. The Servians are quitting it for a safe position.

THE DIPLOMATIC FEATURES.

PROGRESS OF NEGOTIATIONS AT CONSTANTINOPLE—THE SERVIAN PRINCE READY TO ASK RUSSIAN INTERVENTION—AUSTRIAN POLICY.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 30.—Gen. Ignatieff, the Russian Ambassador, had an interview with the Sultan on Saturday, and with the Grand Vizier yesterday. Subsequently the Ambassadors of the six powers had a conference. To-day the Turkish Ministers held a council. The prevalent impression regarding the situation is that it is pacific.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—A dispatch from Belgrade to Reuter's Telegram Company says: "At 1 o'clock this (Monday) morning, M. Kartzoff, at the request of Prince Milan, sent a telegram to Livadia asking that Gen. Ignatieff should be instructed to obtain a six weeks' armistice; or, in case he fails, that Russia should intervene on behalf of Servia."

Reuter's dispatch from Constantinople says: "It is stated that the Porte has accepted a proposal for a two-months' armistice, with a proviso that if peace is not concluded within that time the armistice may be susceptible to two successive prolongations of six weeks each. It is further provided that hostilities shall cease throughout Servia, Montenegro, Bosnia, and Herzegovina, and foreign military attachés shall proceed to the seat of war to settle the line of demarkation between the opposing forces."

LONDON, Oct. 31.—The Standard's Vienna correspondent reports that, according to an official telegram, the terms of armistice are being finally agreed upon, and their publication is hourly expected.

The Post gives prominence to the following article in an official form: "We still entertain hopes, grounded upon much assurance, that the question of armistice is settled, and a conference of the Powers will shortly be held. We are not without warrant in saying that the Czar has not only practically agreed to the Turkish proposal of armistice, but also waived objection to Turkish participation in the conference. This assembly will, therefore, we assume, take place with the admission of Turkey as one of the assembled powers. The deliberations with respect to reforms will be chiefly conducted by the six powers. The result will be submitted to Turkey. Although the latter forms an internal part of the European system, her representative will only take a seat on occasions when results are to be declared. All the great powers except Austria have assented to this course, and it is of no small importance that Russia has relieved us of difficulties which she seemed to interpose."

The Vienna correspondent of the Times says the announcement that the armistice has been settled is premature. The Porte was only expected to give a definite reply on Monday. There is, or anyhow was on Sunday, every ground to believe that the reply will be fully satisfactory; that is, that the Porte will accept the Russian proposition. Other powers have given adhesion to the conditions for the prolongation of the armistice proposed by Russia. England holds aloof. The Turks are thus left without a supporter of their views, and as the adhesion of the powers to Russian views in regard to the prolongation of the armistice shows that prolongation is really meant, a three month's armistice may be reckoned upon with tolerable certainty. There is news in circulation that the admission of a Turkish Representative to the Congress has been suggested, with a view to satisfy England, and the suggestion has been approved at Livadia.

The Belgrade official journal publishes an eager appeal to Russia for immediate help.

Minister Ristics is left in charge of the Government at Belgrade. He is empowered to treat for peace or armistice if any opportunity arises. It is thought that he will seize the opportunity, make peace, and thus free the Government from the influence of Russia.

The Times announces that Gen. Schouvaloff, at the express desire of the Czar, has declared to Lord Beaconsfield that the Russian Government utterly repudiates the recent offensive article in the Golos, (newspaper.)

VIENNA, Oct. 30.—The Constitutionalist groups of the Austrian Reichsrath intend to send an address to the Emperor about Austria's Eastern policy.

THE GERMAN PARLIAMENT.

BERLIN, Oct. 30.—The German Reichstag (Imperial Parliament for the whole Empire) was opened to-day. The Emperor's speech was read by Herr Hofman, his Majesty being absent on account of indisposition. The imperial speech mentions the general depression of trade and industry in Germany and throughout the world, and states that the object of the Government's commercial policy will be the protection of German industry from the prejudicial effects of one-sided Customs regulations in other countries. This object will be kept specially in view in impending negotiations for the renewal of commercial treaties. Germany's foreign relations, notwithstanding the difficulties of the present political situation, are fully accordant with the Emperor's pacific policy. His constant endeavor is to preserve friendly relations with all powers, especially those connected with Germany by ties of neighborhood and history, and as far as peace may be endangered among such, to preserve it by friendly mediation. Whatever the future may have in store, Germany may rest assured that the blood of her sons will be sacrificed or risked only for the protection of her own honor and interests.

THE SOMMERARD LETTER.

EMPHATIC DENIAL OF THE AUTHORSHIP OF THE LETTER BY THE FRENCH CHIEF COMMISSIONER FOR THE CENTENNIAL EXHIBITION.

PARIS, Oct. 30, The Figaro to-day publishes a letter from M. Du Sommerard, Chief Commissioner of France for the American Centennial Exposition declaring that the letter printed in that journal on Friday, attacking the management of the Exhibition, and containing other base charges, the authorship of which is attributed to him, is an utter fabrication. M. Du Sommerard puts his disavowal of it in the most formal and express terms, and adds that if his denial be not sufficient, he is in the position to prove by documentary evidence the truth of his statement.

FOREIGN BUSINESS MATTERS.

SETTLING DAY ON THE LONDON STOCK EXCHANGE—THREE UNIMPORTANT FAILURES—THE GRAIN TRADE—GLOOMY CROP REPORTS IN ENGLAND—SILVER.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—This is the last day of the usual fortnightly settlement on the Stock Exchange. Three failures have been announced, resulting from the recent fluctuations, but the liabilities of the suspended parties are not important.

The Mark Lane Express, in its usual weekly review of the grain trade, says: "There has been better weather during the past week, and in the north the remains of outstanding crops have been mostly gathered. The condition is deplorable. In many districts barley and oats were hardly worth carting, and the grass was so sodden as to have lost much of its nourishing properties. Reports of the potato blight are gloomy. The disease, as yet, is confined to a few English and Scotch districts, but it is feared it will extend to Ireland. Fine, dry weather is greatly needed for potatoes and for sowing wheat, a considerable acreage of which has been sown during the past week. Holders of wheat remain very firm and millers buy reluctantly, but they are by no means satisfied that an advance in prices is improbable. Local trade has been quiescent, and with a moderate consumptive demand wheat has with difficulty maintained previous prices. Maize, flour, and feeding stuffs are unchanged. Arrivals off the coast have been very limited. California cargoes on passage have declined slightly from the highest point, but a firmer feeling has been shown latterly."

Silver to-day is quoted at 53½d.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

ARRIVAL OF THE ARCTIC STEAMER PANDORA—OPENING OF THE FRENCH CHAMBERS—"GOETTERDAMMERUNG" HISSED IN PARIS—AMERICAN AFFAIRS IN BERLIN.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—The steamer Pandora, which sailed from Southampton for Smith's Sound, in the Arctic regions, some months ago, for the purpose of bringing to England any dispatches which might have been deposited there by the Arctic expedition just returned, passed Crookhaven on her way to Portsmouth at noon to-day. All on board were well.

Reuter's telegram from Bilbao reports that small bands of insurgents recently appeared in the neighborhood of Ecartaciones, but they have dispersed.

VERSAILLES, Oct. 30.—The session of the Chambers was opened to-day. There was no speech by President MeMahon. The Senate adjourned until Nov. 6 and the Chamber of Deputies until the 3d prox.

PARIS, Oct. 30.—Wagner's "Goetterdammerung" was performed for the first time at a popular concert here yesterday. A portion of the audience hissed and protested noisily.

BERLIN, Oct. 30.—Gens. Forsyth and Upton and Major Sanger, of the United States Army, have arrived here.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 30.—The mills of the Mersey Seed Crushing Company were destroyed by fire to-day. The loss is $100,000, and over three hundred hands are thrown out of employment.

BARCELONA, Oct. 30.—Admiral Francisco Llano, commanding the port of Barcelona, has been appointed to the command of the squadron which is to co-operate with the troops in Cuba. The frigates, Navas de Tolosa, Villa de Madrid, Leon and Concepcion have sailed for Cuba with four battalions of infantry.

THE LAST WEST INDIAN HURRICANE.

DANGER TO THE SUGAR CROP IN CUBA—WRECK OF THE AMERICAN SCHOONER ANNA E. CARLL—RESCUE OF SHIPWRECKED SEAMEN AND PASSENGERS.

HAVANNA, Oct. 30.—Advices arriving gradually from the interior describe the effects of the last hurricane as very disastrous. The sugar crop, which promised to be exceptionally abundant, will be much reduced.

The American schooner Anna E. Carll, with a cargo of hides, gum, and cocoanuts, from Venezuela for New-York, went ashore on the night of the 19th inst. on Cayo Large, between Batabano and Cienfuegos. She is firmly imbeded and the cargo can be saved. A brig has been chartered in Cienfuegos to take off her cargo. While ashore her crew saved six Spanish shipwrecked sailors and sixteen of the crew and passengers of the English schooner Enterprise.

GALVESTON, Oct. 30.—The British bark Crown Jewel, of St. Johns, has arrived here, bringing the crew of the schooner Thomas Winans, of Port Richmond, N. Y., which went down off Grand Cayman Island during the late hurricane. The vessel and cargo are a total loss, but there was no loss of life.

A YOUNG MAN KILLED IN ST. LOUIS.

ST. LOUIS, Oct. 30.—About eight o'clock last night a number of young men and boys were lounging at the corner of Jefferson avenue and Pacific street, in the western part of the city, when three men in a buggy drove past. Something peculiar in the style of the horse attached to the buggy caused the boys to hoot and utter coarse jokes, whereupon the men in the buggy pulled up, and considerable badinage followed, during which some person in the crowd crossed the reins in the bridle of the horse. This enraged the men in the buggy, one of whom jumped out and demanded to know who did it. A young man named George Williams, aged twenty-one, who was simply a looker-on, was pointed out as the practical joker, and the man from the buggy attacked him, and a scuffle ensued, in which a pistol was discharged. Young Williams fell to the pavement and died within three minutes, the bullet entering his back and passing out through the groin. The assailant re-entered the buggy, which was at once driven off at a furious pace, and was out of sight before the witnesses recovered from their surprise. Soon after midnight Henry and Herman Gressing were arrested as two of the occupants of the buggy. The third man, named Tom Weber, has not yet been arrested. The victim was a son of Charles Williams, a master mechanic in the Pacific Railroad shops, and is said to have been a very steady, inoffensive young man.

ALABAMA CLAIMS.

WASHINGTON Oct 30.—In the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims to-day the following judgments for loss of personal effects and wages by the destruction of various vessels were announced. Case No. 1415, Francis Fuller of New Bedford, Mass., $500; No. 1675 Elizabeth A. Handy of San Francisco, Cal., dismissed; No. 1674, Joseph A. Manuel, of San Francisco, Cal., dismissed; No. 1691, David Bradley of Brooklyn, N. Y., $260; No. 1632, George A. Jewett, of Machiasport, Me., $800; No. 1680, Edward Sipp, of Brooklyn, N. Y., $500; No. 1683, Jose Silva, of New-Bedford, Mass., $250; No. 1703, William Lester, of Beverly, Mass., $200; No. 1815, Thomas F. Smith, of Edgarton, Mass, $45; No. 1720, Joseph Ross, of New-Bedford, Mass., $270; No. 1724, John C. Alma, of Dartmouth, Mass., $600.

The court will in a few days, complete the second calling of the calendar, after which the third call will be commenced, and all the cases not ready for trial will be stricken from the calendar.

AMUSEMENTS.

BOOTH'S THEATRE.

The "muse of the many twinkling feet" had much concern in the performence at Booth's last evening. She ruled and reveled through nearly the whole of one act, and her away was lustrous beyond peradventure. When Mr. Calvert was looking through historical archives and other depositories of antique information to discover the manners and customs of an empire which was in a flourishing condition more than two thousand years ago, did he really ascertain that the pas and tarantella, and other offshoots of the same kind were products of the realm which Sardanapalus swayed? If so, further research may develop the fact that there were veritable Mul-doons of Nineveh—solid men of Assyria—whose ashes have lain in undisturbed sarcophagi through the long lapse of the slow-moving centuries. But perhaps it would be safer to assume that these modern-seeming things are invocations brought about by active nymphs from the La Scala, and bounding baggages from the San Carlo. At all events, they are passing pleasant, and are so well regulated in every detail, that one need not look far to find some æsthetic qualities in them. The new ballet which was presented last night is of great elaboration, is delightfully tortuous and involved, and is more than opulent in lustre and color. The ballet corps proper, is large and well trained, and the auxiliaries know their business to a nicety. Perhaps their march, in connection with the extra ballet corps, was one of the prettiest things of the performances last evening. The movements are perfect, or very nearly so, and the effect of the perpetually changing light on the gay tinsel is pretty beyond description. The flower ballet, in which the entire corps take part, is quite charming in its way, but the principal dancers are a trifle monotonous. They seem to be for ever exacting admiration and applause. Their their smiles are too abundant by half, and the hollowness of them is too apparent. They usually die out at the wings, and grow in graciousness and sweetness and all good qualities as the ladies come near to the foot-lights. Your premiers danseuse assoluta is a terrible tyrant, and as a rule not nearly so tolerable as the less important "fringe of society" (as the "gentle Elia" himself rather harshly terms the lady of the ballet,) who only shares the popular admiration with a score or so of her own quality. The new ballet which was introduced for the first time last night is perhaps rather spun out, but an audience is not apt to complain of a spectacle so brilliant, even though it should have too much of it. The costumes and all accessories are in keeping with the liberal policy of the management heretofore in connection with all the spectacular plays which it has given to the public.

NIBLO'S GARDEN.

Niblo's Garden continues to be crowded nightly. Last evening a trio of premieres and a line of coryphées, in addition to the regular ballet, made their first appearances and were well received. The new premieres were Signora Antonino, who made a most successful début, Miss Ida Devere, and Mlle Malvina. These ladies were received with enthusiasm. The premieres assolutas appeared in both the ballets, and, despite the talents of the new-comers, succeeded in winning abundant applause.

PARK THEATRE.

Mr. Gilbert's comedy "Tom Cobb" is still in high favor with the audiences at the Park. In spite of its manifest extravagance and leaning toward burlesque, it has that genuine quality which never fails to evoke hearty laughter. Last evening it was preceded by a little adaptation in one act called "Adam and Eve," a piece with the same sources of pleasantry as "Forbidden Fruit" which has been running so successfully at Wallack's. Both pieces furnished a pleasant evening's entertainment, and were well appreciated.

POLITICAL NOTES.

A Kentucky paper says it is in exceeding bad taste for a white man to address a colored meeting.

The Tildenites of Georgia are in a panic over their probable defeat in the Fifth Congressional District of the State.

A foreigner in Meriden, Conn., who wished to be naturalized and had no male friend nearer than this City, brought forward his wife to identify him, and her testimony was accepted.

Hon. John F. Potter, of Wisconsin, is too infirm to take active part in the canvass, but writes: "I shall do what I can for Hayes and Wheeler by my vote, and by endeavoring to get my neighbors to vote for them."

The Syracuse Journal says: "There is a splendid, compact organization of the Republican forces in the central counties, and the good old-fashioned majorities will be rolled up. In the western counties the prospects were never better, and the northern and eastern counties are prepared to render a gallant account."

Mr. J. D. Hager, of Poughkeepsie, who, the Eagle says, is a careful observer, estimates that Hayes will have 254 electoral votes and Tilden 101, there being fourteen (Connecticut and Mississippi) doubtful. He predicts that the Republicans will gain at least sixty Congressmen, and that they will carry New-York State by 13,000 majority.

The Detroit (Mich.) Tribune publishes conclusive evidence of the baseness and baselessness of the deliberate and disreputable attempt made by the Tildenites to break down the standing before the people and in his church of Rev. E. W. Flower, because he has given to the public the damaging facts of an interview held by him with Mr. Tilden in the Fall of 1867.

THE WEATHER.

PROBABILITIES.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 31—1 A. M.—For the Middle States, falling barometer, winds veering to southerly and westerly, rising temperature, and generally clear weather.

For New-England, rising, followed by falling barometer, winds shifting to south-westerly and southerly, rising temperature, and clear or partly cloudy weather.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

The Palace Hotel, Topeka, Kan., in which were the offices of the Kansas Pacific Railroad, was burned on Sunday night. The fire is supposed to have been of incendiary origin, as the place had been closed as a hotel for some months, the first floor only being used as an eating-house. The furniture which was stored in the second story, was nearly all saved. The insurance on the building is $12,500, distributed as follows: $2 500 each in the Phœnix, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; the Fire and Marine, of Springfield, Mass.; the Fire Association of Philadelphia; the Citizens', of New-Jersey, and the Peoples' of New-Jersey. The furniture was insured in the Continental, of New-York.

A fire occurred last evening on the second floor of No. 51 Fulton street, damaging the stock of Messrs. Dodfrey & Boyce, dealer in corks, to the extent of $1,000. Phelps' restaurant, on the first floor, and John Cook's plumbing shop, in the basement, were slightly damaged by water. The damage to the building was $500.

A fire on Main street, Pawtucket, R. I., early yesterday morning destroyed the photograph establishment of A. L. Moffitt, whose loss is $3,000; insured for $2,500 at Paterson, N. J., and in the Roger Williams Insurance Company. W. W. Dexter, jeweler, loses $500. The building was damaged to the extent of $800.

Two barns were destroyed by fire at Fishkill Landing, one at Wappinger Falls, and one at Rhinebeck Sunday night. All the fires were incendiary, and the work of tramps. Total loss about six thousand dollars.

The dwelling and out-buildings of S. C. Armstrong, at Tunbridge, Vt., were burned Saturday night. The loss is $7,500; fully insured.

TREASURY DEFICIENCY OF $300,000

HARRISBURG, Oct. 30.—In July last Auditor General Temple ordered a general investigation of the accounts of the city and county officers of the Commonwealth. Pursuant to this order, B. M. Mead and John McMurray, two of the clerks of the Auditor General's office, having examined the Philadelphia Mercantile Appraiser's list, have made their report to the Auditor General, which alleges that there is a deficiency of about $300,000 in the accounts of the Philadelphia city treasury. The settlement of the account has been sent to the State Treasurer for approval.

NOMINATION FOR ALDERMAN.

The Republicans of the Fourth Aldermanic District nominated, last night, Capt. Matthew Stewart for Alderman. Mr. Stewart was one of the first to join the Union Army at the beginning of the war. He participated in all the severe engagements of the Potomac Army. He enlisted as a private in the Seventy-third New York Volunteers, and being severely wounded, was mustered out as a Captain in that regiment in December, 1864. He ran for Congressin 1872, running considerably ahead of his ticket. He was assistant foreman of No. 50 Hose Company, in the Volunteer Fire Department.

Ask any druggist and he will tell you that this Balsam is a real blessing to all affected with throat or lung diseases. All kindred affections, including bronchitis, sore throat, croup, hoarseness, pains in the chest, and bleeding of the lungs, yield to its wonderful power. We advise any one tired of experimenting with physicians' prescriptions or quack medicines to drop them at once and use this BALSAM OF WILD CHERRY. 50 cents and $1 a bottle. Sold by all druggists.

Coughs.—"BROWN'S BRONCHIAL TROCHES" will allay irritation which induces coughing, giving oftentimes immediate relief in Bronchitis, Influenza, Hoarseness, and consumptive and asthmatic complaints.

Avoid Danger.—Don't put an enemy in your mouth to steal your teeth. Avoid deleterious dentifrices. Rely on SOZODONT. Nothing can be purer or more certain to prevent the teeth from becoming diseased. After each brushing they glitter like pearls, and the gums grow rosy-red.

Don't Lose Your Hair.

CHEVALIER'S LIFE FOR THE HAIR restores gray perfectly, stops its falling out at once, increases its growth rapidly, and makes the hair beautiful. Sold by all druggists.

First Premium

THE CAMPAIGN IN THE WEST

THE OUTLOOK IN ILLINOIS.

DEMOCRATIC FRAUDS AND GREENBACKISM—THE TWO ELEMENTS OF STRENGTH ON WHICH ILLINOIS DEMOCRATS COUNT—A WILY SCHEME FOR ELECTING CONGRESSMEN AND SECURING THE LEGISLATURE—A UNION OF INTERESTS AND FORCES BETWEEN DEMOCRATS AND GREENBACKERS THROUGHOUT THE STATE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

CHICAGO, Thursday, Oct. 26, 1876.

Illinois, of course, is set down as one of the States certain to cast its electoral vote for Hayes and Wheeler. There is no more doubt about it than there is about Arkansas casting its electoral vote for Tilden and Hendricks. It is merely a question of majorities on the national ticket. Any honest Democrat will candidly admit that the State will go Republican by 15,000 or 20,000 majority, and an enthusiastic Republican will claim all the way from 40,000 to 50,000 majority. But the campaign in Illinois does not stop at that; if it did, there would be no issue and no struggle. It includes also the results in the Congressional districts and the political complexion of the next Legislature, which will choose a successor to the seat in the United States Senate now occupied by Gen. Logan. On these results, as well as the selection of county officers, the Democrats are making a desperate, wily, and unscrupulous fight in this State. They have just two elements of strength which they are urging to the last extreme. Their organization is imperfect, as compared with that of the Republicans. They have no basis, either in the cities or among the farmers, for building up enthusiasm on the old Bourbon doctrines reaffirmed by the nomination of Tilden and Hendricks. They have no able journals in the State making a bold and aggressive fight. Their public speakers are of an inferior order, and their meetings are small and tame by comparison. Blaine and Ingersoll, the latter even more than the former, are tuning the enthusiasm of the Republicans to something like the old-time key. Ingersoll drew together last Saturday the largest body of people that ever collected here at a political meeting, the crowd being estimated at not less than twenty-five thousand, and next Saturday evening it is confidently expected that Blaine will call out as many. Reports from the Republican meetings throughout the State indicate a like interest, and the speakers are men of ability, character, and influence. The managers of the Democratic campaign, on the other hand, seem to have made up their minds that it is useless to waste ammunition on Illinois, and have left the local Democrats to their own resources. Democratic resources in Illinois do not include ability, character or experience; the party has been practically disbanded in this State so long that there is no nucleus for organization and no plan for co-operation. These are the reasons why the Illinois Democrats have fallen back on what I have called the two elements of expected strength, viz., fraud at the election and the utilization of the Greenback fanatics. Both elements are new in the politics of this State, and it is uncertain how much they will count for in determining the result of the Congressional, Legislative, and county vote, but the Democrats, stripped of all other hope, stand or fall by these methods and are making all things subservient to them.

First, as to fraud. The ballot-box in Illinois has always enjoyed immunity from corruption until the Democrats got possession of the local offices of Chicago and Cook County two years ago. Since then two elections at least have been carried by repeating and ballot-box stuffing; one a charter election, and the other the township elections last Spring. In the latter the evidences of fraud were so overwhelming, and public indignation so threatening, that the Town Board declared there had been a failure to elect, and proceeded to appoint officers. The ballot-boxes were seized, hundreds of honest votes extracted, and more hundreds of bogus ballots substituted; there were a thousand more votes counted than had been registered on the lists of voters; men were nominally chosen to certain offices who had not even been candidates on the day of election. The outrage was so palpable and the frauds so extensive that it was simply impossible to separate the legal from the illegal votes, and hence the declaration that there had been a failure to elect. But now, on the eve of another and vastly more important election, comes a decision from the Supreme Court reversing the ruling on mere technical grounds, restoring to office the rascals who had perpetrated the frauds and benefited thereby, and indicating as the only legal way of determining the result the tedious and impracticable process of proving up the illegal votes one by one. At the same time certain judges of election engaged in frauds have been tried three times on a criminal indictment, and each time there has been a disagreement of the jury in the face of the most positive and overwhelming evidence of their guilt. I mention these things to show how favorable are the arrangements and facilities, and how small the danger of punishment, for the frauds which the Democrats have laid out for this and some other districts in the State. The Democrats are persistently pandering to the very class which has committed frauds before, and from which a manipulation of the ballot-boxes may be expected at the approaching election. In the First District of Cook County, a man named Hoxie has been nominated for Congress undisguisedly for the use of his money. He is a hog-drover by profession, and a vulgar, profane man, without schooling, ability, or respectable associations. He is one of Tom Scott's Congressional candidates, and has the support of the railroads, with which he is connected as a stockholder and in a business way. He controls the stock-yards and the pork-packing district, and there has already begun the work of colonizing and false registering. In the stock-yard voting precincts there are several hundred more voters registered now than there were at the Spring election a few months ago. An application has been made to Judge Drummond, of the United States Court, for the appointment of Supervisors under the United States law, and the animus of the Democrats is shown by the fact that they are making a formal resistance by counsel; but the law is so plain that the court cannot refuse the application, and this may possibly avert some of the fraudulent voting so confidently counted upon. In the legislative and most of the county nominations the same sort of an appeal is made to the repeaters, roughs, and ballot-box stuffers through the character of the candidates presented. Nor is this plan of campaign confined to Chicago. I learn that in Peoria the registration already exceeds the total vote of 1872 by nearly 2,000, though it is admitted that the population of that city has increased very little, if any, during the last four years. In one ward the registration shows one out of two and a half of the population—a ratio out of all proportion. So the reports from the other cities and larger towns of the State indicate that there is an agreed plan for polling as many fraudulent votes as possible, and the list will be probably swelled in the Chicago districts by actual stuffing of the ballot-boxes in some cases. This is the construction that the ruling faction of the Democrats in this State have put upon the catch-words of their campaign, "Tilden and Reform."

As to the Greenbackers, it may be of interest to those Democrats of New-York and the East, who are deluded with the notion that Tilden's candidature is in the interest of honest money, to learn that the Tilden Party and the Greenback Party in this State are practically consolidated, and that the basis of consolidation is absolute concession to the demands of the Greenbackers. At last all disguise has been thrown off, and now the campaign is carried on throughout the State by what are called "Joint Committees," consisting of the Democratic committees and Greenback committees acting together. In the majority of the Congressional districts the Democrats and Greenbackers have one and the same candidate, and the usual process has been for the Greenbackers to nominate their man and the Democrats to indorse him and take him up as their own. In the State ticket the Democrats began by adopting the Greenback candidates for Governor and Auditor, but now it is understood that they will crowd off the regular Democratic nominees for the other offices and swallow the entire State ticket of the Greenbackers. The purpose of this is the more surely to conciliate the Green back vote, which is estimated all the way from twenty to forty thousand in the State, and unite it with the Democracy. This union with the Greenbackers is expected to be especially efficacious in the vote for members of the Legislature. In this regard the scheme will be promoted by the existence of the minority representative plan of voting. In each Legislative district three members are elected, and each voter has three votes, which he may distribute or cumulate, as he chooses. In those districts where the Republicans are in the majority, but where it is expected that there will be a large Greenback vote, the plan is to nominate one straight Democrat upon whom the Democrats will plump their votes, and one Independent Greenbacker, upon whom it is expected that the Greenbackers will plump their votes. In this way the hope is not an idle one that the cumulated votes of each faction will outnumber the divided votes of the Republicans between their two candidates, and thus there are Republican districts where not more than one Republican may be elected out of the three candidates. The plan is a shrewd one, but its success will depend somewhat on the extent to which the greenback folly has made its way into Republican ranks in the rural districts. It is certain, however, that the Democrats and Greenbackers are one in this State; indeed, in this county, when the demand was made by the Chicago Times, (the only paper here supporting the Democratic Party,) and by the people for a cleansing of the Democratic legislative ticket, which is made up almost exclusively of saloon-keepers, roughs, and bummers, the only change made was to substitute a few of the Greenback candidates.

In this State "Tilden and Reform" are merely synonyms for fraud and Greenbackism.

THE POSITION IN MICHIGAN.

FOUR STATE TICKETS IN THE FIELD—THE PROHIBITION AND GREENBACK VOTE—THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN THE REGULAR PARTIES—THE CONTEST FOR CONGRESSMEN—A GAIN OF TWO INDICATED—CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

DETROIT, Friday, Oct. 27, 1876.

The political campaign in this State is drawing to a close, with the certainty of its result being the usual decisive Republican victory. The majorities will vary largely on State officers, owing to the peculiar attitude of the Greenback Party and to personal considerations, but the average Republican plurality in the State will be 15,000 or upward. The following is an accurate list of the four State tickets in the field corrected up to date:

The Democratic canvass has been a reasonably thorough one, and that party will undoubtedly succeed much better in getting out its vote than has been usual with it of late; but the Republican spirit is aroused (although the "work" proper has been less carefully organized in that party than its rival) and will make its undoubted preponderance in the State decisively felt at the polls. The Prohibition vote will hardly exceed 2,000, and such canvass as has been made in its behalf has been so rancorously Anti-Republican in tone as to promise to reduce somewhat this year the draft it usually makes on the Republican column. The real strength of the Greenbackers it is exceedingly difficult to estimate. The managers of this movement are active and very large in their predictions; undoubtedly Greenback ideas (so-called) have a strong hold on the convictions of many thousand voters in this State, but the probabilities now are that the candidates who are on that State ticket, but no other, will poll but a few thousand votes, and that "the Cooper party" will make itself felt practically only in close Legislative and Congressional districts. To this, by of forecasting of results I add for convenience this table of the vote in the State at the last four elections:

	Dem.	Rep.	Temp.
1872—President	99,581*	136,799	1,271
1873—Regents	55,082	80,700	1,113
1874—Governor	105,550	111,519	3,937
1875—Supreme Court	91,876	117,951	....

THE CONGRESSIONAL DISTRICTS.

The First Congressional District consists of this County [Wayne,] and in 1874 elected Gen. A. S. Williams, (Democrat,) over Moses W. Field, (Republican,) by 1,356 majority, the latter running nearly 1,000 votes behind his ticket, on account of his personal unpopularity. In the Spring election of last year the Democratic majority was but 542. The candidates in the field at present are Gen. A. S. Williams, (Democrat,) Henry M. Duffield, (Republican,) and John V. Reuple, (Greenback,) the latter having been, until this year, a Democratic leader of some local prominence. The uncertainty as to the real strength of the third party has made calculation as to the result here quite difficult, but Mr. Duffield's friends regard his chances as excellent. The district is naturally Democratic, however, and the probabilities point to Mr. Williams' re-election by a small majority. He will not receive more than his party strength, as the large Republican support which rallied behind him two years ago has been wholly alienated by the perfect subordination to partisan mandates which he displayed at the last session. In the Second Congressional District the candidates are Edwin Willits, (Republican,) and John J. Robison, (Democrat.) In 1874 the district gave 557 majority for the present member, Mr. Waldron, (Republican,) but in 1875, it gave 1,888 majority to the Republican judicial candidates. Mr. Willits is a strong man, and his opponent is a popular farmer. The district has been well canvassed, and will elect Mr. Willits by upward of 1,000 majority. The "Greenback" Party some time since nominated as their candidate Prof. Dunn, of Hillsdale College, but he promptly withdrew, and his place has not yet been filled, and apparently will not be. The Third District gave in 1874 1,198 Republican majority, which in the Spring election of 1875 rose to 3,291. The present Republican candidate is Jonas H. McGowan, of Coldwater, one of the most capable and promising of the younger Republican leaders in the State. His opponent is Fidus Livermore, of Jackson, a Democrat of the hard-shell variety, and an excellent member of the Bourbon species. Mr. McGowan's election is certain, although the unfortunate and disastrous failure of a private banking institution in which he was a partner will reduce his majority in localities in which there are suffering depositors. The Greenback candidate in this district is George Thomas, a Barry County farmer, of Republican antecedents.

The Fourth District elected Allen Potter (Liberal) to Congress in 1874 by 1,039 majority over Junius C. Barrows, (Republican,) against whom there was a strong and thoroughly organized "bolt," based upon personal reasons. In 1875, however, its counties rolled up 4,247 aggregate Republican majority, and it is naturally the strongest Republican district in the State. The candidates now in the field are Edwin W. Keightley, (Republican,) at present one of the Circuit Judges, and Henry Chamberlain, who has both the Democratic and Greenback nominations. Chamberlain was the last Democratic candidate for Governor, is a narrow-minded and bigoted partisan, and has been latterly prominent as the leader of the "soft-money" Democrats of this State. He belongs to "the Gov. Allen school" of financiers, and was a bitter opponent of the Tilden nomination. The "greenback" theory is strong in his district, and has split a few supporters among former Republicans, and the management which placed him on both tickets will undoubtedly secure for him many votes. This gain will, however, be offset by some defections among the better class of Democrats, and Judge Keightley's friends, while admitting that serious inroads will be made on their large margin, do not feel apprehensive as to the result. The fifth is the Grand Rapids district, and in it the "greenback" sentiment has been cultivated with more care and success than in any other portion of the State. It gave in 1874 a Republican majority of 1,158, which was increased in 1875 to 2,575. The Democrats and the Greenbackers have this year united in nominating Myron Harris, an Ottawa County Democrat, utterly without personal qualifications or public training, a bitter Copperhead during the war, and a believer in the wildest inflation doctrines. His Republican opponent is John W. Stone, a Grand Rapids lawyer of character and ability. The contest in the district has been generally regarded as close, but later advices from that region indicate that Mr. Stone's election has passed from the region of doubt. The Sixth District was two years ago carried by George H. Durand (Democrat) by 1,636 majority, through Republican dissatisfaction with the regular party candidate. Last year it gave 2,490 Republican majority. Mr. Durand has been renominated, but with his record of Democratic orthodoxy in the House confronting him, will be defeated by Mark S. Brewer, of Pontiac, a thoroughly capable and popular man. In this district the Greenback Party has not taken any action.

The Seventh District re-elected Omar D. Conger (Rep.) for a third term in 1874, by 1,982 majority; in 1875 its counties gave 4,168 Republican majority. Mr. Conger has been renominated against Ansom E. Chadwick (Dem.,) a Port Huron lawyer of moderate abilities, and will be returned without difficulty to the House, where he has earned an influential position by his industry and his readiness in debate. The Greenback candidate in this district is Henry Whiting, in the past a Republican of some local influence, and a reputable merchant of St. Clair. The Eighth District re-elected N. B. Bradley (Rep.) in 1874, by the meagre majority of 279. Last Spring it gave the Republican ticket 2,177 majority, a figure which is deceptive, from the fact that the Republican candidate for Supreme Court Judge lived in that portion of the State and led his ticket largely. The opposing candidates now are C. C. Ellsworth, (Rep.,) a lawyer of Greenville, and Frederick H. Potter, (Dem.,) a Saginaw City banker, with no third candidate in the field. This district is largely composed of sparsely settled counties, and includes the Saginaw Valley, with a strong foreign element and great industrial depression. It must be classed as doubtful, although Mr. Ellsworth's friends are confident of success. In the Ninth District, which includes the Upper Peninsula, and the upper counties of the Lake Michigan shore of the Lower Peninsula, Jay A. Hubbell (Rep.) was re-elected in 1874 without any organized opposition, receiving 9,417 majority. Last Spring the district gave 5,127 Republican majority. Mr. Hubbell is again a candidate, and will distance J. H. Kilbourne, an obscure railroad contractor of Big Rapids, who has received the Democratic and Greenback nominations. There are a few Prohibition Congressional candidates in the field, but this vote will be infinitesimal this year. As far as any record has been kept here of these nominations, they are as follows: First, John Russell, of Detroit; second, P. R. Adams, of Tecumseh (since withdrawn in favor of the Republican ticket.) If there are other candidates in the field the fact has escaped public attention.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS.

Three proposed amendments to the State Constitution will be voted upon by the people this Fall, viz.:

1. One striking out the clause from the State Constitution which prohibits the granting of license for the sale of intoxicating liquors. The probabilities are that this proposition will be adopted without much opposition. The temperance people of the State were at first inclined to make a fight, but the Supreme Court's decision that the prohibition of license would not prevent "taxing" the liquor traffic (as is now done) deprived the clause of any real value for the Prohibitionists and has made it a dead letter for their uses; it will, therefore, be expunged without organized resistance.

2. One raising the salaries of Circuit Judges from $1,500 to $2,000. This proposition has been repeatedly submitted to the people and as often rejected. Its righteousness is unquestionable, and both the State Central Committees are united in an appeal to the people for its adoption. This may save it even in this economical year.

3. One permitting constitutional amendments to be voted on at the Spring elections as well as at the biennial Fall elections.

THE CONTEST IN IOWA.

A COMPARATIVELY QUIET CANVASS—GERMAN CITIZENS SUPPORTING THE REPUBLICAN TICKET—THE FIGHT FOR CONGRESSMEN—THE DEMOCRATS OF CENTRAL IOWA DEMORALIZED—ANTICIPATIONS AS TO THE GENERAL RESULT.

From Our Own Correspondent.

DES MOINES, Wednesday, Oct. 25, 1876.

The canvass in this ever-reliable State has been comparatively a quiet one for a Presidential year. The opposition is, perhaps, weaker than ever, except in the districts along the Mississippi River. Three State tickets are in the field, and in some of the Congressional districts "independent" candidates are in nomination. There is no Legislature to elect, but two vacancies are to be filled—one in each house. Four District Judges, four District Attorneys, and fourteen Circuit Judges are to be elected. The State tickets comprise candidates for two Judgeships of the Supreme Court, and the offices of Secretary of State, Auditor of State, Treasurer of State, Attorney General, Register of the State Land Office, and Superintendent of Public Instruction. The only serious contests will be in the first three Congressional districts, where parties are nearly equally divided. In the First District, Major Joseph C. Stone, Republican, is opposed by Capt. Wesley C. Hobbs, a member of the present General Assembly from Lee County, a young and ambitious man, and one who might, if anybody could, defeat the Republican candidate. Mr. McCrary was elected two years ago by 1,863 majority. Last year, on a much heavier vote, the Republican majority was 1,129. There is no reason to believe this can now be overcome, and it will hardly be diminished. The opposition polled its full vote in 1875, and nowhere in the State is it likely to do any better now than then. On the contrary, in this district, as in the Second and Third, many Germans, who have been acting against us since 1871, will support the Republican ticket this year. The Democratic candidate is personally well liked, but this consideration will at the most only prevent an increase of the Republican majority.

In the Second District Hon. Hiram Price, one of the State's war delegation in Congress, is, after several years' retirement, again a candidate. His Democratic opponent is Hon. Jeremiah H. Murphy, at present a member of the State Senate. The district is now represented by Hon. John Q. Tufts, who was elected in 1874 by 657 majority, in a light vote. Last year the Democratic majority on Governor was 783. This preponderance we have strong hopes of overcoming in Scott County alone, where both candidates reside. This was formerly the banner Republican county of the State, but the withdrawal of the German vote, which constitutes very nearly half the vote of the county, from the Republican side, and its temporary affiliation with the opposition, has thrown the county against us the last few years. Much of this German vote will be reclaimed this year, while Mr. Price's popularity with the masses will help swell his vote, so much so that our friends have high hopes of overcoming the 1,020 majority of last year in Scott. This would carry the district without further gains. But we hope to do as much better in the rest of the district, so that we look with entire confidence for Mr. Price's election. In the Third District, now represented by Hon. Lucien L. Ainsworth, the only Democrat sent to Congress from Iowa since 1854, the Republicans have nominated Capt. Theodore W. Burdick, of Decorah, Winneshiek County, and the Democrats Jeffrey M. Griffith, of Dubuque. Mr. Ainsworth declining a renomination. Both candidates are men of ability, Capt. Burdick being a prosperous business man, his opponent a successful lawyer. The Democratic majority in the district last year was 342, and Capt. Ainsworth's in 1874, 63. This shows the district is close. A heavy German vote in Clayton County is likely to be similarly affected with that in Scott. There we hope to overcome a Democratic majority of 332 given last year, to reduce the adverse majorities in Allamakee and Dubuque, to increase our majorities in Buchanan and Winneshiek, and to hold our own in the other counties. Dubuque's last Democratic majority was 1,923. This county had quite a Liberal element, as well among native Republicans as among the German born. The former have returned to the Republican Party, those who had not previously done so having come in the present campaign. These, with the other returning Liberals, will materially reduce the Democratic preponderance. The Democratic candidate is charged by the Dubuque Times, the leading Republican paper of Northern Iowa, with withholding a large amount of property, in the shape of investments in mortgages, from assessment. To this charge the candidate responds with a suit for libel. Nothing daunted, the Times reiterates its statements and presents a showing which, it would seem well fortified by facts, demonstrates that this Iowa Democrat is as diffident as Tilden himself in the presence of the Assessor. This will have no little effect upon the Congressional vote in Dubuque County. On the Republican side, Capt. Burdick unites the party thoroughly, and will poll its full vote. We therefore look for his election, which will give us the entire delegation, but this is undoubtedly the most uncertain district, although it probably would not be if the Democrats of the Second District had a stronger candidate.

In the other districts the Republican majorities are so large as to render Republican success this year certain. It is true that in the Seventh District there is some disaffection. A few Republicans are opposing the election of Col. Henry J. B. Cummings, the regular nominee, on personal grounds. But it is not thought that sufficient votes will be withheld from him to defeat him. The Democrats have not been very happy in the choice of a candidate. Mr. Samuel J. Gilpin, a lawyer of Winterset, Madison County, is their man. He is looked upon as quite weak. The Independents will make a very fair fight in this district. Their nominee is Mr. Andrew Hastie, of Warren County, formerly a Republican. It is thought he will draw support from both parties, and possibly be second in the contest. Aside from the weakness of their candidate, the Democrats are much demoralized by the withdrawal from their ranks of Gen. James M. Tuttle, long one of the prominent Democrats of Central Iowa, and also of others who have been identified with their party of late, but who have now come out for Hayes and Wheeler. Our majority last year was 3,818. Gov. Hayes will, I think, have over 5,000 in the district. In the Fourth District Nathan C. Deering, of Mitchell County, will defeat Cyrus Foreman, of the same county, by probably 9,000 or 10,000 majority. In the Fifth District Hon. Rush Clark, of Iowa City, will be elected by perhaps 5,000 majority over Nathan Worley, of Marshalltown, Democrat and Greenbacker. In the Sixth District Hon. Ezekiel S. Sampson, of Sigourney, will be re-elected over Hon. Henry B. Hendershott, Democrat, and a couple of Greenbackers. This district gave Gov. Kirkwood 1,875 majority, less than any other interior district. But there is no cause to apprehend that Judge Sampson will lose any of last year's Republican vote, while the Greenback candidates will draw from the Democratic vote of last year, notably the Republicans who have for a few years been acting with the Democrats.

In the Eighth District, Col. William F. Sapp, of Council Bluffs, United States District Attorney during Gen. Grant's first administration, is the Republican candidate. His Democratic opponent is Hon. Samuel R. Bo'ter, a member of the General Assembly of the State from Harrison county. The latter is stumping the district, evidently under the hallucination that he is making a fight. He will be buried under some 4,000 majority, unless the signs fail. Hon. Addison Oliver, of Onawa, is the only member of the present delegation, except Judge Sampson, nominated for re-election, the others, with one exception, declining. His district, the ninth, is the largest territorially, comprising twenty-six counties. He is opposed by Hon. Samuel Rees, of Fort Dodge, also a member of the present General Assembly. The Greenbackers have a candidate in the person of C. H. Jackson, of Greene County. Judge Oliver's renomination was resisted on the ground of unsoundness on the currency question, but his general faithfulness as a member, together with his prompt attention to the wishes of his constituents, who are very largely homesteaders or settlers upon lands to which adverse claims are set up under the various land grants, and have frequent inquiries to make of the Executive departments, carried him through without much inquiry into the currency question. He will get the full party strength, and will increase the majority in the district last year, which was 8,910.

As to the general result in the State, a review of the field leads to the belief that Gov. Hayes will gain heavily on last year's majority. This was 32,728. Our side suffers no diminution this year from any cause except the diversion of a few votes to the Greenback candidates; but this loss will be more than counterbalanced by the same character of votes withdrawn from the other side. The return of some thousands of Liberals who have not acted with us since 1871; and of all those who left us in the Anti-monopoly movement of 1873, and who have not heretofore returned, and who have not gone into the independent movement, ought to increase our majority to 40,000 and over. But this is not all. The defection of Gen. Tuttle from the Democracy, with his stinging speech giving his reasons therefor, has had no small effect. His early characterization of the enemy's designs, with his disclosures in reference to the Missouri rebel claims, borne out as they have been by subsequent developments, has had a depressing effect upon the Democratic canvass. This will doubtless partially account for the little interest manifested at their State Nominating Convention, which was about the dullest and most lifeless one they have ever held, contrasting in a most marked manner with the one to elect delegates to the St. Louis Convention. There are not wanting those who believe the difference in the spirit manifested in the two conventions may be found in the fact tha the interests of Gov. Tilden made it necessary that he should have the vote of Iowa at St. Louis, and that means were found to secure the attendance of men who would support him at the State Convention, while the hope that another penny might be turned at St. Louis by those who were fortunate enough to have votes to sell thereto added to the springtime zeal of the unterrified. At the second convention, these lofty sources of inspiration were wanting. Tilden had been nominated, and no money was to be wasted on Iowa. Hence, the dullness of the later gathering. These are only surmises, but they have a strong backing of circumstance; and the fact that an Iowa Democratic paper, the Burlington Gazette, was one of the earliest to charge that Tilden's "barl of money" was potential at St. Louis, does not detract from their probability. But, be they true or not, the Democracy have conducted a spiritless campaign, and not at all one calculated to weaken the Republican strength. All these considerations conspire to indicate a larger Republican majority than ever before, except in 1872.

The conviction grows that the election of Gov. Tilden, an avowed secessionist, would have a tendency to reopen the issues of the war, and even to a renewal of the conflict itself. The rebel insolence at the last session of Congress has not been unnoticed by our people, who very naturally feel incensed that the results of the war, for the accomplishment of which nearly seventy thousand Iowans endured the hardships of that contest, should be imperiled by the threatened elevation to power of the party which, when it lost the control of the Government, raised the standard of rebellion. We realize that if facile Tilden should be elected, he could no more control the reactionary spirit of the party, even if he were so disposed, than a broom could turn back the Niagara; and we have not the remotest idea that he is so disposed, or would become so. Of course, this will not reduce Gov. Hayes' majority. I may say here that the decination of Capt. Ainsworth to be again a candidate, when he had a better prospect for election than any other Democrat in the State, is believed to have been inspired by disgust at the conduct of his political associates in Congress. At all events, while nominally supporting Tilden, he seems to take little interest in the canvass.

The immigration to Iowa is decidedly Republican. This is true, both of our own countrymen and of the Scandinavians who have for several years comprised the bulk of our foreign-born immigrants. The merement to the Republican side from immigration and naturalization, the present year, cannot be less than 6,000 votes, while to the opposition it is slight. The Democracy in Iowa this year must sustain also the loss of all of the "Anti-monopolists" who have continued to act with them up to the present year. Most of these, it is true, will not now return to the Republican fold, (although many will,) but they will signalize their devotion to the idea of a new party by supporting Cooper and Cary. I think a reasonable estimate of the state of the vote at our election would be: Hayes and Wheeler, 140,000; Tilden and Hendricks, 90,000; Cooper and Cary, 3,000.

THE ELEVATED RAILROAD SUITS.

Argument was yesterday heard before the General Term of the Supreme Court in the matter of the petition of the Gilbert Elevated Railway Company relative to acquiring title to real estate in this City. The petition is for the appointment of Commissioners to condemn certain land on South Fifth Avenue, (formerly Laurens street) near Amity street, and to appraise its value. It cites the fact that this land is required for the sinking of foundations four feet square and five feet deep to sustain columns intended to support the Elevated Railroad. The appointment of these Commissioners is opposed on the ground that the petitioner is not authorized to construct and operate the proposed railroad or any other, and that it has, therefore, no right to institute proceedings to acquire land. The many questions which were brought up in the suit of the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company against the Gilbert Company will also be raised in this, so that it is a virtual transferring of that suit from the Superior to the Supreme Court. Decision was reserved.

LAW REPORTS.

THE MURDER OF OFFICER SCOTT.

CONTINUATION OF THE TRIAL OF JOHN HURLEY, THE ALLEGED MURDERER.

The trial of John Hurley, indicted together with two others for murder in the second degree, killing Officer Edward Scott, on the night of July 1, was resumed yesterday morning in the Kings County Court of Sessions, before Judge Henry A. Moore, and Associate Justices Walfert and McKibben. The prosecution rested its case, and Counsellor Weinberg opened in behalf of the defense. He claimed that he would be able to show that Hurley did not throw the stone, from the fact that he occupied a position at the time which would have rendered it impossible for him to have done so. He also claimed that the confession said to have been made by the prisoner to Judge Riley was made under threats and intimidation, and that Hurley was innocent. Mrs. Mary Weldon saw the disturbance, and saw Whelahan and Officer Scott step out of the gutter together. She saw Hurley standing on the steps near Carberry's liquor store. Hurley was very drunk. She looked again at Officer Scott and saw him fall; heard a stone whiz over her left shoulder and strike Scott on the head, but did not see Hurley throw it. John Connolly testified that he was present at Raymond Street Jail at the time of the confession alleged to have been made by Hurley to Justice Riley. Hurley said it was pretty hard to make a confession, and Carberry said that if he did so all those under arrest could get out, go to work, and raise money to defend him in his trial; if something of that kind was not done it would be another Rogers affair; Carberry offered to give $10 himself. John Hurley, the prisoner, was sworn, and testified that he was twenty-two years old, and had been in Brooklyn about seven years; knew Officer Scott by sight; never had any words or trouble with him; remember the night he was injured; was in Carberry's saloon on that night drinking; left there about 10:30 o'clock; went as far as Skillman street; met persons there whom he knew and went with them to Sanford street, thence to Pinehing avenue, thence to Classon avenue, and thence down Flushing avenue to Stephen street; drank several times during his travels; when he got to the corner of Myrtle avenue and Stephen street; saw a crowd there; did not know any of them; did not see Officer Scott, or any other officer; was drunk; did not throw any stone that night; did not have any quarrel with Officer Scott, or any other officer; was arrested on the night of July 1, have been in jail ever since; James Carberry came to him in jail and told him if he would confess all the other parties would get out and raise money to defend him, and if not it would be another Rogers affair; the next day he was taken to Judge Riley's office; believed that if he confessed it would be better for him, and that his friends would raise money to employ counsel; the confession he made to Judge Riley at that time was untrue. On cross-examination witness said that Justice Riley told him if he would confess, it would be a thousand times better for him; he told Justice Riley that he threw the stone, but it was because Carberry told him that if he confessed he (Carberry) would give a bail at his place and raise money enough to employ counsel and get him out of the scrape altogether, or at most with not more than a year's imprisonment; was arrested last Spring for assaulting Officer McCaffery, of the Ninth Precinct with a stone; the whole story he told to Capt. Leech was untrue. At 4 o'clock the trial was adjourned until 10 o'clock this morning.

UNITED STATES SUPREME COURT.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—The following decisions have been rendered in the United States Supreme Court:

No. 25.—The President, &c, of the Chemung Canal Bank, plaintiffs in error, vs. Goodwin, Lowery & Co.—In error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Western District of Wisconsin.—Mr. Justice Bradley delivered the opinion of the Court, affirming the judgment of said Circuit Court in this case with costs; dissenting, Mr. Justice Story.

No. 51.—Mary Regan et al., plaintiffs in error, vs. H. S. Carter et al.—In error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Missouri.—Mr. Justice Davis delivered the opinion of the court, affirming the judgment of the said Circuit Court in this cause, with costs.

No. 7.—Peyton Grymes, Appellant, vs Dallas Sandford, Administrator, &c.—Appeal from the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Virginia.—Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion of the Court, reversing the decree of the said Circuit Court with costs, and remanding the cause, with directions to dismiss the bill.

No. 36.—John L. Hurst, Plaintiff in error, vs. The Western and Atlantic Railroad Company.—In error to the Circuit Court of the United States for the Eastern District of Tennessee. Mr. Chief Justice Waite delivered the opinion of the Court, affirming the judgment of the said Circuit Court in the cause with costs.

No. 67.—Edward C. Carrington, plaintiff in error, vs. Marvin Eastwood.—In error to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia.—Mr. Chief Justice Waite announced the decision of the court, affirming the judgment of the said Supreme Court in this cause, with costs and interest.

No. 42.—Vincent vs. Lyon et al.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Missouri.—The single question in this case is raised on the refusal of the court below to receive oral testimony to impeach the validity of a patent from the United States to the State of Missouri for the land in question, under the act of 1850, known as the Swamp Land Grant, the purpose of the testimony being to show that the land was not, in point of fact, swamp land within the meaning of the act. The ruling was that the patent from the United States for the land as swamp land under the act referred to concluded the question, and the oral testimony could not be admitted in relation to it. This ruling is affirmed here, the court being of the opinion that the act devolved upon the Land Department the duty of determining what lands were of the description granted, and made the decision of the Secretary of the Interior, as the head of that department, controlling on the subject. Justice Miller delivered the opinion.

No. 77.—Kitchen vs. Randolph et al.—Appeal from the Circuit Court for the Eastern District of Pennsylvania.—On this motion to vacate the supersedeas the court holds that, under the law as it now stands, the service of a writ of error or the perfection of an appeal within sixty days, Sundays exclusive, after the rendering of the judgment or the passing of the decree complained of, is an indispensable prerequisite to a supersedeas, and that it is not within the power of a Justice or Judge of the Appellate Court to grant a stay of process on the judgment or decree, if this has not been done. The appeal in this case was taken after the expiration of sixty days, and the motion to vacate the supersedeas is for that reason granted. The Chief Justice delivered the opinion.

No. 41.—Birdsall et al. vs. Coolidge.—Error to the Circuit Court for the District of Nevada. In this action, which is for an infringement of a patent for an improvement in machines for amalgamating gold and silver, it is decided that juries, in an action at law for the infringement of a patent, are required to find the actual damage sustained by the plaintiff in consequence of the unlawful acts of the defendant. Power is given to the court in such a case to enter judgment for any sum above the amount of the verdict, not exceeding three times the amount of the same, together with costs; but the jury are strictly limited in their finding to the actual damages which the plaintiff has sustained by the infringement. Reversed. Mr. Justice Clifford delivered the opinion.

No. 52.—West Wisconsin Railway Company vs. Board of Supervisors of Trempealeau County.—Error to the Supreme Court of Wisconsin.—This was a claim of the railway company to exemption of certain lands granted to them by the State. It is held that a well-grounded doubt of the intention to exempt is fatal in such cases; prima facie, every presumption is against it. It is only where the terms of the exemption are too explicit to admit of fair construction that it can be supported. The same question substantially was decided in Tucker against Ferguson, 22 Wall., 527. Affirmed. Mr. Justice Swayne delivered the opinion.

No. 50.—Beaver vs. Taylor.—Error to the Circuit Court for the Southern District of New-York. In this case the point decided is, that where the entire charge of the court to the jury is excepted to, or a series of propositions contained in it is excepted to in gross, and any portion thus excepted to is sound, the exception cannot be sustained. Affirmed. Mr. Justice Hunt delivered the opinion.

No. 63.—John S. Shaw, Appellant, vs. The United States.—The argument of this cause was continued by Mr. Joseph Casey, of counsel for the appellant, and by Assistant Attorney General Smith for the appellees, and concluded by Mr. Joseph Casey for the appellant.

No. 75.—James Hendricks, Plaintiff in Error, vs. A. G. Lindsey, et al.—The argument of this cause was commenced by Mr. I. Lawson, of counsel for the plaintiff in error.

The Chief Justice made the following announcement to the Bar: "We shall meet on Monday of next week, as usual, to read opinions and hear motions. If counsel from abroad, coming here with the expectation that their causes would be reached before that time in the regular call of the docket, shall then be present and wish to be heard, we will continue in session to give them an opportunity for that purpose. As soon as all such cases are submitted, the court will be adjourned until Monday, Nov. 13, after which the rules requiring the argument of causes in their order upon the docket will be rigidly enforced."

Adjourned until to-morrow.

THE TRIAL OF BECKWITH FOR FORGERY.

The trial of Charles R. Beckwith, formerly confidential clerk and cashier to Benjamin T. Babbitt, the well-known soap manufacturer, on the specific charge of forging a receipt of John H. Poole & Co. for $608 05, on August 14, 1871, was resumed before Judge Sutherland, yesterday, in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Assistant District Attorney Bell having closed the case for the prosecution on Friday, the defense was opened yesterday. Mr. Frank J. Dupignac, who is associated with ex-Judge Fullerton for the prisoner, examined a number of Beckwith's intimate friends in order to prove the good character of the accused, and show that the alleged forged receipt was not in his handwriting. Charles H. Crary, insurance broker; Charles H. Robinson, insurance clerk; Giles W. Dart, hotel-keeper; Arthur F. Wilmarth, Vice President of the Home Insurance Company; Edward H. Betts, one of the Managers of the Manhattan Insurance Company; De Witt C. Ward, Henry W. Hart, and Gilmam Cudamore testified to the good character of the prisoner, and that from their knowledge of his handwriting the alleged forged document was not in his handwriting. The prisoner did not take the stand on his own behalf, and Judge Fullerton announced the close of the case for the defense. Assistant District Attorney Bell therefore offered to show, by transcripts of a like nature, recorded at other times, that the particular transaction mentioned in the indictment could not have been accidental. Judge Fullerton strenuously opposed the admission of such testimony, contending that its introduction after the prosecution had closed their case would be a reopening of the entire case, for which no precedent could be quoted, and the springing of a trap for which the defense was utterly unprepared. After a long discussion, Judge Sutherland decided to admit the testimony, under the protest of Judge Fullerton, who excepted to each and every question and declined to cross-examine the witnesses. Four persons who did business sled, but we cannot make a precedent in view of the Court of Appeals' decisions for striking out general denials, whether specific or by ignorance. There must be common law evidence before a jury. Motion denied, with $10 costs.

Matter, of Welsh.—There is no just distinction between this case and in re Phillips Co. N. Y. 16. That seems to have been a case of repairing a sidewalk. The walk as altered was a novelty not discussed, and it would not be seemly for any court inferring to that of last resort to draw a subtle distinction which would touch upon the spirit of the case cited. The assessment must be vacated.

Jones vs. The Mayor, &c.—Motion granted upon the payment of costs to date and $10 costs of opposing this motion, and the order should state that the court in allowing the amendment does not pass upon its sufficiency.

Mordant vs. Niles et al.—The provisions of 2 R. S., 333. Sec. 44-46, only apply to civil actions in County Justices' Courts. There is no similar provision in the District Court act, nor in the Revised Statute under the head of summary proceedings. On the contrary, in 3d Edit., 330, Sec. 33-34, we find the words, "at the time appointed in said summons." This being so, Niles, was regular, and equity has never exercised jurisdiction in these proceedings merely to open a default. Mordant had ample time to appear and defend, and there was no fraud in the conduct of the proceedings. Besides, Mordant does not come in with clean hands in view of the manner in which he got possession. The motion to continue the injunction is denied, and the temporary injunction dissolved with $10 costs.

Bainbridge vs. Berne.—Motion to vacate for irregularity denied. The detaunt may be opened upon payment, within five days, of trial fee and $10 costs of this motion, and the expenses of the plaintiff in coming from and returning to Baltimore to attend the trial, and stipulating, within a like period, to try the issue peremptorily on the second Monday of November; otherwise denied, with $10 costs.

West vs. Nickerson.—The default should be opened, without costs, and without any conditions as to the judgment standing as security. The default ought not to have been taken in view of the agreement. Mr. H. says he knows nothing of such an agreement, but he has not heard from his representative.

Morrison vs. Green.—The claim is not for the services but for the disbursements. It is not alleged that defendant requested these outlays, or that he promised to pay them, nor are they distinctly alleged to have been necessary. The services themselves consisted in part of statements made to individual members. This looks very like lobbying. Upon the whole, I am unable to say that the demurrer is absolutely frivolous, and I think it is entitled to an argument at Special Term. Motion denied, with $10 costs.

The Cambridge Valley National Bank vs. Mathewson.—I do not see why the order of July 19, so far as it places this cause on the short calendar, was made as against the maker, in view of the deliberate denial by Mr. Justice Donohue of the motion to place it on such calendar. But, as the order was made, I suppose the plaintiff should be deprived of the benefit thereof, merely because he was a little late in attending the circuit; but it is only fair that the plaintiff should be thought capable of putting it to be marked down, the defendant had dismissed the complaint. In that event the Court would have imposed as much costs as the defendant would have to pay to be let in when they defanited. The case may, therefore, be restored to the short calendar for the first Friday of November, on payment of $50 within five days.

Wyman vs. Hoffman.—I do not see upon what principle the defendant hoped to sustain this motion without even an allegation of insolvency. The defendant, though not charged with insolvency, swears that he is worth $75,000. The motion must be denied, with $10 costs.

Norsen vs. Duenkel et al.—No allegation of proof of Mrs. Currie's insolvency. Her affidavit was denied that she is worth $75,000. Motion denied, with $10 costs.

Spaulding vs. Martin.—I do not think Mr. Cudlipp can sustain his position, but as he may desire to take the opinion of an appellate court I will not shut him out. The default may be opened on payment of trial fee and $10 costs of motion, but without prejudice to the judgment of foreclosure.

Shaw vs. Heyman.—Motion for a stay of proceedings denied without costs.

Grant vs. Cranston.—Upon the re-argument of this motion, ordered that the motion to vacate the judgment by confession be granted, unless an amended statement covering the facts set forth in the affidavits used upon the motion for a re-argument be filed within ten days, and unless Mr. Burrell is paid within a like period $10 costs of the first motion and $10 costs of this motion.

SUPREME COURT—CIRCUIT—PART I.

By Judge Donohue.

Izguierdo vs. Gould, &c.—Allowance of $280.

Wines vs. The Mayor, &c.—I think the case is one in which, for the interest of all parties, the law should be settled by the General Term, and shall direct a verdict for the plaintiff, exceptions to be heard in the first instance at the General Term.

Colton vs. Morrissey, &c.—Allowance of $1,500.

SUPERIOR COURT—SPECIAL TERM.

By Chief Justice Curtis.

Waring vs. Jackson.—Motion to vacate judgment, and execution issued thereon denied with costs.

Agnew vs. Keith.—Motion to vacate orders of publication, &c., in actions Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4, denied with costs.

Same vs. Same.—Motions in actions Nos. 1 and 2, to overrule answer as frivolous, and for judgment, granted without costs.

Olinger et al. vs. De Wolf.—The prayer of the petition is so far granted as to restrain the defendant, Daniel T. Wolf, from prosecuting the suits therein mentioned until the further order of the court.

Donnelly vs. Bergen.—It is difficult to determine from the conflicting pleadings and affidavits on this motion what are the facts. Those can be more satisfactorily ascertained on the trial. The motion for a preliminary injunction is denied, with costs to the defendant to abide the event of the suit.

By Judge Sedgwick.

Mason vs. Decker.—Case and amendments left with the clerk at chambers.

THREE HEAVY BURGLARIES.

A NASSAU STREET STORE SAFE ROBBED OF $25,000 WORTH OF JEWELRY—A BROADWAY FANCY-GOODS DEALER LOSES NEARLY $10,000 WORTH OF GOODS—NO CLUE TO THE BURGLARS OBTAINED.

At 8 o'clock yesterday morning, when Mr. Abraham Stein, the senior member of the firm of Stein Brothers, jewelry dealers, attempted to unlock the door of the store, which is on the second floor of No. 66 Nassau street, he was startled to find that the key would not turn in the lock. On trying the knob he found that the door was unfastened. Mr. Stein entered the store and found everything in a state of confusion. The books and papers were scattered about the floor, and on glancing at the safe, which stands against the north wall of the office, he was horrified to find it open and empty. Mr. Stein immediately notified Capt. Petty, and an investigation was made, which resulted in the discovery that almost the entire stock of Messrs. Stein & Bro. had been carried off. It was evident that the burglars had been locked in the premises when they were closed for the night, and during Sunday had entered the store of Messrs. Stein & Bro. by unlocking the door with a duplicate key, the door being secured only with an ordinary lock. They then forced open the safe, which was an old one, and not very secure, and emptied it. The goods taken consisted of 156 gold and silver watches, 350 gold and enameled lockets, 3 sets of diamond earrings, 11 diamond rings, consisting of solitaires, three stones, clusters, and one with an emerald centre, one solitaire diamond ring weighing four and one-half carats; 1 diamond set, (pin and earrings;) 5 sets of diamond studs, 3 diamond collar-buttons, 6 diamond breastpins, (solitaires;) 200 gold sealrings, consisting of amethysts, cameos, &c.; 600 scale rings, 200 pairs of gold sleeve-buttons, 150 sets of gold studs, and 50 sets of gold jewelry, and about four thousand pennyweights of gold waistcoat, opera, guard, and neck chains. The value of the property is over $25,000. Among the articles stolen was a diamond cross valued at $500, and nearly three hundred gold chains. It is supposed that the burglars belong to the same gang that robbed Horton's jewelry store in Fulton street about a month ago. Inspector Thorne and Detective Elder visited the scene of the robbery yesterday afternoon, and every effort will be made to arrest the guilty parties. The tools left in the store by the burglars, consisting of two sectional "jimmies," a sledge, a common jimmy, a brace and bit, and several other articles, are at the New Street Police Station.

Another large haul of burglars was made on Sunday night at the store of Abraham Besthoff, No. 903 Broadway. Mr. Besthoff is an extensive dealer in fancy goods, jewelry, and fine leather articles, dealing chiefly in imported goods. His store is situated on the northwest corner of Broadway and Twentieth street. The store has a frontage of twenty-five feet on Broadway and sixty feet on Twentieth street. The front doors are fastened by an ordinary case lock, and also a patent Yale lock. A wire screen running along the front of the store further protects the doors. This screen is fastened by a heavy iron, secured by a Romer padlock and also a patent Yale padlock. On the Twentieth street front there are two windows, which are secured by stout iron bars. The door on the Twentieth street side is secured by an ordinary case lock, a wooden beam, and an iron bar. The upper portion of this door is of glass, covered by wooden shutters, which are pierced with holes. Eight gaslights burn in the store all night, and from Broadway an uninterrupted view of the interior of the store can be obtained. About four years ago an attempt was made by burglars to rob the store by entering the basement and boring holes through the floor into the store, but this proved unsuccessful. This basement is now occupied as a restaurant. As a further precaution against thieves, Mr. Besthoff permitted an Italian fruit-vender to place a stand on the corner on the condition that he would watch the premises, and has employed as a watchman Michael Kenner, of No. 316 East Twenty-seventh street. Mr. Besthoff was the last to leave the store on Saturday, and left everything secure and in good order. The watchman was on duty on Saturday night, and left at 6 o'clock on Sunday morning, when everything was secure and in good order. The Italian fruit-vender stood in front of the store the entire day and left at dusk, and during all this time did not notice anything wrong about the place. Shortly before 10 o'clock, Kenner, the watchman, in going his rounds, noticed that the side door of the store was open. He at once sent for Mr. Besthoff, who, on entering the store, found everything in confusion. The burglars had taken one of the large muslin showcase covers in which to pack their booty, and thirteen Russia leather traveling bags which were missing had also been used for the same purpose. A careful examination of the stock showed that the following property had been carried off:

10 gold-mounted canes	300
13 Russia-leather bags	156
16 fine opera glasses	782
50 dozen English pocket-knives	1,200
50 Russia leather companions	150
6 Chatelaine watches	900
Jewelry, fancy goods, amounting in value to	5,300
Total value	$9,210

Capt. Williams, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, was notified, and made a thorough investigation, from which he came to the conclusion that the place had been entered by means of false keys. There were no marks of violence about the doors or windows, and no noise was heard about the place. Mr. Besthoff says that there was no possibility of there being a "screw-away" in the store when he left on Saturday night, as he examined the premises thoroughly before he left. The burglars evidently entered by the front door, and a confederate probably locked the door and the bar across the wire screen after them, and they made their exit by the side door. How they could have carried off so much property without attracting the attention of the Police or passers by is a mystery.

During Sunday night the store of A. & W. W. Stumway, No. 471 Broadway, was entered by burglars by means of false keys, and robbed of goods valued at $560. No clue to the thieves has been obtained.

OUTRAGE ON A RESPECTABLE CITIZEN.

Mr. S. Peck, a respectable merchant doing business at No. 595 Broadway, was yesterday arraigned before Justice Kasmire, at the Washington Place Police Court, on a charge of stealing a gold watch and chain from a guest of the Coleman House. On being brought before the Judge he expressed great indignation at the proceedings. His Honor asked him the cause of the arrest, and he related the following facts: Yesterday at about 9 o'clock, having some business to transact with Stern Brothers on Sixth avenue, he jumped on a Broadway car and proceeded up town as far as Twenty-third street, where he got off and walked through Twenty-third street to Sixth avenue and transacted his business with Stern Brothers. On leaving the store he got on the front platform of a Sixth avenue car. He asked a gentleman standing on the platform to oblige him with a light for his cigar, when Detective McGoldric, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, and another man jumped on the car, and, without a word of explanation, arrested him. He demanded to know by what authority he was arrested, but no explanation was given him until he arrived at the Thirtieth Street Police Station. There the man who had accompanied the detective charged him with the theft of a gold watch, chain, and locket, the property of a guest of the Coleman House, valued at $500. Mr. Peck denied all knowledge of the occurrence, and loudly protested his innocence. Several gentlemen came to the court and made affidavit to his good standing and respectability. It seems several robberies have been committed at the Coleman House, and the proprietor has been unable to detect the thieves. On Tuesday night a man occupied a room over night, and in the morning paid his bill and departed. Soon afterward Mr. Lizardi, who had a room adjoining the one occupied by the gentleman who had gone, reported the loss of a gold watch, chain, and locket, valued at $500, and suspicion at once fell on the departed guest. He was followed by Detective McGoldrio and the night clerk, Samuel McMichael, who missed him in the crowd, and were looking for him when they saw Mr. Peck get on a car, and they arrested him as he bore some resemblance to the man for whom they were looking. Justice Kasmire honorably discharged Mr. Peck, and expressed his disgust that such an outrage should be perpetrated on a respectable citizen without the slightest cause. Mr. Peck will at once commence proceedings against Sergeant Keating, Detective McGoldric, and Mr. S. McMichael, the night clerk of the Coleman House.

A DESPERATE CONVICT.

Patrick Burns, a notorious thief and burglar, was sentenced in the Essex County Court of Sessions at Newark, last Saturday, to seven years' imprisonment for breaking into Somers & Co.'s hat factory and stealing $3,000 worth of goods. Yesterday morning Burns was required to attend court as a witness in behalf of Oschward and Ryan, the burglars who are on trial for the murder of Officer Brock. He was closely guarded by officers and removed in the "Black Maria." Before leaving the jail, however, a loaded revolver was taken from one of his pockets. After his arrival at the court-house it was observed that he fingered his handcuffs as though he had a key with which to open them. The officers undertook to search him, but he resisted desperately, and catching Officer Smith's finger in his mouth, bit it severely. He also bit him on the forehead. The officers finally overpowered him, but found nothing upon him. He declared that it was his intention, if he had not been disarmed, to kill Officer Smith, and that he would yet accomplish his purpose. Judge Titsworth directed that in future all prisoners brought from the jail to the court-house be searched before leaving the jail.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY CONVENTION.

THE COMMITTEE ON NOMINATIONS TO MEET AGAIN TO-DAY AND REPORT THIS EVENING.

The Republican County Convention will again assemble at Republican Hall, this evening, to finish its work. The Committee on Nominations appointed at the last meeting has been busily at work since its adjournment. Views in regard to the proper policy to be pursued have been interchanged, and the names of a number of candidates for the various offices to be filled have been received, and their fitness and availability carefully considered. Nothing definite, however, will be decided until this afternoon, when the committee will again meet and conclude their labors preparatory to the meeting of the convention this evening.

HOME POLITICAL WORK.

"E. W. B." cannot vote if he changes his residence.

The Seventh District Republican Congressional Convention met at Concordia Hall, Avenue A, last evening, and adjourned until this evening at 9:30 o'clock.

The Republicans of Roslyn, Long Island, will hold a mass-meeting to-morrow evening, when addresses will be made by Hon. George William Curtis, John M. Crane, Mr. Milliken, and others.

The German Republican Campaign Club of the First Assembly District met at No. 321 Greenwich street last night. The meeting was well attended, and several speakers addressed the association.

A grand mass-meeting of the colored Republicans will be held at Phenix Hall, No. 16 Court street, Brooklyn, this evening, at 8 o'clock, in connection with a grand parade of the colored Boys in Blue of Kings County.

The Republican General Committee of Richmond County met yesterday afternoon at Diederich's Hotel, Clifton, Staten Island, and appointed Thursday night as the time for the last grand parade of the campaign. Distinguished speakers will be present.

A deputation of colored citizens of the Fifth Assembly District called upon Controller Green yesterday, and presented him with a series of resolutions indorsing his nomination for Mayor. Mr. Green thanked the deputation for their indorsement, after which they withdrew.

At a meeting of the independent voters of the Sixteenth Assembly District, held Sunday evening, at No 420 East Twentieth street, resolutions were passed indorsing the Republican National and State tickets, and asking all independents of the district to join the association.

A grand ratification meeting, under the auspices of the Twenty-third Ward Colored Men's Hayes and Wheeler Campaign Club, will be held at the corner of One Hundred and Fiftieth street and Third avenue, on Thursday evening. It is expected that eminent speakers will be present.

Commissioner Brigham, of the Jersey City Police Board, having accepted the Republican nomination for the Assembly, will probably notify the Police Board at their meeting to-morrow of his resignation from that board. It is said that Gov. Bedle will appoint ex-Chief of Police Fowler to fill the vacancy.

A meeting of the Eighth Senatorial District Boys in Blue will be held on next Saturday evening at Terrace Garden, to ratify the Republican national, State, and county tickets. Prominent speakers will be present, and due notice of the programme for the evening will be given in the advertising columns of THE TIMES.

BROOKLYN CAMPAIGN NOTES.

Tunis G. Bergen declined the Republican nomination in the Fourth Assembly District last week. He was renominated last night, and accepted.

Col. Stevenson, who has accepted the nomination for Assembly from the Republicans of the Fifth District, is one of the most popular young men in the party. His election is assured.

There is not a sufficient number of polling places in many of the wards. In the Ninth District of the Seventh Ward, if every man registered votes, it will only allow three-fourths of a minute for each vote.

Hon. James G. Blaine will discuss the issues of the campaign in the Rink on Clermont avenue, next Friday evening. Mr. Blaine will also review the Brooklyn Boys in Blue, who will march past the Rink under command of General E. B. Fowler.

The gentlemen who composed the reform element in the McLaughlin General Committee, and who retired from that organization in disgust last week, are about to call an indignation meeting at the Academy of Music to denounce the Boss and the Ring.

Richard Marvin, the Republican candidate for Assembly in the Second District, is one of the most effective workers for the whole ticket to be found in the Republican ranks. He should secure the vote of every Republican and Independent Democrat in his district.

Gen. Thomas Dakin, late of the American Rifle Team, who has been "spoken of" for almost every place on the Democratic county and city tickets, was last evening named by the Ring to run against Hon. S. B. Chittenden in the Third Congressional District. Ex-Mayor Hunter refused the nomination.

The Morgan Wigwam, corner of Classon and Putnam avenues, was the scene of a grand Republican rally last evening, held under the auspices of the Seventh Ward Young Men's Republican Association. Among the speakers were Gen. E. L. Townsend, Hon. Ripley Ropes, Corp. Tanner, and Hon. Eugene D. Berri.

Like Alderman Rowley, Alderman Ray, of the Thirteenth Ward, has provoked the hostility of the Ring. The Ring nominee in the ward is Rodney C. Thursby, a member of the old Excise Board of infamous memory. Thursby will have the support of every man who can be influenced by the Kingsley-McLaughlin Ring. The honest men of the ward should support Mr. Ray.

Alderman Rowley is making an energetic canvass in the Seventh Ward. He has earned the bitter enmity of the Ring by his course in the Board of Aldermen, and no effort will be spared by the public plunderers to defeat him. Every Republican, and not only every Republican, but every Democrat who has the interests of good government at heart, should work for him from now until sundown on election day.

A grand mass meeting took place last evening at Republican Head-quarters under the auspices of the Fourth and First Ward Republican Associations. The attendance was very large. Addresses were made by Hon. Ripley Ropes, James F. Manning, of Worcester, Mass., Col. Charles C. Trowbridge, the Republican Candidate for State Prison Inspector, and others. A mass meeting of colored citizens, to be addressed by Rev. Henry Highland Garnett, William E. Brown and others, will be held in the same place this evening.

TAMMANY DELEGATIONS DIVIDED.

The Seventh District Tammany Aldermanic Convention met last night at Seventh avenue and Twenty-sixth street, but failed to agree on nominating candidates for Aldermen. The delegates from the Eleventh and Fifteenth Assembly Districts were in favor of William Sauer and William Salmon, and the Eighteenth and Sixteenth Districts put forward Hugh F. Farrell and George Kelly. As no compromise could be effected, the Eleventh and Fifteenth Assembly Delegations withdrew from the Convention with the express intention to place in nomination Salmon and Sauer, and the Sixteenth and Twenty-first Districts remained in the hall and nominated Kelly and Farrell.

A PROMINENT DEMOCRAT FOR HAYES AND WHEELER.

A Republican mass-meeting was held at the Opera-house in Newark, N. J., last evening, and addresses were made by prominent gentlemen who have hitherto acted with the Democratic Party The platform was crowded with well-known residents, and all the available space in the hall was taken. npAddresses were delivered upon the duty of Democrats at the polls on the 7th of November next, by Hon. Charles H. Frost, of Maine, and Hon. Nehemiah Perry, of Newark. Mr. Perry has always been identified with the Democracy of the State. He was at one time elected on the Democratic ticket to the Mayoralty of the city, and two years ago was prominently named for the Democratic nomination for the Governorship, which Gov. Bedle subsequently captured. He reviewed caustically the claims of Gov. Tilden to be regarded as a reformer. Mr. Frost's address was an eloquent review of the issues of the day. Many Democrats attended the meeting, and the greatest enthusiasm prevailed.

THE ACADEMY OF SCIENCES.

A special meeting of the Biological section of the New-York Academy of Sciences (late Lyceum of Natural History) was held at the Library of the New-York Aquarium, corner of Broadway and Thirty-fifth street, last evening. The first part of the meeting was devoted to the exhibition of specimens, and some very beautiful emeralds and rubellites and rutile in quartz, formerly belonging to the late Dr. Chiltern, were shown by Prof. A. E. Foote. Prof. O. P. Hubbard exhibited a perfect fossil tooth of the elephant, weighing thirteen pounds, found at Rochester, N. Y., and a cast of one from gravel beds at Homer, N. Y., both of which, from the description given by Prof. Owen in his Osteology, of the dentition of the Indian elephant, were the sixth molar in succession, beginning to be developed at about the fiftieth year, and continued on into the next century. Interesting addresses were delivered by Prof. Day, Chairman of the Biological Section, on "Thoughts on Evolution," and by Mr. Frederick Mather, on "Fish-culture at the Aquarium." At the close of the meeting, the audience, by invitation of the proprietor, visited the large hall of the Aquarium proper, and inspected the numerous objects of interest contained therein.

RECEPTION TO GOV. TILDEN.

BY THE MANHATTAN CLUB—SPEECHES BY AUGUST BELMONT, SENATOR WALLACE, OF PENNSYLVANIA, AND OTHERS.

The Manhattan Club tendered a reception last night to Gov. Tilden. About three hundred gentlemen were present, including the members of the Democratic National Committee. An attempt was made at a grand spread, but it signally failed. The speaking was done by August Belmont, Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania, ex-Gov. Walker, of Virginia, and Hon. John P. Stockton, of New-Jersey. Mr. Tilden said nothing except to tender his sincere thanks to a torchlight procession from New-Jersey which he reviewed from the steps of the Club-house. He contented himself most of the time with standing in the middle of the reception room and greeting his friends. It was 9:30 o'clock when he reached the Club-house, and soon after August Belmont called the gentlemen to order in the parlors of the second floor and made his speech, which was a long discourse on Tilden and reform. The Manhattan Club had never met, he said, upon a similar occasion under more favorable circumstances. Victory was in the air. Another week of earnest labor, and the banner of Tilden and Hendricks would be borne in triumph all over the land. The campaign on the part of the Republicans had been conducted in a most shameful manner. They had assailed the character of the Democratic candidates with the vilest slander. They had trumped up stories about proposed illegal voting and fraud. Every means which the genius of indecency and despair could call up the Republicans had made use of. Among these false stories was the one recently circulated that the prospect of the election of Samuel J. Tilden had had the effect of lowering the price of United States bonds in England. It was a base fabrication, which Mr. Belmont modestly said he had thoroughly refuted, and in such a manner as to strike the Republicans of New-York with a paroxysm of unprecedented emotion. Mr. Belmont reviewed his refutation for the edification of his audience, and also gave a long résumé of his ideas of public finances and national credit, in the course of which he made a personal attack on Hon. E. W. Stoughton, whom he seemed to regard as guilty of most unheard-of presumption in daring to question the logic of his recent letter of refutation referred to. He rung in a few words about the great Charles Francis Adams, and in a few other words totally demolished the United States Attorney General, Alphonso Taft. He also took occasion to blow his own horn, reminding Mr. Taft that among the subscribers to the six per cent. Treasury notes of 1861 was the firm of August Belmont & Co., while many others who were not subscribers had since become notorious for their short career of Radicalism, administration patronage, and bankruptcy. After Mr. Belmont came Senator Wallace, of Pennsylvania. He spoke in mysterious terms. He said it was barely possible—and when he said this he looked as though he knew a great deal that he did not care to divulge—it was barely possible that Pennsylvania would astonish the world. It wouldn't be a bit wonderful if it gave a tolerable large majority for Tilden and Hendricks. At this speech of Mr. Wallace the club-house resounded with cheers. Ex-Gov. Walker, of Virginia, followed. His State was good for 10,000 majority, he said, and he would not take off a single vote from that estimate. He also predicted a "solid South," provided, of course, that the Democratic voters should not be intimidated by the negroes and United States soldiers. After Gov. Walker came Hon. John P. Stockton, of New-Jersey. He ventured the rash prediction that New-Jersey would come down with ten thousand majority next Tuesday. Mr. Belmont had the good sense to cut off the speech-making at this point, notwithstanding that a number of gentleman had come fully prepared to say a word for the cause. Mr. Belmont thanked the gentlemen for their indulgent attention and invited every body present to go down to supper. The supper-room was slow to open and it was at least a half hour later before anybody was admitted. A rush followed the opening, and it was found that instead of a good supper there was only a very small lunch, with a few bottles of champagne for the sole use of the members of the club, Gov. Tilden, and the distinguished gentlemen from abroad.

Among those present at the reception were Hon. H. Hickan, of Delaware; Hon. James Gallagher, of Connecticut; Mayor Lewis, of New-Haven; George Tickner Curtis, Gen. Fitz John Porter, William Wood, President of the Board of Education; George W. McLean, of New-York; Hon. Elias Beach, Senator Bixby, Hon. William E. Hoyt, of New-Jersey; Hon. S. H. Hammond, of New-York; Milton Sayler, of Ohio; Royal Phelps, Hon. Fernando Wood, Hon. S. S. Cox, Hon. James D. Thayer, Hon. Benjamin A. Willis, Hon. John R. Brady, Hon. Abram S. Hewitt, Smith Ely, Jr., Hon. John T. Hoffman, Hon. Joel Parker, of New-Jersey; Hon. John R. Buchtel, of Ohio; Gen. John E. Ward, of Georgia; Hon. D. R. Skelling, of Illinois; Joseph Pulitzer, of Indiana; Judge Stallo, of Illinois; Henry A. Tilden, of New-York; Hon. Oswald Ottendorfer, A. Oakey Hall, Senator William A. Wallace, of Pennsylvania; William M. Irwin, of California; Gen. Carrington, of Washington; Hon. William S. Groesbeck, of Ohio; Gen. Randall M. Gibson, of Louisiana; Hon. Richard Barnett, of Missouri; Hon. William G. Maun, of Georgia; Hon. William Terry, of Virginia; Hon. Frederick O. Prince, of Massachusetts; Gov. elect Colquitt, of Georgia; Hon. Charles J. Faulkner, of West Virginia; Hon. Gilbert Walker, of Virginia; Hon. John Robbins, of Pennsylvania, and Hon. John S. Preston, of South Carolina.

THE REGISTRATION IN THIS CITY.

The work of preparing the lists of those who registered on Friday and Saturday, was proceeded with all night on Sunday and during the day yesterday. Nearly all the names are now in the hands of the printers, and the work of verification will probably begin to-day. The Marshals in each election district will be furnished with a printed list of the names of all the persons registered in such district, and will make careful inquiry in regard to each person registered. In the meantime, Chief Supervisor Davenport is engaged in sifting the registry of the first two days, and is issuing warrants for the apprehension of persons who have registered illegally. Lists have been prepared of houses of ill-fame, of assignation houses, of vacant lots, lumber and coal yards, &c., in order that persons who have registered from such places may be promptly dealt with. Mr. Davenport said yesterday that from present appearances about 160,000 votes will be polled in this City. Some arrangements are now in progress for the terreting out of frauds, which, if successful, will reduce the vote 5,000 or more. What these arrangements are is kept secret, however, in order not to put guilty persons on the scent. United States District Attorney Bliss, when questioned on the subject yesterday, said that, as far as he is able to judge, only between 155,000 and 157,000 votes will be cast in this City at the coming election. It is difficult, however, to form any kind of an accurate estimate, as the verification of the registry is not complete. From other sources similar information was obtained, with this additional surmise, that the Republican vote in the City will be an unusually and even surprisingly large one. All the schemes—such as the "native dodge," or the plan of foreigners palming themselves off as natives, the bogus naturalization and repeating methods, and the introduction as voters of large numbers of Italians and other foreigners who have not resided a sufficient length of time in this City—have been guarded against, and will be checked.

ASSEMBLY NOMINATIONS.

The following Republican nominations for Assembly were made last evening in this City:

Sixth District—George Relyea.
Fourteenth District—George McKee.
Twentieth District—I. Albert Englehardt.

The following Assembly nominations were made by Tammany Hall conventions:

Seventh District—Horatio N. Twomley.
Ninth District—Andrew J. Matthewson.
Twentieth District—Joseph I. Stein.

Josiah Rolff has been renominated to the Assembly by the Republicans of New-Brunswick, N. J.

ESCAPE OF A NOTED FORGER.

Several months ago application was made to Judge Westbrook, in the Supreme Court, for the release of Thomas Cassidy, alias John C. Thomas, who was confined in the Tombs for complicity in the notorious Roberts-Gleason forgeries. Thomas had so successfully feigned serious illness that it was supposed he was at the point of death, and, under the circumstances, he was released. He quickly recovered his health, however, and turned up in Brooklyn, where he was detected in the commission of forgeries, and lodged in prison. On learning this fact, District Attorney Phelps made arrangements for the transfer of the prisoner to New-York County, and he was brought to this City yesterday by Detectives O'Connor and Field, of the District Attorney's office. Thomas was ordered to be taken back to his old quarters in the Tombs to await trial for his connection with the Roberts-Gleason gang, but while being conveyed thence escaped from the custody of Court Officer Geoghegan, and is still at large. The Police authorities have been notified, and every effort will be made to capture the fugitive.

THE CENSUS OF BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, Oct. 30.—The Police having completed the census of this city, to-day submitted to the Common Council the result in tabular form, which shows an increase of nearly ten thousand as compared with the State census of 1875. The total population now is 143,594, of which 36,794 are males over twenty-one years of age.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

A wild steer was killed last evening at the corner of Fifth avenue and Fiftieth street by Officer McGinn, of the Twenty-second Precinct.

Last night Mr. Martin F. Tupper gave recitations from his new dramatic poem "Washington," at Chickering Hall. There was a large audience.

The dead body of Mary Boyd, eighty-six years of age, was found yesterday in a shanty in Ninety-ninth street, near Second avenue. The Coroner was notified.

William Hall, a bartender at No. 135 Greene street, was last night arrested on the charge of attempting to pass a counterfeit twenty dollar bill to Henry Pearneal, of No. 101 Bleecker street.

George Wagner, Samuel Kimball, and James Wilson, pickpockets, were arrested last night on Broadway while plying their nefarious business during the passage of the Democratic procession.

The first of a course of lectures will be delivered this evening, at Columbia College Law School, No. 8 Great Jones street, by Isaac Van Winkle, Esq. Subject, "Civil Law and Roman Legislation.

All persons who have deposited money in the Bond Street Savings Bank since Sept. 6, and have left their books to be balanced and verified, will be paid in full on Nov. 2, and subsequent days, on application to the Receiver.

A grand billiard tournament will take place this evening, at St. Stephen's Church Fair, Twenty-eighth street, near Third avenue, beginning at 8 o'clock. The players are Messrs. Garnier, Daly, Rudolphe, Sexton, Slosson, and the Dion brothers.

Coroner Ellinger held an inquest yesterday in relation to the death of Frederick Dietrich, who committed suicide by hanging himself on Sunday, at No. 446 West Thirty-third street. The evidence showed that Dietrick was despondent in consequence of reduced circumstances.

A conference of the representatives of the various railroads interested in the proposed increase of the East-bound freights, will be held to-day, at which the subject will be fully discussed. Nothing new can be gleaned relative to the recent conference of the representatives of the connections of the New-York Central road.

The regular meeting of the Methodist ministers was held yesterday, Rev. J. S. Willis occupying the chair. Dr. Lord read an elaborate essay, which took the ground that all the old heathen religions, especially in their symbols and rites, unconsciously pointed to the coming of Christ and the dawn of the Christian religion.

There were no new developments yesterday in the suit of Francis B. O'Conor against the United States Life Insurance Compan. Mr. James Buell, the President, was to have been examined before Referee Jeffreys, Mr. Alexander Cameron, but, at the request of the defendants, the examination was adjourned until Wednesday next.

The funeral of George A. Lingard, the actor, took place yesterday from the residence of Dr. Cox, No. 202 East Sixteenth street. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Lightbody, of the Seventeenth Street Methodist Episcopal Church, and were attended by a large number of theatrical people and other friends. The body was interred in Cypress Hills Cemetery.

BROOKLYN.

Complaints were made yesterday against six liquor dealers, by Oliver Cotter and his aids, on charges of selling liquor on Sunday last.

Friday, Nov. 10, is the day fixed upon for the reopening of the old Grand Street Ferry, running from Grand street, New-York, to Grand street, Williamsburg.

John H. Jones, Mayor of the City of Camden, dropped dead of apoplexy Saturday. He was the oldest member in New-Jersey of the Order of American Mechanics.

The wreck of the Midland Railroad bridge at Hawthorne, through which the train fell last Friday, has been removed. A temporary structure has replaced the bridge, and the first train passed over it yesterday.

Frank Van Tilberg, a brakeman on a special Pennsylvania Railroad freight train, while adjusting the bell-rope on the locomotive, Sunday, near Camden, fell to the track. The wheels passed over him and he was instantly killed.

Mrs. Walter Cole, of Paterson, yesterday charged that her husband had declared to her that he had come all the way home from Chicago to kill her, and that on Sunday he threatened to kill her. Cole was arrested and put under $2,000 bonds to keep the peace.

Owen Finnerty, aged fourteen years, and employed in Prentice's hat factory, corner of Nostrand avenue and Stockton street, had his right arm so badly lacerated yesterday by being caught in the machinery as to render amputation at the shoulder necessary.

It was reported in Newark yesterday that extensive election frauds had been discovered in the Seventh and Twelfth Wards, and steps are being taken to prevent the repeaters from voting, and to arrest them. In the Twelfth Ward, where more than 800 votes have never been polled heretofore, the registry already exceeds 2,300, with the vote of Thursday to be added.

A fight occurred yesterday afternoon in the liquor store of Anthony Gallagher, No. 97 Baltic street, between Gallagher and Edward Rowan, residing at No. 493 Baltic street, during which Gallagher struck Rowan several blows on the head with a club, fracturing his skull. The injured man was removed to the Long Island College Hospital, and his assailant was arrested and locked up in the Third Precinct Station-house, to await the result of his injuries, which, it is feared, will prove fatal.

In the trial yesterday of Oschwald and Ryan, the burglars charged with the murder of Officer Brock at Newark, N. J., Thomas Ryan, one of the prisoners, was placed on the stand. On the direct examination he admitted that he had been arrested and imprisoned in New-York and New-Jersey a number of times for burglary and other offenses; but he denied ina the had anything to do with the killing of Officer Brock, or that he had ever been in Mr. Bedell's house, where the murder was committed. The trial will probably conclude to-morrow.

The contracts for the different classes of work on the new municipal building have been accepted by the Building Committee and signed by the contractors, and now await Mayor Schroeder's signature to go into effect. Following are the bids, as they now stand: Iron work, D. Y. Saxton, $35,034; iron anchors, D. D. Boyce, $540; carpenter work, John Fallon, $27,600; mason work, W. & T. Lamb, $60,729; marble work, J. M. Masterton, $28,200; plumbing, James Harley, $4,943. Total, $167,138. This total leaves $5,000 for the architects, $18,000 for heating, and nearly $10,000 for incidentals, such as digging the cellar, &c.

LONG ISLAND.

While Cheesman Rapelyea, of Whitestone, Long Island, was scuffling yesterday with a companion for the possession of a loaded gun it was discharged, the contents entering Rapelyea's thigh, inflicting a mortal wound.

Rev. Dr. Studzland, Pastor of the Bridgehampton Presbyterian Church, has been constrained to ask leave of absence for six month, in consequence of feeble health and a failure of his voice. Mr. William F. Whittaker has been engaged to supply the pulpit meantime, and will be ordained by the Presbytery of Long Island to-morrow evening.

Mr. John Harrold, a native of England, but for the past thirty years a resident of Hempstead, Long Island, died on Sunday morning, in the seventy first year of his age. He was highly esteemed in Hempstead, where he had been actively engaged in promoting works of usefulness. For many years he was President of the Board of Education of Hempstead.

Thomas McAloney, a coachman in the employ of Rev. Dr. Cox of Newtown, on Saturday evening visited the grocery store and liquor saloon kept by Jacob Van Glahn, in the village of Newtown, for the purpose of purchasing some tobacco. It appears that on Saturday a number of local politicians visited the place, with whom it is alleged, Van Glahn drank freely. As McAloney entered the store, Van Glahn spoke to him in a disrespectful manner, and without a word of provocation drew a pistol and taking deliberate aim, fired at McAloney, the ball crashing through his skull, and inflicting it is believed a mortal wound. Van Glahn was arrested, and will have an examination to-day. McAlsney has the reputation of being a sober, industrious man.

NEW-JERSEY.

The dead body of an infant about six months old was found in the Gowanus Canal at Third avenue and Fourth street yesterday afternoon.

Commissioner Drohan, of the Finance Board, Jersey City, has negotiated the sale of $61,000 of city water bonds at 109 and $100,000 ten-year city bonds at 106.

George Walsh, Chief Engineer of the Colgate Soap Factory in Jersey City, fell dead while at work yesterday morning. Apoplexy is the suspected cause of death.

Joseph Pulitzer will address the Germans of Hoboken in their native tongue, in Hexamer's Hall Wednesday night, in reply to Mr. Schurz, who spoke last week.

Orders have been issued by the Navy Department convening a general Naval Court Martial at the Navy-yard, in this City to-day, for the trial of Alexander A. Semmes, United States Navy, late of the United States steam-ship Alaska, and such other persons as may be brought before it. The court will be constituted as follows: Rear Admiral John J. Almy, President; Rear Admiral George H. Preble, Commodores E. T. Nichols, Andrew Bryson, and A. K. Hughes, Capts. George M. Ransom and Paul Shirley; John Bolles, Solicitor of the Navy Department, Judge Advocate.

Bayard Taylor delivered the opening lecture of the Young Men's Christian Association Course, at the Academy of Music last evening, before a large and appreciative audience. His subject was "Ancient Egypt."

Frederick Swann, aged forty years, residing on Jersey City Heights, accidentally fell overboard at Fulton Ferry last evening. He was rescued by Officer Graham, and taken to the Second Precinct Station-house, whence he was subsequently allowed to depart.

Charles Farnham, of No. 119 Hewes street, yesterday caused the arrest of John Williams, residing at No. 17 South Fifth avenue, New-York, on the charge of breaking into the unoccupied house, No. 102 South Eighth street, Eastern District, and stealing $35 worth of lead pipe and faucets.

Bids for the last issue of the bonds of Passaic City, having twenty-five years to run at seven per cent. interest, payable semi-annually, were opened by the Council on Saturday last. Mr. Zabriskie, of Jersey City, took $6,500 at 105¾, and McCarter & McCullough the balance of the $25,000 issued at 104 1-5.

John Williamson, when arrested for drunkenness yesterday in Jersey City, confessed to Capt. McKaig that he had registered both in New-York City and Brooklyn. Suspicion is entertained that his presence in Jersey City was for the purpose of participating in election frauds, and he is held for examination.

James Pierce, aged twenty-six years, residing at No. 621 Madison street had both hands so badly shattered last night, by the premature discharge of a cannon which he was loading in front of the Republican Wigwam, corner of Reid avenue and Hancock street, that it is feared amputation will be necessary.

Justice Walsh yesterday sentenced Jacob Solomon to the Penitentiary for six months, for attempting, about a week ago, to pick a lady's pocket on Fulton street. He was arrested at the time by Detective Folk, and Emily Jones, of No. 111 Flatbush avenue, identified the prisoner as the person who stood near her when her pocket-book was stolen.

Two of the four street railroad tracks which now run through Broadway, Eastern District, are now being removed, and the space occupied by them is to be surrendered to the use of carriages and trucks. The entire cost of the improvement will be about $14,000, and it is claimed that it will be of great benefit to general traffic and an advantage to the railroad companies.

THE BROOKLYN COMMON COUNCIL.

A report was received from the Committee on Public Docks and Markets by the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen yesterday, recommending that the assessments for improving Gowanus Bay be limited to the property owned by William Beard and Jeremiah P. Robinson. The report was adopted by a vote of 19 to 2. A resolution authorizing the Corporation Counsel to take such steps as may be necessary to prevent the laying of a railroad track through Lafayette avenue was passed, as was also another authorizing and requesting the Mayor to offer a reward of $500 for the arrest and conviction of any one found voting illegally for city officers at the ensuing election.
